The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BREAUX) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BREAUX).

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the bill currently before the House, H.R. 5050, would extend for 2 years the authorization of appropriations for the fisheries loan fund. As the Members recall, we revitalized this loan fund in the American Fisheries Promotion Act (AFPA) by placing foreign fishing fees collected during fiscal years 1981 and 1982 into the fund and by restricting use of the fund for loans to commercial fishermen who were suffering temporary economic difficulties. The AFPA stipulated that loans from the fund should go: First, to fishermen holding Government guaranteed loans under the title XI obligation guarantee program; second, to fishermen in danger of defaulting on mortgages not so guaranteed; and third, to fishermen experiencing net operating losses due to temporary economic downturns in a fishery.

In the past 2 years, we have extended the loan fund for 1 additional year each. In this bill, we propose to extend the fund for 2 additional years. On March 20, 1984, the subcommittee received testimony on this legislation from the National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) which administers this program. At the hearing, NMFS testified to the administration's opposition to the reauthorization of this program even though: First, it is a "user-fee" program of the type which this administration typically promotes; and second, NMFS found it necessary to borrow $18 million from the U.S. Treasury to cover defaults on title XI loan guarantees, the very loan defaults which the fisheries loan fund is designed to protect against. Instead, the administration chose to utilize the regulatory process to clamp down on the application procedures and criteria to the extent that only $1.9 million of the $10 million appropriated in fiscal year 1983 was obligated.

Ironically, the administration's rationale for this action was that "the Nation's economic recovery has reduced the need for this type of program." I submit that it is quite clear from the record that the present status of the U.S. fishing industry does not support the administration's position and that the need for this program is at least as great as it was in 1980.

Apparently, both the subcommittee and our full Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee is in agreement with my analysis as this bill was reported by unanimous voice vote on March 22 and April 4, respectively.

Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Members I would note that when the subcommittee received testimony on this legislation, and during followup discussions with NMFS, a technical aspect of the fund's enabling legislation was revealed which has restricted the implementation of this program in a manner inconsistent with the original legislative intent. Therefore, our committee adopted a minor amendment which clarifies our intent as to those situations where loans may be made to avoid the default of mortgages on used fishing vessels.

Briefly, as I noted earlier, the fisheries loan fund was revitalized and totally restructured by the American Fisheries Promotion Act in 1980. At that time, loan eligibility was restricted to either title XI guaranteed vessel mortgages or those vessel mortgages not so guaranteed but which nevertheless met the documentation and use criteria applied to title XI vessels. The vessel use criteria found in the title XI program restrict Federal obligations for the purchase of used vessels to those which: First, are reconstructed or reconditioned in the United States and which will contribute to the development of the U.S. fishing industry; or second, will be operated in an underutilized fishery. Because of these restrictions, most vessel financing for used fishing vessels have utilized nontitle XI sources, such as commercial lending institutions, which do not impose such limiting criteria.

Since the fisheries loan fund was intended by Congress to be used to avoid defaults on both title XI and nontitle XI vessels, the title XI vessel use criteria unfairly limit the eligibility of nontitle XI used vessels for loans under the fisheries loan fund. Therefore, the amendment adopted by the committee strikes the applicability of the title XI vessel use criteria to the eligibility of nontitle XI vessels for loans under the fisheries loan fund. The amendment maintains the requirement, however, that used fishing vessels be reconstructed or reconditioned in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, while I fully support this bill, I would note to the Members, however, that we do not anticipate a long-term need for full funding under this program as it is currently constituted. The subcommittee has been evaluating various means to better utilize these funds and provide a more effective delivery mechanism for financial services to the industry. In fact, I have recently introduced such legislation which will shortly be the subject of hearings before our subcommittee.

During this process, however, I firmly believe that we must insure the continued viability of this fund as a source of revenue for fisheries development needs. While I would hope that these efforts will bear fruit this year, I believe the proposed 2-year extension of the fund is necessary in light of our shortened legislative agenda during this election year. I would urge the support of the House for this bill.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5050 would extend, for 2 years, the authorization of appropriations for the fisheries loan fund. In 1981, this loan fund was restructured to place foreign fishing fees into the fund and to restrict use of the fund for loans: First, to fishermen holding Government guaranteed loans under the title XI obligation guarantee program; second, to fishermen in danger of defaulting on mortgages not guaranteed; and third, to fishermen experiencing net operating losses due to temporary economic downturns in a fishery.

Although the need for financial assistance is clear, I would like to emphasize that I do not anticipate a long-term need for full funding under this program as it is currently constituted. For the past 9 months, the subcommittee has been evaluating various means to better utilize the approximately $89 million in the fund to provide a more effective delivery mechanism for financial services to the industry. That evaluation process has now led to a proposal to create a Marine Resources Development Bank, which would have the authority to offer a wide range of financial services, including vessel, shoreside facility, and export assistance. While this concept is being considered, it is essential that the fund be maintained as a source of revenue for meeting immediate and future fisheries development needs.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 5050.

Mr. BREAUX. I would just say in conclusion I appreciate the gentleman's support, as he is well aware, and has been very active in working toward the establishment of a Marine Fisheries Resources Development Bank type approach.

I think the time is very near when we do need to look at all of the fishing programs as far as how we are providing financial assistance to the fisheries industry. I think there is a great need for consolidation and streamlining of the delivery process by which we make these programs available to the U.S. fishing industry.

Agriculture has branched off into one approach toward handling farmers and farmers' needs. I think we have to recognize that the fishing industry is a very large producer of food for the American public and we really do need to come up with a better delivery system for the economic assistance that we are going to make available to the fishing industry.

In the meantime, we do need I think to continue the programs that we already have on the books. Hopefully by the time this comes back for reauthorization we will be able to replace it with a modernized and streamlined banking type of system which will be for the benefit of everyone.

With that, I have no further requests for time, Mr. Speaker, and I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the bill we are considering is H.R. 5050, a simple extension of existing programs to provide low interest loans to fishermen for the refinancing of fishing vessels and gear and to permit the Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Marine Fisheries Service to use volunteers.

This bill will extend the authorization of appropriations for the fisheries loan fund through fiscal year 1986 as well as the purposes of the fund set forth in the American Fisheries Promotion Act. The act specifies who should receive such loans, with priority given to fishermen in danger of default on loans obtained under the title XI fisheries obligation guaranty program.

American fishermen are still struggling to make the necessary changes to take advantage of our underutilized fishery resources and to recover from recent economic problems. Since 1983, $13 million has been appropriated but only a small portion of that has actually been loaned out. During the same period, however, the National Marine Fisheries Service borrowed $18 million from the U.S. Treasury to cover defaults on the title XI loan program. It is my hope that the loan fund could prevent such future defaults and, in the long run, prevent such losses to the Treasury.

Funds for this program are derived solely from fees assessed on foreign fishermen for the privilege of fishing within our 200-mile exclusive economic zone and thus this program operates at no cost to the Federal taxpayer. The authorization covers all of the moneys now contained in the fund but the amount available will be subject to the appropriations process.

The committee also amended the act to delete the requirements that used vessels contribute to the development of the U.S. fishing industry and be operated in an underutilized fishery to be eligible for loans.

The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee reported this bill, as amended, by unanimous voice vote.

I urge my colleagues to pass H.R. 5050 because this program provides the assistance needed to aid our fishing industry in realizing its potential to harvest and process all of the fishery resources within our zone.●

● Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my support for H.R. 5050, a much-needed extension of the Fisheries Loan Fund, a program very important to the coastal counties of the 14th District of Texas. The Fisheries Loan Fund, which was established in 1956, provides low-interest loans to finance or refinance commercial fishing gear and vessels.

H.R. 5050 will go a long way toward keeping our domestic fishing industry, particularly the shrimp fishermen, afloat.

Shrimp fishing off the coast of Texas constitutes a full 28 percent of the entire U.S. harvest and brings in $170,710,000 a year. The shrimp fishery, the second most fuel-intensive fishery, has been hardest hit by today's rising fuel costs. United States shrimp fishermen have been threatened by imports from Mexico and Ecuador, which are duty-free and far more cheaply produced. The extension of the Fisheries Loan Fund will provide short-term, low-cost money to our domestic fishermen trying to keep up with this competition.

The administration opposes H.R. 5050—a decision I cannot fathom, especially since the bill uses only $150,000 of taxpayer funds to reimburse volunteers in U.S. fish and wildlife programs. In fact, the Fisheries Loan Fund is essentially a user-fee program. Fees from foreign vessels operating in U.S. waters are the sole source of capital for the fund. And, as Mr. BREAUX informed us yesterday, we do not anticipate a long-term need for full funding under this program; the Subcommittee on Fisheries has been evaluating ways to better utilize the funds and provide a better delivery mechanism for financial services to the industry.

I strongly support this legislation.●

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BREAUX) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5050, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIAN RESERVATION BOUNDARY CONFIRMATION

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4176) to confirm the boundaries of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in the State of Colorado and to define jurisdiction within such reservation, as amended.

H.R. 4176

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

CONGRESSIONAL PURPOSE

SECTION 1. The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to resolve uncertainty over the boundaries of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation and the status of unrestricted land on such reservation, and

(2) to avoid long and costly litigation over issues dependent on reservation or Indian country status.

INDIAN TRUST LAND DEFINED

SEC. 2. For purposes of this Act, the term "Indian trust land" means any land within the boundaries of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation which—

(1) is held by the United States in trust for the benefit of the Southern Ute Indian Tribe or individual Indians, or

(2) is owned by the United States and reserved for use or actually used in the administration of Indian affairs.

Any right-of-way bounded on both sides by Indian trust land shall be Indian trust land. Any other right-of-way shall not be Indian trust land.

BOUNDARIES OF THE SOUTHERN UTE INDIAN RESERVATION DEFINED

SEC. 3. The Southern Ute Indian Reservation in the State of Colorado is declared to have the following boundaries:

(1) Bounded on the north by the southern boundary of the lands—

(A) ceded to the United States by certain bands of Ute Indians under the Articles of Convention entered into on September 13, 1873, and ratified by the Act approved April 29, 1874 (18 Stat. 36), and

(B) described in article I of such Articles of Convention.

(2) Bounded on the south by the boundary line between the States of Colorado and New Mexico as described in article II of the treaty between the United States and the Ute Indians concluded March 2, 1868, and proclaimed November 6, 1868 (15 Stat. 619).

(3) Bounded on the west by the eastern boundary of the Ute Mountain Ute Indian Reservation.

(4) Bounded on the east by the southernmost 15 miles of the eastern boundary of the lands reserved to the Ute Indians by article II of the treaty between the United States and the Ute Indians concluded March 2, 1868, and proclaimed November 6, 1868 (15 Stat. 619), except that the lands east of such boundary in township 32 north, range 1 west, New Mexico principal meridian, that are held by the United States in trust for the benefit of the Southern Ute Indian Tribe are part of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation.

JURISDICTION OVER RESERVATION

SEC. 4. (a) Such territorial jurisdiction as the Southern Ute Indian Tribe has over persons other than Indians and the property of such persons shall be limited to Indian trust lands within the reservation.

(b) Any person who is not an Indian and the property of any such person shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the United States under section 1152 of title 18, United States Code, only on Indian trust land.

(c) Any law of the United States related to the sale, possession, introduction, or manufacture of alcoholic beverages or to trading with Indians within Indian country, or within the Indian reservation, shall apply, with respect to the Southern Ute Indian Reservation, only on Indian trust land.

JURISDICTION OVER INCORPORATED MUNICIPALITIES WITHIN THE RESERVATION

SEC. 5. The State of Colorado shall exercise criminal and civil jurisdiction within the boundaries of the town of Ignacio, Colorado, and any other municipality which may be incorporated under the laws of Colorado within the Southern Ute Indian Reservation, as if such State had assumed jurisdiction pursuant to the Act of August 15, 1953 (67 Stat. 588), as amended by the Act of April 11, 1968 (82 Stat. 79).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arizona (Mr. McNULTY) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. McNULTY).

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H. R. 4176, by the gentleman from Colo., (Mr. KOGOVSEK), ratifies an agreement between the Southern Ute Indian Tribe and the State of Colorado, including the involved local governments. Its purpose is to confirm the generally accepted boundaries of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation and to define and adjust the exercise of civil and criminal jurisdiction within the reservation.

In most cases, a State has no jurisdiction over crimes committed by or against Indians within the boundaries of an Indian reservation unless it has assumed jurisdiction pursuant to some Federal law. To a large extent, a State also has little civil jurisdiction over Indians within the reservation. In those cases, criminal jurisdiction is either in the United States or in the tribe itself. Most civil jurisdiction rests with the tribe.

However, where a Federal court has determined that Congress, in some prior action, has "disestablished" the boundaries of an Indian reservation, Federal and tribal jurisdiction is limited to Indian trust lands within the former boundaries of the reservation.

There have been a number of Federal court decisions in litigation between States and Indian tribes on this issue. In some cases, the tribes have won and, in some, the State has won. But this kind of litigation is long, costly, and disruptive.

The Southern Ute Indian Tribe and the State of Colorado together with the involved local governments wish to avoid this kind of litigation. Therefore, they have negotiated an agreement to resolve their jurisdictional differences and to avoid the litigation. To be effective, their agreement must be ratified and implemented by an act of Congress.

I will not go into the details of the bill. However, in brief, the tribe is agreeing to limit the jurisdiction it would have in a "nondisestablishment" situation in return for the State's support of legislation which would confirm the existing boundaries of the reservation.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is supported by all the government parties concerned, including the United States, and I do not know of any opposition. I urge passage of the bill.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4176.

The purpose of this bill is to confirm the boundaries of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado and to define jurisdiction within the reservation. By doing so, it will eliminate uncertainties that have created substantial difficulties for law enforcement personnel with respect to civil and criminal jurisdiction.

Land ownership within the original Southern Ute Reservation is a checkerboard consisting of 307,000 acres of Indian trust and federally owned land and over 300,000 acres of homesteaded and townsite lands. Uncertainty about the boundaries of the reservation as a result of allotments to Indians and the substantial non-Indian inholdings has led to uncertainty with respect to civil and criminal jurisdiction and created difficulties for law enforcement personnel. H.R. 4176 would eliminate this uncertainty by clearly defining the boundaries of the reservation and by clarifying the relative jurisdiction of the tribe, the United States and the State of Colorado.

Under the terms of the bill, the tribe and the United States would retain jurisdiction over Indians anywhere within the reservation except within the limits of incorporated municipalities where State jurisdiction would be exercised over all parties, Indian and non-Indian, as if the State had assumed criminal jurisdiction pursuant to the terms of Public Law 83-280.

Jurisdiction over non-Indians and their property within the reservation would remain with the State, except that the tribe would exercise civil jurisdiction over non-Indians on Indian trust lands and the United States would exercise criminal jurisdiction over-Indians where the non-Indian commits a crime against the person or property of an Indian on Indian trust lands.

H.R. 4176 is an example of the benefit to be gained by parties to a dispute working out their differences by negotiations rather than litigation. The bill is the product of cooperative efforts by the Ute Mountain Ute Tribe, the State of Colorado, local political and law enforcement authorities, and the Department of the Interior to resolve common problems. I am very happy to note that this legislation will advance the cause of effective law enforcement in southern Colorado without any additional cost to the taxpayer.

I would like to commend the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. KOGOVSEK) for his sponsorship and effective management of this legislation. H.R. 4176 has the support of all parties concerned, including the administration. I urge the House to pass it.

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. McNULTY) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4176, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PENNSYLVANIA WILDERNESS ACT OF 1984

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5076) to designate certain areas in the Allegheny National Forest as wilderness and recreation areas, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5076

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Pennsylvania Wilderness Act of 1984".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) there is an urgent need to identify and protect natural areas to meet the recreational needs of Americans;

(2) certain lands within the Allegheny National Forest in Pennsylvania are worthy of inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System; and

(3) certain other lands within the Allegheny National Forest are suitable for designation as a national recreational area.

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is the purpose of this Act to—

(1) establish the Allegheny Islands Wilderness and the Hickory Creek Wilderness;

(2) establish the Allegheny National Recreation Area so as to assure the preservation and protection of the area's natural, scenic, scientific, historic, archaeological, ecological, educational, watershed and wildlife values and to provide for the enhancement of recreational opportunities, particularly undeveloped recreational opportunities; and

(3) assure that any mineral exploration and development that takes place within the recreation area is down in an environmentally sound manner.

WILDERNESS DESIGNATION

SEC. 4. (a) In furtherance of the purposes of the Wilderness Act (78 Stat. 890; 16 U.S.C. 1131-1136), the following lands in the State of Pennsylvania are hereby designated as wilderness and therefore as components of the National Wilderness Preservation System:

(1) certain lands in the Allegheny National Forest, Pennsylvania, which comprise approximately three hundred and sixty-eight acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Allegheny Islands Wilderness—Proposed", dated March 1984, composed of Crulls Island, Thompsons Island, R. Thompsons Island, Courson Island, King Island, Baker Island, and No Name Island, and which shall be known as the Allegheny Islands Wilderness; and

(2) certain lands in the Allegheny National Forest, Pennsylvania, which comprise approximately nine thousand three hundred and thirty-seven acres as generally dipicted on a map entitled "Hickory Creek Wilderness—Proposed", dated March 1984, and which shall be known as the Hickory Creek Wilderness.

(b) Subject to valid existing rights, the wilderness areas designated under subsection (a) shall be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") in accordance with the provisions of the Wilderness Act governing areas designated by that Act as wilderness, except that any reference in such provisions to the effective date of the Wilderness Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the effective date of this Act.

(c) As provided in section 4(d)(8) of the Wilderness Act, nothing in this Act shall be construed as affecting the jurisdiction or responsibilities of the State of Pennsylvania with respect to wildlife and fish in Allegheny National Forest in the State of Pennsylvania.

(d)(1) The Secretary is authorized to acquire by purchase, donation, or exchange, with donated or appropriated funds, such lands or interests in lands (including oil, gas, and other mineral interests and scenic easements) within the Hickory Creek Wilderness as he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act. Such lands and interests in lands may be acquired only with the consent of the owner thereof.

(2) Not more than $2,000,000 is authorized to be appropriated for purposes of acquiring, in accordance with subsection (a), lands and interests in lands in the Hickory Creek Wilderness Area.

DESIGNATION OF NATIONAL RECREATIONAL AREA

SEC. 5. In furtherance of the findings and purposes of this Act, certain lands in the Allegheny National Forest, Pennsylvania, which comprise approximately twenty-three thousand one hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Allegheny National Recreation Area—Proposed", dated March 1984, are hereby designated as the Allegheny National Recreation Area (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "national recreation area"). Following the acquisition, under any other authority of law, of lands within or contiguous to the national recreation area, the Secretary may revise the boundaries of the national recreation area to add such acquired lands to the national recreation area.

ADMINISTRATION OF NATIONAL RECREATION AREA

SEC. 6. (a) Subject to valid existing rights, the national recreation area designated by this Act shall be administered by the Secretary in accordance with this Act and the laws, rules, and regulations applicable to the national forest system in a manner compatible with the following objectives:

(1) minimizing to the extent practicable the environmental impacts of exploration and development of privately owned oil, gas, and other minerals;

(2) maximizing opportunities for recreation including, but not limited to, hunting, fishing, hiking, backpacking, camping, nature study, and the use of boats, both motorized and nonmotorized, on the Allegheny Reservoir;

(3) protection and maintenance of fish and wildlife populations and habitat;

(4) protection of watersheds and the free flowing nature of streams; and

(5) conservation of scenic, wilderness, cultural, scientific, educational, and other values contributing to the public benefit.

Subject to valid existing rights, the utilization of natural resources in the recreation area shall be permitted only if consistent with the other provisions of this Act.

(b) To carry out the purposes of this Act, the Secretary shall prepare and publish, and may from time to time amend, a management plan, accompanied by an environmental impact statement and necessary regulations, for the national recreation area designated by this Act. The plan may be prepared in conjunction with, or incorporated with, ongoing planning for the Allegheny National Forest in accordance with the National Forest Management Act of 1976. Such plan and regulations shall include, but not be limited to—

(1) standards and guidelines for the protection and preservation of historic, archaeological, and paleontological resources in the recreation area for the public benefit and knowledge;

(2) provisions to maintain and enhance existing opportunities for recreation on Allegheny Reservoir, including opportunities for motorized and nonmotorized boat use;

(3) provisions to regulate the use of and protect the surface values of the recreation area, including provisions to control the use of motorized and mechanical equipment, and to require surface access routes which minimize damage or alteration of the surface in connection with any authorized activities on such land; and

(4) provisions governing oil, gas, and other mineral exploration and development within the recreation area, including access by road when necessary, and which ensure that—

(A) exploration, development, and transportation of oil, gas, and other mineral resources are not made economically infeasible,

(B) disturbances to the environment are minimized during all phases of exploration and development;

(C) revegetation and restoration of the surface of the land disturbed in performing exploration and development is accomplished as soon as possible after each phase of exploration and development is completed; and

(D) surface and ground water quality is fully protected in accordance with all Federal and State laws and regulations.

In preparing the comprehensive management plan, the Secretary shall provide for oral and written public participation and shall consider the views of all interested agencies, organizations, and individuals.

(c) The Secretary shall permit hunting and fishing within the boundaries of the national recreation area designated by this Act in accordance with applicable laws of the United States and the State of Pennsylvania wherein the lands and waters are located except that the Secretary may designate zones where, and establish periods when, no hunting or fishing shall be permitted for reasons for public safety, administration, or public use and enjoyment. Except in emergencies, any regulations of the Secreatry pursuant to this paragraph shall be put into effect only after consultation with the appropriate State fish and game department.

(d)(1) Subject to valid existing rights, the minerals in all Federally owned lands within the national recreation area designated by this Act are withdrawn from all forms of appropriation under the mining laws and from disposition under all laws pertaining to mineral leasing, including all laws pertaining to geothermal leasing, and all amendments thereto.

(2) Any special use permit issued by the Secretary for exploration, development, or transportation of oil, gas, or other mineral resources (or for any combination of the foregoing activities) shall require approval by the Secretary of a plan of operations (including a reclamation plan) which is consistent with the objectives set forth in subsection (a).

MAPS AND DESCRIPTIONS

SEC. 7. (a) As soon as practicable after enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall file the maps referred to in this Act, and legal descriptions of the national recreation area and the wilderness areas designated by this Act, with the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives, and the Committees on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry and Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate. Such maps and legal descriptions shall have the same force and effect as if included in this Act, except that correction of clerical and typographical errors in such maps and legal descriptions may be made. Each such map and legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the Office of the Chief of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture.

EFFECT OF RARE II

SEC. 8. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the Department of Agriculture has completed the second roadless area review and evaluation (RARE II); and

(2) the Congress has made its own review and examination of the national forest system roadless areas in the State of Pennsylvania and of the environmental impacts associated with alternative allocations of such areas.

(b) On the basis of such review, the Congress determines and directs that—

(1) without passing on the question of the legal and factual sufficiency of the RARE II final environmental statement (dated January 1979) with respect to national forest system lands in States other than Pennsylvania, such statement shall not be subject to judicial review with respect to national forest system lands in the State of Pennsylvania;

(2) with respect to the national forest system lands in the State of Pennsylvania which were reviewed by the Department of Agriculture in RARE II, that review and evaluation shall be deemed for the purposes of the initial land management plans required for such lands by the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974 as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976 to be an adequate consideration of the suitability of such lands for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System and the Department of Agriculture shall not be required to review the wilderness option prior to the revision of the initial plans and in no case prior to the date established by law for completion of the initial planning cycle;

(3) areas in the State of Pennsylvania reviewed in such final environmental statement and not designated as wilderness by this Act need not be managed for the purpose of protecting their suitability for wilderness designation pending revision of the initial plans; and

(4) unless expressly authorized by Congress, the Department of Agriculture shall not conduct any further statewide roadless area review and evaluation of national forest system lands in the State of Pennsylvania for the purpose of determining their suitability for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System.

BUFFER ZONES

SEC. 9. The Congress does not intend that the designation of a wildernes area under this Act leads to the creation of protective perimeters or buffer zones around such wilderness area. The fact that nonwilderness activities or uses can be seen or heard from areas within a wilderness shall not preclude such activities or uses up to the boundary of the wilderness area.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am especially pleased to bring this legislation before the House today, because it represents the culmination of 5 years of efforts on the part of myself, Congressman KOSTMAYER and Congressman CLINGER, and others, to reach a compromise that will be acceptable to the major interest groups concerned. H.R. 5076, as amended, will establish a 9,700-acre Hickory Creek Wilderness in the Allegheny National Forest in northwest Pennsylvania. I was fortunate to be able to visit this area in the spring of 1979, and was very impressed with its forested ridges, and the absolutely lovely open meadowlands along the bottom of Hickory Creek. The area's gentle terrain and meandering stream makes it ideal for family oriented recreation such as camping and day hikes. I am also interested in the area because it would be one of the few national wilderness areas that lies within a day's drive of my constituents in Akron, and is heavily used by them for primitive recreation.

In addition to the wilderness, the bill designates a 23,100-acre national recreation area along the Allegheny Reservoir and River. The NRA will be composed of three roadless areas on existing national forest lands which are popular for primitive recreation but which cannot reasonably be designated as wilderness at this time because their subsurface rights are privately owned and likely to be utilized for oil and gas exploration in the near future. The NRA designation will protect the surface, insofar as is possible consistent with mineral exploration and development, and will direct the Forest Service to manage the area to promote the combined water/land recreational resource.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe H.R. 5076, as amended by the substitute adopted by the subcommittee, is a consensus bill which deserves our strong support. I would particularly like to commend Congressmen KOSTMAYER and CLINGER for their patience and diligence in pursuing the matter and in working out this consensus legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KOSTMAYER).

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I want first to commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING), a member of the Interior Committee since he came to the Congress in 1971.

For the last 7 years, Mr. SEIBERLING has chaired the Subcommittee on Public Lands and National Parks in a fashion and with zeal rivaled only by the late Phillip Burton of California.

Under his leadership, the subcommittee, the full committee, and the House itself, have passed 10 pieces of separate legislation creating over 6 million acres of wilderness in this Congress.

There is simply no way, Mr. Speaker, to put a price tag on that small portion of the American wilderness saved only by such acts of Congress as we consider today.

For those of us in the East, Mr. Speaker, the legislation now before us is especially precious.

For against the rampage of growth that threatens to smother any visible sign of what this region must have once looked like, this bill saves so little.

In 1979, I introduced H.R. 5488 to create a wilderness area of 33,000 acres, the only one in Pennsylvania and one of only three in the Northeast.

Today, that bill, the product of congressional compromise, reintroduced as H.R. 5076 on March 8, 1984, sets aside just under 10,000 acres, the remaining 23,000 to be preserved in a somewhat less stringent manner as a national recreation area.

Fashioned by my distinguished colleague, Mr. CLINGER of Pennsylvania, and me, this compromise proposal is for me still too modest.

This proposal for a national wilderness area in Pennsylvania enjoys the bipartisan support of Pennsylvania's entire congressional delegation in the House and in the other body.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud that my colleagues on both sides of the Capitol and on both sides of the aisle are cosponsoring this measure which will serve more than 92 million of our countrymen.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5076.

I would especially like to thank Congressmen CLINGER and KOSTMAYER for their work in coming up with a solution that is more acceptable to me as the ranking member of the committee than the original proposal as introduced.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5076 will designate two areas in Pennsylvania as wilderness totaling 9,700 acres and creates a 23,000-acre national recreation area.

This may seem like a very small area but let me assure my colleagues it was not an easy compromise to arrive at. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. CLINGER) spent several years working with the various groups to draft a consensus bill and I commend him for his diligence. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KOSTMAYER) also contributed to the process and his efforts should be recognized.

The Allegheny National Forest, like much of the Federal land in the East, is acquired land. As a result, the ownership patterns are scattered and almost all of the subsurface mineral rights of the proposed areas remain in private ownership and are likely to be developed for their oil and gas potential.

The recreation area concept was proposed as a means of allowing for mineral development but also to recognize the importance of the area for recreation. The mineral rights underlaying the one large wilderness area in the bill—known as Hickory Creek—are being purchased by a local conservancy group for conveyance to the Federal Government. They will not be developed. The bill authorizes the appropriation of no more than $2 million for the eventual purchase of these rights.

My colleagues should be aware of the fact that the administration does not support all aspects of the bill. While they support the designation of the wilderness areas and the acquisition of the mineral rights, they do not support the designation of the recreation area. The Forest Service views it as an unnecessary third system which could be best handled under their existing management authority. While I may agree with their position, it should be recognized that the NRA is a compromise which attempts to address all the concerns involved.

The administration also supports stronger release language for lands not designated a wilderness. I am hopeful that this issue will be worked out for all RARE II wilderness bills before the end of the year.

I intend to support this legislation as a compromise and urge my colleagues to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. CLINGER).

Mr. CLINGER. I thank the gentleman from Alaska for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, as the elected Representative of the four counties that include the only national forest in Pennsylvannia, I have a particular interest in Federal legislation affecting my constituents. The boundaries of the Allegheny National Forest include 750,000 acres of natural black cherry, oak, ash, and other commercial hardwoods that are used in fine furniture, both domestically and abroad. Oil and gas wells on the forest produce high-viscosity, low-sulfur crude oil that is primarily refined into lubricants for the motoring public. Deerherds abound, with wild turkey, bear and elk species making a comeback. The Kinzua Dam, which hold back the Allegheny Reservoir, acts as a flood control project north of Pittsburgh. These benefits are shared by many who wish to pass this legacy and heritage on to future generations.

I wish to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) for his patience while this lengthy process took place. You have been most helpful in clarifying and assuring me over the concerns raised by the people of Pennsylvania over the intent of the legislation.

Moreover, the entire Pennsylvania delegation has cosponsored H.R. 5076 and both the senior and junior Members of the other body have introduced companion legislation (S. 2551) that is identical to H.R. 5076. The expeditious treatment by the House Interior Committee enhances the likelihood of enactment into law in the short time period that remains in the 98th Congress.

Let me also take this opportunity to express my appreciation to my colleagues from the Pennsylvania delegation (Mr. KOSTMAYER and Mr. MURPHY) who serve on the Interior Committee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KOSTMAYER) was especially helpful in coordinating the views and positions of major environmental groups. I realize that for both Members, this bill falls short of their desires for larger wilderness acreage designations. If I had a free hand in drafting the bill, it would contain smaller areas. No one who has worked closely on the bill is entirely pleased with its results, the test of any good compromise.

I have studied this issue for 6 years and I can tell you that this bill is neither a complete victory nor defeat for one special interest. The proposal is fair, feasible, and realistic.

The Pennsylvania Wilderness Act provides for two land-use designations of various areas in the Allegheny National Forest, based upon the surveys of potential wilderness areas in the roadless area review and evaluation II (RARE II). The act designates seven islands on the Allegheny River as the Allegheny Islands Wilderness (363 acres) and a much larger plateau section of northern hardwoods called the Hickory Creek Wilderness Area (9,337 acres). The bill also creates an Allegheny National Recreation Area (23,100 acres) which is comprised for areas identified, and generally depicted in RARE II, as Cornplanter, Tracy Ridge and Allegheny Front. The northern part of the Allegheny Reservoir in the Allegheny National Forest is also included in the National Recreation Area.

Special provisions have been drafted into the legislation to deal with the problem of oil, gas and mineral (OGM) rights beneath RARE II areas by private owners. The problem of ownership by split estates is not unique to the Allegheny National Forest; many national forest were first established in the Eastern United States by the acquisition of only surface rights by the Federal Government. Because wilderness, by its very definition, is an area "substantially untouched by mankind," there should be reasonable assurances that a wilderness designation will protect these values now and in the foreseeable future.

One of the major misconceptions about the Pennsylvania Wilderness Act is that the bill would open forest areas to oil and gas drilling for the first time. Private individuals and firms own around 98 percent of the subsurface mineral rights in the Allegheny National Forest. It is their inherent fifth amendment right that "No person shall . . . be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation." The Federal Government cannot block oil and gas development by private concerns throughout most of the Allegheny National Forest.

Few people realize that oil and gas drilling has taken place throughout the region, and including the Allegheny National Forest, for over 125 years. The first oil well in the world was discovered just a few miles from the forest boundary. Some of these wells have produced oil and gas for 50 years or more.

Under this bill, the Secretary of Agriculture would be empowered to exercise stricter control over oil and gas operations in the designated areas. The new rules and regulatory authority could result in higher costs in the exploration of oil and gas resources. However, the Secretary could not impose such onerous requirements that oil and gas development is economically infeasible and therefore, a violation of the fifth amendment rights of private subsurface mineral holdings.

The bill authorizes a modest sum, $2 million, to acquire the OGM rights beneath Hickory Creek. All subsurface rights beneath the Allegheny Islands are already owned by the Federal Government. Consolidating the split ownership of both the surface and subsurface rights will greatly alleviate the burdens upon the Forest Service in administering Hickory Creek in accordance with the objectives and purpose of the Wilderness Act.

Other RARE II areas have been touted for wilderness designation in the past. However, sufficient revenues are not available to purchase OGM rights with the consent of the owners. This legislation proposes an alternative land use designation for three areas surveyed under RARE II and part of the Allegheny Reservoir by the establishment of an Allegheny National Recreation Area.

The Secretary of Agriculture is directed to formulate management plans for the Allegheny National Recreation Area that maximize recreation opportunities and protect fish, wildlife, and water quality values. At the same time, oil and gas exploration and development may take place in a manner that is consistent with the preservation of recreational values.

The committee report addresses two concerns that were brought to my attention by my constituents. The first concern involves timber management and recovery on wilderness areas and NRA's. It is my understanding that the Wilderness Act permits timber recovery in the case of insects, disease, and forest fires. NRA designation permits even broader forestry practices in that current statutory laws and regulations governing recoverable resources apply to timber management. The second concern is trapping. The bill permits trapping in wilderness areas and the Allegheny National Recreation Area when in accordance with State fish and wildlife rules and regulations.

Many wilderness bills have not been enacted into law in this Congress because the two bodies have differed over the release language provision. The Pennsylvania Wilderness Act, as introduced, did not address this particular question but left its resolution to the respective committees of the House and Senate. The legislation, as introduced, was sufficiently perfected to meet the concerns of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania without further delay over the release language question. Prompt passage of the Pennsylvania Wilderness Act is necessary if the long-term management of the Allegheny National Forest is to continue without serious ramifications, because of delays over congressional inaction.

This bill was amended in committee to include "soft release" language that gives greater certainty over when the Forest Service and the Congress can consider future areas for wilderness designation. I reluctantly accept the committee's decision because coherent and comprehensive forest management planning requires a degree of certainty today, and in order to avoid serious and undesirable consequences in the future. The only other alternative was the status quo—and that is unacceptable. Enactment of H.R. 5076 will provide this critical certainty and I urge my colleagues to support the passage of this bill.

● Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to lend my support for this legislation to add two areas of approximately 9,705 acres in the Allegheny National Forest to the national wilderness preservation system.

This land was originally recommended for inclusion in the Nation's wilderness lands following the RARE II study in 1979. The area faced problems with designation, however, because of the oil, gas, and mineral resources in the area.

My congratulations go to the area's Congressman, WILLIAM CLINGER, the Western Pennsylvania Conservancy, and Chairman MORRIS UDALL and the House Interior Committee for working diligently to produce an equitable compromise that preserves wilderness areas and resolves the mineral questions. I was pleased to join as a cosponsor of this legislation.

Specifically, the bill will:

Designate a 9,337-acre Hickory Creek Wilderness Area that is ecologically diverse and very popular for recreation. The area covers much of the watershed of East and Middle Hickory Creeks and Jack's Run, and is heavily forested. Hiking and camping opportunities in the area are outstanding, as are the natural habitat areas.

Also designated for wilderness preservation is a 363-acre site consisting of seven islands in the Allegheny River which contain several species of plants that are rare. Otter and eagles winter on the islands and osprey stop during spring and fall migration. This bill will insure these wilderness values are preserved.

And the legislation establishes a 23,100 acre Allegheny National Recreation Area consisting of the Tracy Ridge, Cornplanter, and Allegheny Front roadless areas. This designation would allow the area to be managed to preserve the status quo and allow construction of new trails, campgrounds and facilities. If the oil and gas exploration questions can be answered for this area, then it, too, would be eligible for wilderness designation in the future.

This designation can be particularly important because of its closeness to the major population centers of the Northeast and we hope it will open wilderness area exploration to thousands of people who otherwise might never have the opportunity. The bill strikes the proper kind of balance I have long urged between our energy needs and our need to protect and preserve valuable land areas.

I am glad to support this bill as an important step forward in wilderness preservation.●

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5076, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

TENNESSEE WILDERNESS ACT OF 1984

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4263) to designate certain lands in the Cherokee National Forest, Tenn., as wilderness areas, and to allow management of certain lands for uses other than wilderness, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R 4263

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Tennessee Wilderness Act of 1984".

SEC. 2. (a) In furtherance of the purposes of the Wilderness Act (78 Stat. 890; 16 U.S.C. 1131-1136), the following lands are designated as wilderness and, therefore, as components of the National Wilderness Preservation System:

(1) certain lands in the Cherokee National Forest, Tennessee, which comprise approximately five thousand and fifty-five acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Big Frog Wilderness—Proposed", dated April 1984, and which shall be known as the Big Frog Wilderness;

(2) certain lands in the Cherokee National Forest, Tennessee, which comprise approximately sixteen thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Citico Creek Wilderness—Proposed", dated April 1984, and which shall be known as the Citico Creek Wilderness;

(3) certain lands in the Cherokee National Forest, Tennessee, which comprise approximately three thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Bald River Gorge Wilderness (proposed)"; dated April 1984, and which shall be known as the Bald River Gorge Wilderness.

(b) Subject to valid existing rights, each wilderness area designated by subsection (a) shall be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture (in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") in accordance with the provisions of the Wilderness Act governing areas designated by that Act as wilderness areas, except that any reference in such provisons to the effective date of the Wilderness Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) As soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a map and legal description of each wilderness area designated by subsection (a) to the Committees on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry and Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and the Committees on Agriculture and Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives. Such map and legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this Act, except that any clerical or typographical error in such map or legal description may be corrected. The Secretary shall place such map and legal description on file, and make them available for public inspection, in the Office of the Chief of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture.

SEC. 3. (a) In furtherance of the purposes of the Wilderness Act, the following lands shall be reviewed by the Secretary of Agriculture as to their suitability for preservation as wilderness during preparation of the initial land management plan for the Cherokee National Forest pursuant to section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended—

(1) certain lands in the Cherokee National Forest, which comprise approximately four thousand eight hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Little Frog Wilderness Study Area—Proposed", dated April 1984, and which shall be known as the Little Frog Wilderness Study Area;

(2) certain lands in the Cherokee National Forest which comprise approximately three thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Big Frog Study Area", dated April 1984.

(b) Subject to valid existing rights, the Little Frog Wilderness Study Area designated by this section shall, until Congress determines otherwise, be administered by the Secretary so as to maintain its presently existing wilderness character and potential for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System.

SEC. 4. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the Department of Agriculture has completed the second Roadless Area Review and Evaluation program (RARE II); and

(2) the Congress has made its own review and examination of national forest system roadless areas in Monroe and Polk Counties, Tennessee, and of the environmental impacts associated with alternative allocations of such areas.

(b) On the basis of such review, the Congress hereby determines and directs that—

(1) without passing on the question of the legal and factual sufficiency of the RARE II final environmental statement (dated January 1979) with respect to national forest system lands other than in Monroe and Polk Counties, Tennessee, such statement shall not be subject to judicial review with respect to national forest system lands in Monroe and Polk Counties, Tennessee;

(2) with respect to the national forest system land in Monroe and Polk Counties, Tennessee, which were reviewed by the Department of Agriculture in the second Roadless Area Review and Evaluation (RARE II), except those lands designated as wilderness or for wilderness study by this Act, that review and evaluation shall be deemed for the purposes of the initial land management plans required for such lands by the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974 as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976 to be an adequate consideration of the suitability of such lands for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System and the Department of Agriculture shall not be required to review the wilderness option prior to the revision of the initial plans and in no case prior to the date established by law for completion of the initial planning cycle;

(3) areas in Monroe and Polk Counties, Tennessee, reviewed in such final environmental statement and not designated as wilderness or for wilderness study by this Act need not be managed for the purpose of protecting their suitability for wilderness designation pending revision of the initial plans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4263, the Tennessee Wilderness Act of 1984. This legislation was introduced by our colleague, JOHN DUNCAN, and covers lands in his congressional district only. Other wilderness candidate lands in Tennessee will presumably be addressed in future legislation.

In recognition of their superlative natural and recreational values, two of the wilderness proposals of H.R. 4263 were designated as wilderness study areas by Congress in 1975. The Forest Service has completed the studies, and the administration supports all the wilderness proposals of the bill. The largest area, the proposed 16,000 acre Citico Creek Wilderness, is most exceptional. Lying adjacent to the existing 15,000 acre Joyce Kilmer-Slickrock Wilderness in North Carolina, Citico Creek is known for its magnificent stands of virgin timber and cascading waterfalls. One of these falls reaches 70 to 80 feet in height, and several others are in excess of 40 feet. The falls and other natural wonders of the area are accessed by an excellent system of trails, including a portion of the soon to be completed long-distance Benton MacKaye trail, which will pass along the ridge which forms the Tennessee-North Carolina border and the boundary between Citico Creek and the Joyce Kilmer-Slickrock Wilderness. The area has also been designated a black bear reserve by the State of Tennessee in order to protect its thriving population of these animals.

The other wilderness and wilderness study area proposals of H.R. 4263 reflect similar natural values. All the areas are popular with hunters, fishermen, hikers, and other sportsmen, and are especially significant in that they lie within a 2-hour drive of major population centers in Knoxville and Chattanooga.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I believe H.R. 4263 is meritorious legislation which deserves our strong support. I am aware of no opposition to the bill, and urge its approval.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4263, the Tennessee wilderness bill.

The bill will designate three national forest wilderness areas in the congressional district of my colleague from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) totaling 24,665 acres. It is my understanding that he worked for some time with the local groups to arrive at a concensus. At the same time, he has the general support of the administration. You must be doing something right.

The administration does not, of course, agree with the so-called release language in the bill and will continue to press for a longer time before we have to reopen the wilderness question in each national forest. I agree with their position and am hopeful some modifications of the release formula can be worked out.

In the meantime, however, I believe it is appropriate to continue to process the wilderness bills and resolve as many of the other issues as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN).

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill creates three wilderness areas in the southern portion of the Cherokee National Forest within my district. Two of these wilderness areas are in Monroe County, the third is in Polk County. H.R. 4263 also has been amended in accordance with the recommendation of the Forest Service to make Little Frog Mountain in Polk County a wilderness study area.

I believe this bill represents a compromise between the environmental groups who have sought wilderness in the Cherokee National Forest, and the citizens who live in the surrounding communities. The original requests by the environmental groups have been pared back significantly so that these wilderness areas will not interfere with roads in use, timber operations, or development. The Forest Service has been very helpful in this process in identifying those areas which would be suitable for wilderness as well as those where wilderness was clearly not warranted. I would especially like to thank Forest Supervisor Donald Rollens for his assistance in making this legislation fair to all parties. H.R. 4263 would place 24,965 acres in wilderness. This amounts to only 8 percent of the total 298,526 acres in the southern Cherokees. Citico Creek and Bald River Gorge Wilderness areas would be in Monroe County while Big Frog Mountain Wilderness is in Polk County. Citico Creek is the largest of the wilderness areas with 16,000 acres. It meets the Slickrock-Joyce Kilmer Wilderness at the North Carolina border to create a continuous wilderness area. The area is noted for its waterfalls, and rainbow and brook trout streams. It has been drawn so that it will not affect the completion of the Tellico Plains-Robbinsville Road which runs along its southern boundary.

Bald River Gorge, which contains 3,887 acres, was recommended for wilderness designation during RARE II. The wilderness area will include the famous Bald River Falls. A trial follows the Bald River through this gorge which is forested with mature timber. Big Frog Mountain, in Polk County, will have 5,055 acres. The Forest Service indicates that the mountain is the most prominent land form in the surrounding area. It is a favorite hiking area for visitors. Both Citico Creek and Big Frog Mountain were studied by the Forest Service and have been recommended as wilderness candidates by the regional and local offices. The Forest Service will also be able to study the area east of the wilderness for possible inclusion if suitable. As I mentioned, this bill is the product of compromise. During the RARE II evaluation there was a great deal of opposition to wilderness. This compromise has been reached to end the dispute over which areas should be made wilderness and which should be developed. Many of the people of this region rely on the timber industry for jobs. I believe this bill will resolve many of the questions which have been hanging over the status of this land in the Cherokee. It is my hope that it will settle this matter once and for all. Unless this bill is passed by the House and Senate, the Forest Service will begin to restudy these and other areas of the forest. A restudy would create more problems and leave the status of these lands in jeopardy for the future. I believe it would be better to set these lands aside now, so that we can begin planning and working for the future.

● Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I would like briefly to discuss a matter of jurisdictional interest to the Committee on Agriculture relating to H.R. 4263, the Tennessee Wilderness Act of 1984, and H.R. 5076, the Pennsylvania Wilderness Act of 1984.

These bills have been referred jointly to the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. The bills involve what are referred to as "Eastern" forests and they contain so-called release/sufficiency language which relates to the management of areas in the national forests which are not designated as wilderness. In order to expedite consideration of these bills, the Committee on Agriculture does not object to their being taken up on the floor of the House without consideration by the committee. This position is taken without, in any respect, waiving jurisdiction of the Committee on Agriculture with regard to these bills or to similar provisions in other bills. If the provisions of H.R. 4263 and H.R. 5076 should become an issue with the Senate—in the event that the bills pass the House—I intend to request that the committee be represented in any conference which may be held.

I appreciate this opportunity to make clear the jurisdictional interest of the Committee on Agriculture in these bills.●

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4263, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

PERMITTING SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR TO ACQUIRE TITLE TO McCLINTOCK HOUSE, WATERLOO, NY

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4596) to amend section 1601(d) of Public Law 96-607 to permit the Secretary of the Interior to acquire title in fee simple to McClintock House at 16 East Williams Street, Waterloo, NY, as amended.

H.R. 4596

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1601(c) of Public Law 96-607 (16 U.S.C. 410ll(c)) is amended by striking paragraph "(8)" and inserting the following:

"(8) McClintock House and related structures, 14 and 16 East Williams Street, Waterloo; and".

(b) Section 1601(d) is amended by striking out the word "through" and inserting the word "and" in lieu thereof; and by adding at the end of the subsection the following: "Within two years of the acquisition of the property listed in subsection (c)(8) the Secretary shall have removed all structures from the property that are not relevant to the historic integrity of the McClintock House.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4596 is needed to carry out the intent of Congress in establishing the Women's Rights National Historic Park in and around Seneca Falls, NY. The bill was introduced by our colleague from New York, Mr. HORTON.

Mr. Speaker, when the original legislation creating the Women's Rights National Historic Park was enacted in the 96th Congress, the McClintock House was designated as one of the structures which should have been included in the park. However, the Secretary of the Interior was not authorized to acquire the fee simple title to property because the house was then owned and used by a church, so there were some questions of the propriety of including it in legislation. Since the church has now offered the property for sale, those questions have been resolved and it is now appropriate to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to purchase the McClintock House.

As reported, the bill does two things. First, it clarifies the fact that the McClintock House and related church are located on two lots rather than one as had originally been believed. Second, since the church is not of the same historical era and is in serious disrepair, the bill would require the Secretary of the Interior to remove this structure within 2 years of authorization.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is needed now to properly continue the work begun in earlier years. I urge its enactment.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4596, a bill to authorize the acquisition of the McClintock House in Waterloo, NY, for inclusion within the Women's Rights National Historic Park.

In the 96th Congress, the Women's Rights National Historic Park was authorized in recognition of the historic significance of this area to the early women's movement in the United States. At the time of passage, one of the most important historical structures was not authorized to be acquired, because it was owned by a local church congregation, and Congress felt it inappropriate to acquire the property owing to possible church-state conflicts. Because of the leadership provided on this issue by Hon. FRANK HORTON of New York, it was brought to our attention that the church has now moved, and is willing to sell the property so as to round out the park. By enacting this legislation, Congress will include the property in which Susan B. Anthony, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, and other leaders of the early women's movement met to draft the famous "Declaration of Sentiments." Congressman HORTON has rightly concluded that the national historic park requires the addition of this property in order to accurately reflect the purposes for which the park was established—to honor the women who, through their hard work against all odds, brought the extension of voting rights to women into being. And, due to FRANK HORTON'S foresight and the fact that restoration at the park is running close to budget, the money is already appropriated, and the $35,000 to $50,000 it will cost to acquire the property is already budgeted. I urge the Members to let us finish the job we started in the 96th Congress here today, and suspend the rules to pass this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my good friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. HORTON).

Mr. HORTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING), for the courtesies that he extended to me and also for the expeditious manner in which he has handled this bill. It has been moved very quickly, and I think it is very important that it be moved very quickly.

I also want to take this opportunity to thank the ranking minority member of the committee, the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), for his assistance and help and his advice in bringing this bill to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, today we are considering H.R. 4596, a bill to allow the Secretary of Interior to acquire the McClintock House in Waterloo, NY. The McClintock House is a historic landmark and a designated part of the Women's Rights National Historical Park.

The Women's Rights National Historical Park was established in 1980 as a reminder of the many trials and triumphs of the founders of the Women's Rights Movement. Four houses and the Wesleyan Chapel in Seneca Falls and Waterloo, NY., were designated as the core elements of the park because of the unique role which this area in upstate New York played in the long struggle for equal rights for women.

Last year, we approved a $500,000 appropriation for the acquisition of property previously designated as part of the Women's Rights National Historical Park. At that time, I had the privilege of addressing this body to discuss the most famous of these sites, the Wesleyan Chapel, which was where the first National Women's Rights Convention was held in 1848. At that convention, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Susan B. Anthony, and other leaders of the early movement introduced the "Declaration of Sentiments." This document, modeled after the Declaration of Independence, is now recognized as one of the 50 most important documents in American history.

The Declaration of Sentiments, contained 12 resolutions, 11 of which were passed unanimously by the 300 convention participants. I think that you would agree that it was the twelfth resolution, which was offered by Elizabeth Cady Stanton and which only narrowly passed, that has had the greatest impact upon our Nation, and, indeed, this institution. I would like to share this resolution with you now:

Resolved, That it is the sacred duty of the women of this country to secure for themselves the sacred right to the elective franchise.

With these words, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and others embarked upon one of the most important political sojourns in our history—the long and hard quest for equal rights for women.

The McClintock House was designated part of the Women's Rights National Historical Park because it shared in this important moment in American history. Here, at the home of Mary Ann McClintock, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Martha Wright, Lucretia Mott, and Susan B. Anthony gathered to draft the Declaration of Sentiments. Those of you who have visited the Museum of American History in the Smithsonian Institute, possibly noticed a wooden table preserved for its historic importance to the Women's Rights Movement. This was the very table at which these women sat as they planned the early movement and drafted this historic declaration.

As I mentioned earlier, the purpose of this legislation is to amend Public Law 96-607 to allow the Secretary of the Interior to acquire and preserve the McClintock House in a manner consistent with the historical significance of this building. The authority for acquisition of this property was withheld at the time the original bill was drafted because the Waterloo Baptist Church, which owned and used the property, wished to continue its use. Legislators drafting the bill were concerned that acquisition authority might raise the specter of church-state conflict. The Parish of the Waterloo Baptist Church, whose meeting hall adjoins the McClintock House, moved in 1981 and put the property up for sale.

The problems associated with the acquisition of the house, while important at the time, are no longer relevant. H.R. 4596 has the full support of the Parish and pastor of the Waterloo Baptist Church.

I also believe that you should know of the unanimous support which this legislation enjoys. H.R. 4596 is supported by the citizens of Seneca Falls, and Waterloo, the mayors of Seneca Falls and Waterloo, the Seneca County Board of Supervisors, and the New York Congressional Delegation. Senators D'AMATO and MOYNIHAN have introduced identical legislation in the Senate.

The McClintock House, and, indeed, the entire Women's Rights National Historical Park provide outstanding examples of the progress which can be made when a local community and the Federal Government work together to preserve and promote a historic landmark. You will be interested to know that through the prudent administration of the $500,000 we approved last year for property acquisition, the park retained enough money to cover the costs of the purchase of the McClintock house.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to discuss this legislation. I will continue to update you on the progress of this remarkable 4-year-old park and urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this important bill.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. CRAIG).

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself today with the remarks of my colleague, the gentleman from New York, in support of H.R. 4596. Not only does this legislation represent an ongoing effort to preserve the Women's Rights National Historical Park, but I think that this is an opportunity that has some real uniqueness to it. I say that as a Westerner, because, as is true here in the East and along the eastern seaboard, there is an opportunity to preserve historical sites that were built of some substance in the beginning that we in the West are oftentimes not afforded. I say that because much of our early heritage was built around mining camps and boom camps which were quickly constructed and oftentimes quickly destroyed.

Traveling on the east coast as a young person, one thing that was striking to me was that a society, a culture, existed here for centuries before we began to explore and develop the West. As a result, we are now able to preserve major portions of that history, not only for the heritage that they represent, but to pass on a glimpse to future generations of that heritage by the structures in which those major historical activities occurred.

I stand in strong support of this legislation.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4596, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

PROVIDING CERTAIN AUTHORITY TO REDUCE EROSION WITHIN THE CUYAHOGA VALLEY NATIONAL RECREATION AREA

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3739) to provide certain authority to reduce erosion within the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area, as amemded.

H.R. 3739

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 4(c) of the Act of December 27, 1974 (88 Stat. 1784; 16 U.S.C. 460ff-3(c)) is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(c)" and by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(2) The Secretary is authorized and directed, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, the State of Ohio, and affected local governments, to undertake a program of land treatment for the purpose of restoring suitable vegetative cover to substantially eliminate erosion from all lands, public and private, within the authorized boundaries of the recreation area. In the case of any private lands, within such authorized boundaries such treatment may be undertaken only with the consent of the owner thereof and shall be contingent upon assurances that such land treatment will be maintained by the owner for a period of not less than ten years. The Secretary shall, in conjunction with such program, take such actions as may be required to correct areas of ecological degradation which create hazards to health and safety.".

(b) Section 6 of such Act (16 U.S.C. 460ff-5) is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(c) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated not more than $500,000 for fiscal year 1985, $1,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, $1,500,000 for fiscal year 1987, and $1,750,000 for fiscal year 1988, to carry out the provisions of section 4(c)(2) of this Act. Any amounts authorized to be appropriated for any fiscal year under this subsection which are not appropriated for that fiscal year shall remain available for appropriation in succeeding fiscal years.".

SEC. 2. Section 3 of the Act entitled, "An Act to authorize certain additions to the Sitka National Monument in the State of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved October 8, 1972 (86 Stat. 904), as amended by section 101, paragraph (23), of the Act of November 10, 1978 (92 Stat. 3472) is further amended by striking out "$1,571,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "such sums as may be necessary, but not to exceed $4,000,000".

SEC. 3. No authority under this Act to enter into contracts or to make payments shall be effective except to the extent and in such amounts as provided in advance in appropriations Acts. Any provision of this Act which, directly or indirectly, authorizes the enactment of new budget authority shall be effective only for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1984.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 3739 is to provide authority to the Secretary of the Interior to undertake erosion control and to correct public health hazards on all lands within the boundary of the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area, Ohio, and to increase the development ceiling for Sitka National Historical Park, Alaska.

I might say that this bill in itself is an historic bill because the two principal proponents of it are the gentleman from Alaska and myself, and it does something for both States. I think that the coming together of Ohio and Alaska is a very auspicious development.

H.R. 3739 was introduced for myself and Mr. FEIGHAN on August 2, 1983. The Subcommittee on Public Lands and National Parks held a hearing and considered the bill on April 5, 1984. The bill, as amended, was ordered reported by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs on April 11, 1984.

The Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area has 32,460 acres within its boundaries, of which 14,492 acres are federally owned, about 9,920 acres are private lands and the remainder owned by non-Federal public agencies.

The problem of erosion from lands within the Cuyahoga River drainage and the resultant sediment that is deposited in Cleveland Harbor (deposited from the Cuyahoga River), has been studied at length by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. The corps currently dredges Cleveland Harbor at a cost of about $4 million per year.

H.R. 3739 would provide authority and authorization for Federal funding to accomplish upland erosion protection within the CVNRA, resulting in needed protection for federally owned lands in the recreation area and ultimate savings to the Corps of Engineers of about $1 million per year. The bill provides that consent of the owner is required before any work is initiated on privately owned lands. The bill authorizes appropriations for a 4-year program from fiscal year 1985 through fiscal year 1988.

Section 2 of the bill provides for an increase in the development ceiling for the Sitka National Historical Park. The Sitka National Historical Park, located in Sitka, Alaska, was established as a national monument, by proclamation, in 1910. A legislative boundary was established and the area was renamed by the Congress in 1972. The additional authorization would be for the primary purpose of stabilizing the foundations, and completing the renovation of the Russian Bishop House. This structure, which is the focal point for the park, was the home of the Russian bishop assigned to Russian Alaska, prior to its sale to the United States.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of suspension of the rules for consideration of the bill (H.R. 3739), "To provide authority to reduce erosion within the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area."

Title I of the legislation grants the National Park Service authority to take needed actions to reduce erosion on both federally owned lands and private lands in the Cuyahoga National Recreation Area. Of the some 33,000 acres in the park, about 13,000 acres are federally owned. This authorizes the Park Service to control erosion on Federal lands and the private lands of those individuals who agree to the control program.

The need for this legislation stems from the fact that large amounts of sediment caused by erosion within the Cuyahoga River drainage are annually deposited in Cleveland Harbor, requiring an annual expenditure of approximately $5 million per year by the Corps of Engineers. This legislation represents preventative medicine, in that the corps estimates that a large portion of the annual sediment they remove is generated within the Cuyahoga National Recreation Area. By spending money on erosion control now, we may save money in the long run in expenditures by the Corps of Engineers. In addition, erosion within the park would be reduced, leading to a better, more enjoyable unit of the national park system unit.

Title II would raise the ceiling on development costs by the National Park Service for purposes of restoration of the Sitka National Historical Park, thereby allowing the Park Service to complete the restoration and protection of the Russian Bishop House in Sitka, Alaska. As the capital of Russian Alaska, the Sitka area is one of the most important elements of this Nation's national park system. With the raise in the ceiling on development costs for the park, the job could finally be completed once and for all.

I urge Members of the House to vote in support of the suspension of the rules in order to adopt H.R. 3739.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3739) as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide certain authority to reduce erosion within the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation area and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE NATIONAL TRAILS SYSTEM ACT BY ADDING THE OREGON-CALIFORNIA TRAIL TO THE STUDY LIST

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3787) to amend the National Trails System Act by adding the Oregon-California Trail to the study list, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3787

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. Section 5(c) of the National Trails System Act (16 U.S.C. 1244(c)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(30) Pony Express Trail, extending from Saint Joseph, Missouri, through Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, to Sacramento, CA. as indicated on a map labeled 'Potential Pony Express Trail', dated October 1983 and the California Trail, extending from the vicinity of Omaha, Nebraska, and Saint Joseph, Missouri, to various points in California, as indicated on a map labled 'Potential California Trail' and dated August 1, 1983. Notwithstanding subsection (b) of this section, the study under this paragraph shall be completed and submitted to the Congress no later than the end of two complete fiscal years beginning after the date of the enactment of this paragraph. Such study shall be separated into two portions, one relating to the Pony Express Trail and one relating to the California Trail.".

SEC. 2. (a) Recognition should be given to the regional significant of the contributions of Daniel Boone in the exploration and settlement of the Nation to assure that a wider segment of the public be afforted the opportunity to share in Boone's contributions to America's heritage through establishment of markings of a Daniel Boone Heritage Trail.

(b) In order that significant route segments and sites, recognized as associated with Daniel Boone may be distinguished by suitable markers, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept the donations of such suitable markers for placement at appropriate locations on lands administered by the Secretary of the Interior, and with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Interior, and with the concurrence of the Secretary of Agriculture and other appropriate heads of Federal agencies, on lands under their jurisdiction. The determination of the placement of markers to commemorate the routes and sites of Daniel Boone shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior in consultation with appropriate private interests and affected local and State governments.

(c) The markers authorized by subsection (b) shall be placed in association with the Daniel Boone Trail identified on maps contained in the study entitled "Final National Trail Study, August, 1983, Daniel Boone" and submitted to the Congress pursuant to the provisions of section 5 of the National Trails Systems Act (16 U.S.C. 1244).

SEC. 3. Any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act which, directly or indirectly, authorizes the enactment of new budget authority described in section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 shall be effective only for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1984.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 3787 is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to initiate a study of the Pony Express Trail and the California Trail for possible inclusion in the National Trails System as national historic trails. The bill also designates the Daniel Boone Heritage Trail, thereby authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to accept markers for placement on Federal property to commemorate the pioneering contributions of Daniel Boone.

H.R. 3787 was introduced by Mr. BROWN of Colorado. As reported, it also incorporates the text of H.R. 3198, introduced by Mr. QUILLEN and it provides for a study of the Pony Express Trail as was included in H.R. 4134, introduced by Mr. SHUMWAY.

The California Trail was one of a number of trails used by settlers and prospectors in their emigration West during the mid-1800's. The trail breaks from the Oregon Trail—already included in the National Trails System—at the Raft River, in Idaho and heads southwest toward Sacramento, Calif. There were many branches and side trails which were all highly used, especially by prospectors. The California Trail, however, was the main thoroughfare to California and Sutter's Mill for the 125,000 or more men, women, and children who came to settle or prospect in the year 1818.

The Pony Express Trail was, likewise, a major link between the East and the California frontier. Organized in 1860, the Pony Express was the most direct and practical means of communication, East to West, before the advent of the telegraph, and played a role in aligning California with the Union during the outbreak of the Civil War, Although the Pony Express thrived only 18 months, its riders became legendary because of the daring attitudes they displayed, carrying the mail in every kind of weather and through hostile territory. By riding day and night at approximately 10 miles per hour, the Pony rider could transport the mail pouch from St. Joseph, MO, to Sacramento in 10 days.

These two trails run extremely close together, and at points are right on top of each other. They extend from St. Joseph, MO, through the Rocky Mountains near the Great Salt Lake, to the area around Sacramento, CA. Because of the proximity of these trails to each other, this bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to conduct one feasibility study of the trails corridor, while still requiring two reports and two recommendations, one for each trail, respectively.

The bill would also designate the Daniel Boone Heritage Trail. This would recognize the significance of the pioneering contributions of Daniel Boone in the exploration and settlement of the Nation by authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to mark significant trail route segments of the Daniel Boone Heritage Trail. The Secretary would be authorized to accept donations of suitable markers for placement at appropriate locations on lands under his administration and on other Federal lands with the concurrence of the heads of the Federal agencies administering those lands. Marker placement would be made in consultation with appropriate private interests, Federal land managers, and affected State and local governments. The Department of the Interior supports this approach toward preservation of the trail.

Mr. Speaker, I know of no controversy connected with this bill. It deserves enactment and I strongly urge its passage today.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3787, a bill to amend the National Trails System Act by adding the California Trail and the Pony Express Trail to the study list. The bill also authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to accept the donation of markers for placement on Federal lands to commemorate routes and sites associated with Daniel Boone.

H.R. 3787 is actually a combination of three bills introduced by my colleague from California (Mr. SHUMWAY), my colleague from Colorado (Mr. BROWN) and my colleague from Tennessee (Mr. QUILLEN). The Subcommittee on Public Lands and National Parks, seeing the great merit of these bills, combined them into one package to expedite their passage. I commend the chairman of the subcommittee (Mr. SEIBERLING) for his willingness to move on this legislation.

The administration supports the study provisions for the California Trail and the Pony Express Trail and the donation of markers for the Daniel Boone Trail. They would have preferred a slightly longer time period to complete the studies. However, we gave them 2 complete fiscal years which we believe is adequate.

Again, I commend the members for their initiative and urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. BROWN).

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 3787 is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to study the feasibility of adding the California Trail and the Pony Express Trail to the National Trails System. The bill also provides for recognition of the significance of the Daniel Boone Trail by allowing markers to be placed along the route.

The trails are important pieces of our national history and, if designated, will also provide recreational opportunities. The California Trail was heavily used for westward migration from 1849—the year of the Gold Rush to 1869 and much of their traces remain. The iron-tired wagons left very deep grooves many of which can still be seen today.

The Pony Express Trail is, of course, the historic route used by the brave men who provided the only means of communication with western outposts until the establishment of the telegraph.

Unfortunately, many trail segments have already been lost due in some cases to a lack of knowledge of their existence and appreciation of their importance. During our hearings on the bill, it was pointed out that much of the California and Pony Express Trail routes go through the western Overthrust Belt. Companies working in this area have been supportive of protecting the trail segments but need to know where they are.

The urgency of this matter is one reason why the committee choose to place a 2-year time limit on the studies, instead of the more normal 3 years. I do not believe it will place an undue burden on the Department.

The Daniel Boone Trail would recognize the significance of the contributions of a great explorer and settler. Designation of the trail as a national scenic trail was ruled out when it was found that most of it traversed private land and acquisition of a right-of-way for the trail would not be desirable. Therefore, the bill before us today simply allows for the donation of markers to help identify the trail at no expense to the Federal Government. It has the support of local landowners and State and local governments.

I support H.R. 3787 and urge my colleagues to vote for it.

● Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3787. Two of the trails that the bill would add to the list to be studied under the National Trails Act, the California and Pony Express Trails, pass through my State of Nevada.

There is strong support for the study of these trails within the State, including support from Governor Bryan. I agree with the bill's supporters that the eventual designation of National Historic Trails in Nevada would provide needed recreational opportunities and historic interpretation to persons of all ages and physical abilities—both Nevadans and visitors from other States.

I urge my colleagues to join me in voting to suspend the rules and pass this important piece of legislation. Thank you very much.●

● Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3787 and urge its passage.

H.R. 3787 is a two-part bill. The first part relates to a study of the Pony Express Trail and the California Trail. The second part of the bill is a bill I sponsored, H.R. 3198, to commemorate the historic trail route of Daniel Boone. I want to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) and the other members of the subcommittee and the full committee for moving my bill forward to the House floor today.

I am sure everyone is familiar with the name Daniel Boone, the great explorer and frontiersman whose exploits are an American legend. H.R. 3787 will extend some recognition of the importance of Boone's trail-blazing endeavors in guiding the first pioneer families over the mountains in the initial stage of America's expansion from the Atlantic seaboard to the West.

Study of a proposed Daniel Boone Trail route was authorized by Public Law 94-527 to determine if it were feasible and desirable to designate the route as a component of the National Trails System. The proposed trail route was evaluated to determine if it qualified as either a national scenic trail or a national historic trail. The Park Service study agreed with regional historic groups that a scenic trail designation is not feasible or desirable because its establishment would require extensive acquisition of privately owned lands for a right-of-way and the costs would be prohibitive. A national historic trail designation was rejected by the Park Service on the ground that Boone's Trail was not of "sufficient historical significance." The final report was issued in August 1983. I disagree completely with that finding, but I will not reopen my argument with the Park Service here.

H.R. 3787 provides a third alternative that would recognize the significance of the pioneering contributions of Daniel Boone in the exploration and settlement of the Nation by authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to mark significant trail route segments and sites of a Daniel Boone Heritage Trail. The Secretary would be authorized to accept donations of suitable markers for placement at appropriate locations on lands under his administration and on other Federal lands with the concurrence of the heads of those Federal agencies administering those lands. Marker placement would be made in consultation with appropriate private interests, Federal land managers, and affected State and local governments. This bill provides for recognition of this trail through cooperative effort at little or no cost to the Federal Government.

Daniel Boone has many admirers throughout the Nation who are willing to undertake that part of this endeavor. This is true because most Americans have grown up on history lessons about Daniel Boone from their grade school days.

Virtually any American sixth grader can tell you about Boone's trail blazing and his leadership in opening the land beyond the mountains to pioneer settlers. The path of his exploits should be marked not only out of respect for Boone's past accomplishment, but also to recognize the effect his life had on the development of our Nation as we know it today.

There is a great deal of interest in the Daniel Boone Trail in the four States directly affected: Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Kentucky. Nineteen Members of the House from these States have cosponsored my original bill now incorporated into H.R. 3787.

The Department of the Interior recommends enactment, and certainly I know of no opposition to this noncontroversial bill.

Again, I want to extend my appreciation to the members of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs for bringing this bill to the House floor, and I urge its passage.●

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express my support for H.R. 3787. This bill would authorize study of the California Trail and Pony Express Trail for possible inclusion in the National Trails System as national historic trails.

This bill is particularly important to the Sacramento area since both of the trails included in the study extend to Sacramento. The Pony Express Trail runs from St. Louis to Sacramento. The California Trail was one of a number of trails used by settlers and prospectors in their emigration west during the mid-1800's. The trail breaks off the Oregon Trail at the Raft River and heads southwest to Sacramento. As a Sacramentan, I am particularly proud of these important elements of Sacramento history and believe it is essential to preserve the recreational and historic value of the trails.

These trails are a vital part of our national heritage and represent a chapter in U.S. history that greatly deserves our tribute today. It is a memory of the contributions made by a group of bold men and women who braved the dangers of the western frontier to bring progress to our country. In remembering this important period in American history, we remember the dedication and labor upon which this Nation was founded. In this time of technology and modern convenience, it is particularly important that we preserve the memory of the hard work and dedication of our ancestors.

This legislation is an important first step for giving these historic areas the protection they deserve.●

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3787, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

U.S. HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL COUNCIL AUTHORIZATIONS

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5100), authorizing appropriations to the Executive Director, U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, for services necessary to perform the functions of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, as amended.

H.R. 5100

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 8 of the Holocaust Memorial Council Act (Public Law 96-388; U.S.C. 1408) is amended as follows: After "1983", change the colon to a comma, and add in lieu thereof, "$2,051,000 for the fiscal year 1985, and $2,150,000 for fiscal year 1986:".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5100, as reported, would extend the authorization for the operation of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council through fiscal year 1986.

The legislation establishing the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council was signed on October 7, 1980 (Public Law 96-388). That law was amended by Public Law 97-84, signed on November 20, 1981, which added five new members to the 60-member Council.

The act establishing the Council provided authority for the Council to accept any real property from any agency of the Federal Government for the purpose of establishing a Holocaust Memorial Museum. Appropriations were authorized for the operation of the Council in the amount of $722,000 for fiscal year 1981, $800,000 for fiscal year 1982, and $850,000 for fiscal 1983, with the stipulation that no funds could be used for any construction activity. Public Law 98-146 provided appropriations in the amount of $1,853,000 for fiscal year 1984.

A bill (S. 2387) with language to extend authorization for 2 years has been introduced in the Senate. The language in S. 2387 would provide for $2,050,000 for fiscal year 1985, as does H.R. 5100, and also proposes "such sums as may be necessary" for fiscal year 1986. The committee felt a 2-year authorization of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council was appropriate. However, the committee did not feel "such sums" to be acceptable as an authorization for an operating agency of the Federal Government and accordingly amended the bill to include and authorization of $2,150,000 for fiscal year 1986.

Mr. Speaker, today was the formal groundbreaking, I understand, for the Holocaust Memorial Museum, so it is most appropriate that we are taking this bill up on the floor of the House today.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation.

In 1980, Congress took an important step toward remembering the tragedies which occurred in Europe during the Holocaust. By establishing the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, Congress demonstrated its intent to establish a permanent reminder, both as a way to remember and to learn the lessons of the past so that these tragedies are not repeated.

Since 1980, the Memorial Council has been working to meet its mandate to plan, construct, and operate a permanent "living" memorial to the victims of the Holocaust. Congress has authorized administrative funds necessary to conduct these activities so that the memorial will be operating by 1989. This bill preserves the intent that construction funds will be raised from private sources.

Passage of this legislation will help to keep these activities on schedule to complete this important project.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation enjoys bipartisan support and the President has included the funds called for in this legislation in the fiscal year 1985 budget.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. CORRADA).

Mr. CORRADA. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in strong support of H.R. 5100.

It is fitting that this legislation is being considered this week as we remember and pray for the millions of innocent men, women, and children who fell victims to the Nazis during World War II. As the years pass and those who lived through those years are no longer living testament to the horrors that took place, it is very important that this memorial be built so that future generations can be reminded of man's inhumanity to his fellow man.

We must never forget, and our children must also never forget, that humankind has the capacity for greatness and for good, but that we also have the capacity for horror and unspeakable evil against our fellow brothers and sisters. Thus, it is our responsibility to be ever on guard to prevent injustice and repression against any person or group. It is a sign of a just and free society to be, in the most basic sense of the word, our brothers' and sisters' keepers, only then can we insure that a new Holocaust will not take place.

This monument will serve as a living testament to those who died and I urge my colleagues to approve this legislation.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY), a distinguished member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Mr. MURPHY. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the remarks of the preceding gentlemen and commend the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of our subcommittee, for bringing this matter up on a very symbolic day.

As we struggle here in this Chamber day by day to protect the rights and dignity of all men and women, I think it is only fitting that the worst treatment that mankind ever suffered in the 1940's be commemorated by this body and by this resolution, and that we do erect a proper monument in our country because it is our country that stands first and foremost in the protection of human rights, justice, and dignity.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such additional time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, I would like only to say that in a day when people of extreme views are spreading the lie that the Holocaust never took place, it seems to me that this is a very appropriate time for us to be creating this museum. Some people say, "Well, why in the United States?" That is one very good reason why.

I strongly support the council's work. They are undertaking to raise the construction costs entirely from private funds, and it seems to me that with the anticipated costs running into the many millions, the American people are going to be the beneficiaries of a very tremendous private effort.

Second, I think it also serves to remind us that in the words of John Donne, no man is an island; all men are part of mankind. The Holocaust not only diminished the people who were its victims; it diminished all civilized people. We need to remind ourselves that this happened in one of the leading, most civilized countries of the world, or so we then thought, so it was not an aberration necessarily that was limited to one people. We need to be reminded of the alternatives to a civilized and decent respect for humanity and for the rules of law.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I strongly support not only this bill, but the concept of the Holocaust Museum being built in Washington, D.C.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in strong support of H.R. 5100, authorizing appropriations for the Holocaust Memorial Council for fiscal year 1984.

As we consider this bill, it is vital to understand the valuable work of the Holocaust Memorial Council in the formal observance of the days of remembrance and in the construction of the Holocaust Memorial Museum. Through the horror of the Holocaust, Hitler sought not only to destroy the Jewish people, but to eliminate even the memory of their existence. In remembering those who died, we deny Nazism another victory. We should remember, too, those heroic individuals, the righteous gentiles, such as Swedish diplomat Raoul Wallenberg, and the old woman who sheltered my father in Poland, who stood up to the evil and risked their lives to save Jews and other potential victims.

It is also important to preserve the memory of the Holocaust, because it is a source of many lessons for the entire human race. It has taught us how short the distance can be between a threat and its realization. It has taught us the magnitude that evil can reach when it is served by the apparatus of a modern state. Finally, and most importantly, because it was the indifference of the rest of the world that allowed the Holocaust to occur, we have learned that we all share a responsibility to speak out against intolerance, no matter whom it is directed against. Only if we learn this lesson well can we prevent humanity from ever again turning on itself.

The role of the Holocaust Memorial Council in preserving the memory and lessons of the Holocaust is clear. I commend the members of the council for their work and strongly support this legislation.●

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express my support for the Holocaust Memorial Council authorization.

The Holocaust remains the most terrible occurrence of the 20th century. The destruction of 6 million Jews in Europe and the attempt to eliminate a people solely because of their Jewish heritage is a valid and terrifying memory for modern people.

For most of us, the term "holocaust" needs further explanation. It evokes the tragic disregard for even the basic of rights of morality and human decency, the terror of the concentration camps, the tragedy of families torn apart and destroyed, and the scars both physical and mental that the survivors still endure.

While the meaning is fresh and clear for us, the tragedy would be even worse if we allowed ourselves to forget the event and the profound impact it has had on individual lives and the world as a whole. It is important to remember that much time passed before the Holocaust elicited the cries of moral indignation that were deserved. Future generations must be reminder of the lengths to which tyranny may go if it is not opposed and halted.

H.R. 5100 will authorize the necessary funds for the operation of the Holocaust Memorial Council. It is a small price to ask to preserve the truth so that our children for generations to come may understand the Holocaust and its somber lessons.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5100, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

REDESIGNATING THE ST. CROIX ISLAND NATIONAL MONUMENT AS THE "ST. CROIX ISLAND INTERNATIONAL HISTORIC SITE"

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 25) redesignating the St. Croix Island Monument in the State of Maine as the "St. Croix Island International Historic Site," as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

S.J. RES. 25

Whereas in the summer of 1604, a small French expedition led by Sieur de Monts established the first European settlement in the northern half of North America on what is now Saint Croix Island, on the Saint Croix River, in the State of Maine;

Whereas pursuant to the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the establishment of the Saint Croix Island National Monument in the State of Maine" (approved June 8, 1949), portions of Saint Croix Island of national historical importance were established as the Saint Croix Island National Monument, a unit of the National Park System;

Whereas the historic settlement on Saint Croix Island marked the beginning of European colonization of Canada, from which the French embarked to establish the settlement which became Quebec; and

Whereas Saint Croix Island is important to the history of the people of Canada as well as that of the people of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) in recognition of its historic significance to the United States and Canada, the Saint Croix Island National Monument in the State of Maine is hereby redesignated as the "Saint Croix Island International Historic Site".

(b) Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, record, or other paper of the United States to such monument shall be deemed to be a reference to the "Saint Croix Island International Historic Site".

(c) Nothing in this joint resolution shall affect the status of the "Saint Croix Island International Historic Site" as a national monument and a unit of the National Park System.

SEC. 2. Section 106(b)(3) of the Act of October 15, 1977, (91 Stat. 1161), as amended by the Act of March 12, 1980, (94 Stat. 84), is further amended by changing "Energy" to "Interior" wherever it appears.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, Senate Joint Resolution 25 as reported would redesignate the St. Croix Island National Monument as the St. Croix Island International Historic Site and would adjust the authorization for certain health care programs in Micronesia.

St. Croix Island is located on the boundary between Maine and New Brunswick, Canada.

A companion bill was introduced by the gentlewoman from Maine (Ms. SNOWE) but since the Senate had already acted, we have chosen that as the vehicle for the moment at least.

Mr. Speaker, St. Croix Island was settled in 1604 by a group of 150 French settlers who later resettled to a more habitable site across the Bay of Fundy at Port Royal.

In recognition of the importance of the site to the history of both Canada and the United States, Congress authorized the St. Croix Island National Monument in 1949. More recently, in 1981, Canada and the United States dedicated an interpretive structure on St. Croix Island at Red Beach, Maine, and a similar structure will be built by New Brunswick on the opposite shore. In addition, Canadian and U.S. officials have signed a memorandum of understanding, citing the historic significance of this island to both nations.

Senate Joint Resolution 25 would recognize the truly international significance of St. Croix Island by redesignating the area as the "St. Croix Island International Historic Site."

The committee has also included language which transfers the authorization for funding the four atoll health care plan for the people of Bikini, Eniwetok, Rongelap, and Utirik in the Marshall Islands from the Energy Department to the Department of the Interior.

The present divided responsibility for the health care plan, with the Interior Department administering the program and the Energy Department funding it, has created problems in implementation in the 4 years since the original authorization was signed into law as Public Law 96-205.

Energy was originally directed to fund the health care plan because the Atomic Energy Commission, a predecessor to the Energy Department, was the agency responsible for the U.S. nuclear testing in the Pacific, and the health care program is designed to deal with effects of that testing. However, the Department of the Interior is responsible for the program, and conflicts arose that are normal when one agency is responsible for providing the funds for another agency's program.

As reported, this joint resolution removes this procedural obstacle to providing health care for these people who were victims of the U.S. nuclear tests in the Pacific.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation, which has the bipartisan support of the members of the Interior Committee.

The importance of this island to the United States and Canada has been formally recognized since 1949, when Congress designated the site as a national monument.

In recent years, both the United States and Canada have taken steps to increase awareness of the importance of the island as an international historic site. The gentlewoman from Maine (Ms. SNOWE) has furthered this cause by seeking passage of this legislation.

Designating this island as an international historic site would recognize both the cultural and historic importance of the island as well as formalize an ongoing cooperative effort by the United States and Canada to note the importance of the site.

Mr. Speaker, all too often, our relations with our neighbor to the north are marked by a lack of communication and understanding. Our colleague from Maine has presented a convincing case to help improve our understanding as well as the understanding between the people of these great nations.

Finally, with regard to title II, I strongly support the subcommittee amendment to shift funding for the Four Atoll Health Care Plan to the Department of the Interior.

I urge passage of this legislation.

● Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation, which would redesignate the St. Croix Island National Monument in the State of Maine as an international historic site. On behalf of the many individuals and organizations who have cooperated to help bring more historic recognition to this famous island, I am pleased that the House is acting to pass this legislation.

In recognition of the importance of this site to the heritage of Canada and the United States, Congress authorized the St. Croix Island National Monument in 1949. First settled in 1604 by Samuel de Champlain, St. Croix Island holds the distinction of being the first European settlement in the northern half of North America. By the end of that first year, nearly half of the island's first 79 settlers perished from the harsh winter and lack of food. The island itself is located at the boundary of Maine and New Brunswick, Canada. By redesignating this island as an international historic site, we recognize both the cultural and historic importance of St. Croix Island.

In recent times, citizens of the United States and Canada have recognized the need to better portray the great international heritage of St. Croix. In 1981, the United States and Canada dedicated an interpretive shelter on St. Croix Island at Red Beach, Maine. A similar shelter will be constructed on the Canadian shore to explain the island's first settlement.

In addition, Canadian and United States officials have signed a memorandum of understanding, citing the historic significance of this island to both nations.

I believe this redesignation will enhance the public's appreciation and awareness of St. Croix Island, and will help to better pronounce the importance of this site to Canadian and American history. As the chairman knows, no part of this resolution would affect the status of St. Croix Island, which is already established as a national monument and as a unit of the national park system.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to passage of this measure, and the redesignation of St. Croix Island as an international historic site.●

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate Joint Resolution 25, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate joint resolution, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DESIGNATING WILDCAT BROOK IN NEW HAMPSHIRE FOR POTENTIAL ADDITION TO THE NATIONAL WILD AND SCENIC RIVER SYSTEM

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4406) to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act to designate Wildcat Brook in the State of New Hampshire for potential addition to the national wild and scenic rivers system, and for other purposes.

H.R. 4406

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 5(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1271-1287) is amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof—

"(89) WILDCAT BROOK, NEW HAMPSHIRE.—The segment from its headwaters to its confluence with the Ellis River, including Bog Brook.".

(b) Section 5(b)(3) of such Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "The study of the river named in paragraph (89) of subsection (a) shall be completed not later than ten years after the date of the enactment of this sentence.".

(c) The first paragraph (4) in section 5(b) of such Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "There are authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of conducting the study of the river named in paragraph (89) such sums as may be necessary." The second paragraph (4) in such section 5(b) and paragraph (5) in such section 5(b) are redesignated as paragraphs (5) and (6) respectively.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 4406 is to require study of Wildcat Brook of New Hampshire, from its headwaters to its confluence with the Ellis River, including Bog Brook, for its possible inclusion in the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System.

Wildcat Brook is considered one of the best white-water rivers in the northeastern United States. It has been identified on the Park Service's nationwide rivers inventory as having significant importance for its scenic and natural qualities. The river, a major tourist attraction is widely known for its beautiful falls and is within a day's driving distance of 25 percent of the U.S. population.

H.R. 4406 was introduced by our colleague, NORMAN D'AMOURS, on November 6, 1983. After a hearing by the Subcommittee on Public Lands and National Parks, the committee has reported the bill without amendment. I urge its enactment.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. D'AMOURS).

Mr. D'AMOURS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the subcommittee chairman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the majority and minority leadership of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs for their prompt action on my bill, H.R. 4406, and particularly my colleague from Ohio, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Lands and National Parks. H.R. 4406 amends the National Wild and Scenic Rivers Act by including, for study purposes, the Wildcat River in Jackson, N.H.

The Wildcat River is located entirely within the bounds of Jackson, N.H., a small community of 600 residents located in the heart of the White Mountain National Forest. The Wildcat, in its short 13.2-mile length, is an excellent example of a rural, scenic river offering breathtaking views of a river passing through all of its natural stages—still pools, wild falls, and meandering brooks—and that is why it has been listed in our Nation's rivers inventory as worthy for study as a wild and scenic river. The citizens of Jackson realize the unique environmental features of the Wildcat and have worked to protect and preserve it.

The support for my legislation is unanimous and bipartisan. The citizens of Jackson, through the offices of the selectmen, the planning board, and the conservation commission, have all strongly spoken out in favor of preserving the Wildcat. In addition, the Appalachian Mountain Club, the National Audubon Society, the Friends of the Earth, the American Rivers Conservation Council and the Governor of New Hampshire all urge the prompt passage of my bill.

As you can see, the support for my legislation to have the Wildcat studies for inclusion as a wild and scenic river is unanimous and bipartisan. I would also like to state that similar legislation has been introduced in the Senate and that legislation has been approved at the committee level. I urge my colleagues to support the passage of my bill so that the citizens of Jackson can rest assured that the Wildcat River will be protected and preserved for all of the generations that will follow us.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4406.

As the distinguished chairman of the Public Lands Subcommitee has noted, the (Wildcat Brook) has been recognized as one of the most significant whitewater rivers in the New England region. The National Park Service included the segment of the river in its 1982 inventory because of the class 4 and 5 rapids and its easy access.

Because of these characteristics, the Wildcat Brook is an important source of recreation for the citizens living in the Jackson area as well as others from throughout the country who visit New Hampshire each year.

Mr. Speaker, this Wildcat Brook receives serious further consideration as a potential addition to the National Wild and Scenic River System. If this river is designated by the State of New Hampshire, I believe that the Forest Service can work with the State to properly allocate management responsibilities so that the entire segment of the river, including Federal, State, and private lands, will be protected.

Finally, the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. D'AMOURS) should be comnmended for his hard work to bring the need to protect the Wildcat Brook to the attention of the Congress.

I urge passage of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4406.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE WILD AND SCENIC RIVERS ACT TO PERMIT THE CONTROL OF THE LAMPREY EEL IN THE PERE MARQUETTE RIVER

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3472) to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act to permit the control of the lamprey eel in the Pere Marquette River, as amended.

H.R. 3472

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3(a)(16) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act is amended by adding the following sentence at the end thereof: "Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the installation and operation of facilities or other activities within or outside the boundaries of the Pere Marquette Wild and Scenic River for the control of the lamprey eel shall be permitted subject to such restrictions and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe for the protection of water quality and other values of the river, including the wild and scenic characteristics of the river.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) will be recognized for 20 mintues and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me particular pleasure as a many-time visitor of the State of Michigan to be speaking in support of H.R. 3472.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3472, introduced by Mr. VANDER JAGT of Michigan, would amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act to allow construction of facilities to control the lamprey eel in the Pere Marquette River. That river has been designated a wild and scenic river, and therefore construction of any structures that would interrupt its free-flowing nature are prohibited.

The control of the spawning populations of lamprey eel in the Pere Marquette River is necessary to protect the valuable fisheries in Lake Michigan. Chemical lampricide had been used to control the lamprey eel populations but this has aroused concerns about public health and also is expensive. The Forest Service has studied the problem and has reported that construction of a weir or small dam is the best alternative to control the lamprey eel spawning in the Pere Marquette River. This position is also supported by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and the Great Lakes Fisheries Commission.

The proposed weir, which would be constructed by the Michigan Department of Natural Resources (MDNR) as approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, would be a cement dam across the river, far downstream, which would have a gap in the middle large enough to permit canoe passage and to allow the river to flow freely for about 10 months a year. The weir would extend 12 to 18 inches above the high-flow level of the river. During the spawning run of the lamprey which lasts about 2 months the gap would be closed. According to testimony we received, the lamprey eel cannot jump such a barrier, but other species, including the brown trout, and the Pacific salmon could easily pass over the weir.

The committee had no objection to such a low, gapped weir, in a carefully selected location, based on the assurance of the official witnesses that they would not approve the construction of a larger dam on the Pere Marquette which would present a greater obstruction to the river, or that would be installed for any purpose other than lamprey eel control.

Mr. Speaker, Pere Marquette, the great French priest and explorer who was the original European discoverer of the Great Lakes, certainly deserves to have a national wilderness area and a national wild and scenic river named for him, but he would also have saluted us for taking action to preserve the tremendous fishery resources in that magnificent system, the world's greatest body of fresh water, the Great Lakes system. Anyone who has seen the devastating effects of the lamprey eel on fish life—and I might say the lamprey eel was an exotic introduced by the introduction of ocean navigation into the Great Lakes system—anyone who has seen that would realize the importance of controls, and at the same time controls that do not poison the very waters that we are trying to preserve.

Mr. Speaker, this is a simple but very important measure. I strongly support this legislation, and I commend the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. VANDER JAGT) for having taken the initiative in introducing it. I urge its enactment.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of suspension of the rules for consideration of this legislation, much needed and long overdue. Because of the efforts of our very capable colleague, GUY VANDER JAGT of Michigan, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs was convinced that the Federal designation of wild and scenic river for the Pere Marquette River was having a devastating impact on the salmon fisheries of the Great Lakes. Through this legislation, the committee has recognized that such designation is not always consistent with a "clean environment." In fact, the reason for this legislation is to allow the construction of a weir to stop the eel from traveling up the river and devastating the fishing that ultimately takes place in the Great Lakes and its tributaries. By allowing the construction of such a weir, it negates the normal application of chemical lampricide, known to cause large die offs in other fish species that are not intended to be killed. This is a good bill, authored by a good colleague, and I urge the Members of the House to suspend the rules and adopt the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3472, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING ASSISTANCE TO CERTAIN INDIAN TRIBES FOR COMMUNITY PLANNING ACTIVITIES RELATING TO MX MISSILE DEPLOYMENT

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4952) to authorize the Secretary of Defense to provide assistance to certain Indian tribes for expenses incurred for community impact planning activities relating to the planned deployment of the MX missile system in Nevada and Utah in the same manner that State and local governments were provided assistance for such expenses.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of Defense may provide community impact planning assistance to assist Indian tribes located near sites which on October 10, 1980, were considered to be potential sites for the MX missile system. Such assistance shall be provided for the same purposes and in accordance with the same program under which the Secretary provided community planning assistance under section 801 of the Military Construction Authorization Act, 1981 (Public Law 96-418; 94 Stat. 1775) to State and local governments near such areas. The Secretary may provide such assistance using amounts which were made available to the Air Force under Public Law 96-436 for the purpose of assisting State and local governments in community impact planning in potential MX basing areas and which remain available for obligation.

SEC. 2. This Act shall apply only with respect to assistance for which a request was received by the Secretary of Defense before April 16, 1982, and which relates to expenses for community impact planning activities incurred before October 2, 1981.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. NICHOLS) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. NICHOLS).

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4952 would authorize the Secretary of Defense to compensate certain Indian tribes for expenses they incurred for community impact planning activities related to the planned deployment of the MX missile in the multiple protection shelter (MPS) basing mode.

The Military Construction Authorization Act for fiscal year 1981, Public Law 96-418, authorized $5 million to assist communities near planned MX weapons system sites in meeting the costs of providing increased municipal services and facilities to the residents of such communities. The Military Construction Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1981, Public Law 96-436, appropriated $5 million but provided it should be available only to assist State and local governments in community planning in the potential MX basing areas. Pursuant to that legislation the Department of the Air Force transferred about $2,225,000 to the affected State and local governments.

Certain Indian tribes residing in the potential MX basing areas incurred similar expenses in community impact planning. Those expenses total about $228,000. The tribes submitted claims for reimburesement but the Department of the Air Force concluded that the language of the law did not permit reimbursement of Indian tribes.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4952 would expand the reimbursement authority to provide for payment of the affected Indian tribes. It would specifically authorize the Air Force to reimburse those tribes from the funds remaining in the fiscal year 1981 appropriations. The reimbursement would be for the same purposes, and in accordance with the same program under which the State and local governments were reimbursed. The bill would provide equal treatment for the Indian tribes. It would place them on the same footing with the State and local governments for similar community impact planning expenses. It would give the tribes no more and no less than the Government entities. This reimbursement would not require any additional appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, I urge that the bill be adopted.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4952 to permit reimbursement of the Indian tribes which incurred community impact planning expenses in connection with the planned deployment of the MX missile in the multiple protection shelter basing mode.

These tribes were affected in the same manner that the State and local governments were by the planned deployment of the MX. They took action similar to those taken by the Governmental entities; but, due to the restrictive wording of the Appropriations Act, the Department of the Air Force was unable to comply with their claims for reimbursement.

This bill would expand the authority of the Department of Defense, thereby permitting it to consider the claims of the Indian tribes in the same manner that the State and local governments were treated. In the simplest terms, it would treat the Indians fairly.

No additional appropriations would be necessary for reimbursement of the Indian tribes. Their claims total only about $228,000. Approximately $2,775,000 remain from the fiscal year 1981 appropriations, which is more than adequate for payment of their claims.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is only fair that the tribes should be treated in the same manner that the local governments were, and I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Nevada (Mrs. VUCANOVICH).

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4952. This is a bill to authorize the Secretary of Defense to provide assistance to certain Indian tribes for expenses incurred in community impact planning for the proposed deployment of the MX missile system in the Great Basin. Three of the four tribes affected are from my State of Nevada.

The Military Construction Authorization and Appropriation Act of 1981 provided a community impact assistance planning program. Funds were appropriated under this program to the Air Force to assist State and local governments in community impact planning in potential MX basing areas. To this end, Congress authorized and appropriated $5 million. However, Indian tribes were not recognized by the Air Force as being eligible for funding under this program. Though the tribes did incur legitimate planning expenses, the Air Force feels it presently lacks the authority to use any of the remaining planning funds to assist the affected Indian tribes.

H.R. 4952 would authorize the Secretary of Defense to reimburse tribes which filed verified tribal claims before April 16, 1982. Only verified expenses, incurred for the same purpose and in accordance with the same program under which local governments received assistance, would be eligible for reimbursement. It is important to note that the bill does not authorize any new funds. Payment of the money claimed by the Indian tribes, some $228,000, can be accommodated within the original appropriation.

I firmly believe that these tribes did, in fact, incur legitimate expenses for MX-related impact planning, just as similar expenses were incurred by the local governments that received reimbursement under the assistance program. I think it is time to recognize this fact and allow the tribes to be reimbursed for the same impact assistance granted to the local communities.

I therefore urge my colleagues to join me in voting to suspend the rules and pass this very important piece of legislation. Thank you very much.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentlewoman from Nevada (Mrs. VUCANOVICH) for introducing this much needed legislation in behalf of her constituency.

I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. NICHOLS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4952.

The question was taken.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAMS ENCOURAGING THE USE OF CHILD RESTRAINT SYSTEMS

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4616) to amend the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 to require States to use at least 8 percent of their highway safety apportionments for developing and implementing comprehensive programs concerning the use of child restraint systems in motor vehicles, and for other purposes, as amended.

H.R. 4616

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 203(a)(1) of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 203. (a)(1) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for carrying out section 402 of title 23, United States Code (relating to highway safety programs), by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, out of the Highway Trust Fund (other than the Mass Transit Account), $115,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and $120,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986.".

(b) Section 203(a) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4)(A) Each State shall expend each fiscal year not less than 8 per centum of the amount apportioned to it for such fiscal year of the sums authorized by paragraph (1) of this subsection, for developing and implementing comprehensive programs approved by the Secretary of Transportation concerning the use of child restraint systems in motor vehicles. Upon request of the Governor of any State, the Secretary may reduce the amount required to be expended by the State for any fiscal year under the preceding sentence if the State demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the percentage of children under the age of 4 traveling in motor vehicles in the State who are properly restrained by a child restraint system is greater than 75 percent.

"(B) No project for developing and implementing a comprehensive program concerning the use of child restraint systems in motor vehicles may be approved by the Secretary of Transportation in the fiscal years ending September 30, 1985, and September 30, 1986, unless the State applying for approval of such project enters into such agreements with the Secretary as the Secretary may require to ensure that such State will maintain its aggregate expenditures from all non-Federal sources for such programs at or above the average level of such expenditures in its two fiscal years preceding the date of enactment of this paragraph.

"(C) Subparagraphs (A) and (B) of this paragraph shall not apply to sums authorized to be appropriated for any fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1987.".

SEC. 2. Section 203(b) of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the total of all obligations for highway safety programs carried out by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration under section 402 of title 23, United States Code, shall not exceed $115,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and $120,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and the total of all obligations for highway safety programs carried out by the Federal Highway Administration under section 402 of title 23, United States Code, shall not exceed $10,000,000 per fiscal year for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1985, and September 30, 1986.".

SEC. 3. (a) The sixth sentence of section 402(c) of title 23, United States Code, is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ", except that the apportionments to the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa shall not be less than one-quarter of 1 per centum of the total apportionment.".

(b) Section 401 of title 23, United States Code, is amended by striking out ", except that all expenditures for carrying out this chapter in the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa shall be paid out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

(c) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall only apply to fiscal years beginning after the date of enactment of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. ANDERSON) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California, (Mr. ANDERSON).

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4616, as amended, is designed to eliminate or reduce the epidemic which the Surgeon General states in his report on "Health Promotion and Disease Prevention" that: "no other preventable cause poses such a major threat as (automobile) accidents which account for 45 percent of total childhood mortality."

That is right. More infants and small children under 5 years old are killed or crippled while riding in motor vehicles than the totals killed or crippled by the seven common childhood diseases that youngsters are routinely immunized against. Automobile accidents are the No. 1 traumatic cause of epilepsy and are a major traumatic cause of mental retardation and spinal cord injury in children.

To address this tragic epidemic, H.R. 4616 will increase the amount this Nation spends on the section 402 highway safety program by $15 million in fiscal year 1985, and $20 million in fiscal year 1986. And it will set aside 8 percent of a State's apportionment to develop and implement a comprehensive child-restraint program.

Over 40 States and the District of Columbia presently have laws on their books requiring the use of safety seats, and yet their usage rate is still only 40 percent. Of this number, 70 percent are being misused and thus offer minimal, if any, protection.

So, we have this epidemic. Nearly 3,400 kids under the age of 5 were killed in the years between 1978 and 1982, and an additional 250,000; a quarter of a million, were injured.

This is even more tragic in light of the evidence cited in a National Transportation Safety Board report indicating that most of these deaths and injuries are preventable; 90 percent of the fatalities, and 67 percent of the disabling injuries could have been prevented by the proper use of child seats.

As I indicated, despite the fact that the vast majority of the States require the use of safety seats, only 12 percent of the children in this country—40 percent that use them multiplied by the 30 percent that use them correctly—are being protected by their proper use. Clearly, laws by themselves are not adequate. Parents must still be encouraged to use them, and just as importantly, to use them correctly.

H.R. 4616 provides seed money to the States to encourage parents to use the seats and to teach them their proper use; $18.8 million over 2 years is not an excessive amount to spend considering all the lives that are presently being needlessly ended or crippled so near their very beginnings; $18.8 million is not too much to spend to help fund grassroots programs, education programs, media programs, loaner programs, and to help police enforce State laws; $18.8 million is a good investment.

Before I conclude, though, I should point out that, when the section 402 program is extended beyond fiscal year 1986, it is my intent to add a third year to this program. But after the third year, the States will be expected to pick up the cost of programs this legislation has helped generate.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that comprehensive child-restraint legislation should prove its effectiveness by a reduction in fatalities and injuries. However, because of certain anomalies, aberrations may occur which would not reflect accurately the effectiveness of a State's program. In this regard, the committee would like to alleviate the problem by clarifying its intent. The intent is that the Secretary shall also evaluate the effectiveness of the child-safety-seat program to determine if proper child-safety-seat use has increased and the level of misuse has decreased. The approval of the States' program should be contingent upon the showing of such positive results in the previous fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, I move that we suspend the rules and pass H.R. 4616 as amended.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 4616, a bill which has the potential for helping reduce accidental deaths and injuries among young children riding in motor vehicles.

It would do this by: First, increasing the authorizations for State and community highway safety programs from $100 million a year to $115 million and $120 million, respectively, for fiscal years 1985 and 1986; (second, requiring States to spend a minimum of 8 percent of these funds on programs to increase proper use of child restraints; and third, giving the Secretary of Transportation the authority to approve State programs as eligible for funding.

There is a strong case for this bill. During 1982, the last year for which we have good data, highway accidents took the lives of 633 children through the age of 4 who were occupants of motor vehicles. As to injuries, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration estimates that the injury-to-fatality ratio is roughly 30 or 40 to 1.

Child-restraint devices work. The National Transportation Safety Board has studied the issue and confirmed that contention. Testimony before the Public Works Committee has indicated that 90 percent of the fatalities and two-thirds of disabling injuries could be prevented by proper use of child-restraint devices—with the device properly installed in the vehicle and the child properly secured in the device.

Yet the use of such restraints runs about 40 percent, and it has been estimated that only 12 percent represents proper use. The need, then, is for a program to encourage wider use and correct use.

This bill can help, and is likely to lead to development of programs nationwide, consisting of mandatory use of child restraints—under State law—an intensive education program for parents and police, enforcement, media efforts, availability of loaner devices to low-income families, and involvement of a wide range of individuals and organizations.

I am encouraged to believe that it will indeed help. It has a lot going for it, including a heightened concern for highway safety in general, the support of a number of groups and organizations, and the fact that at least 44 States have enacted some form of child restraint legislation in recent years.

In 1983, this Nation recorded the lowest number of highway fatalities in 20 years. Some 42,500 died on the highways last year, more than 12,000 fewer than in the peak year of 1972. And the death rate in terms of fatalities per million vehicle miles traveled is at an all-time low.

Evidently a number of safety and safety-related efforts are paying off, and it is my hope and expectation that with enactment of this bill we will continue the progress of recent years.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4616, if enacted into law, will assist States in their efforts to reduce the threat of death and injury created by the No. 1 killer of children under 5, the automobile. Child restraint programs have been initiated more or less to some degree in all the States, and according to a 19-State study done by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, the evidence is clear that in those States where the programs are strongest, the rate of proper usage is highest. Yet, because laws that focus on the problem are relatively recent, these programs have not fulfilled their potential, and in States where funding has been relatively sparse, the progams and rate of usage are similarly weak.

Because children have no choice as to whether or not they are optimally protected in an automobile, it is important that parents be well informed of the benefits of child safety seats and how to use them. It is also important that those families without sufficient means to purchase seats be given the opportunity to protect their children through loaner programs and public health clinics. The authorization provided in H.R. 4616, while not necessarily sufficient in themselves to fund an entire program, will help to provide funds to enhance or commence programs that are designed to educate parents on why and how to use child restraints. These programs, in conjunction with laws that now exist in 44 States, will establish a base from which both public and private sector organizations or groups can build a self-sustaining program that will promote child safety seat use from the child's first ride, ideally to continue to 3 or 4 years of age. The child safety seat program may also begin a trend toward the wearing of seatbelts beyond childhood, thereby extending the life-saving benefits that safety restraints provide.

It is hoped that this important legislation will be speedily approved by the other body.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. ANDERSON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4616, as amended.

The question was taken; and, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MORATORIUM ON FURTHER DEPLOYMENT OF CRUISE AND PERSHING II MISSILES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. MCKINNEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. MCKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention a proposed amendment to the Department of Defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1985. The amendment is designed to offer a reasonable alternative to the arms control stalemate in which we presently find ourselves.

My language would place a 6-month moratorium on the further deployment of cruise and Pershing II missiles in Europe, provided the Soviets agree to and, in fact, return to the intermediate-range nuclear force (INF) reduction talks. The moratorium would be in place for the entire 6 months except if, after resumption of INF talks and before the end of the 6-month period, the President certifies to Congress that the Soviet Union has unilaterally broken off talks. The text of the amendment is as follows:

The United States may not deploy any additional Pershing II or ground-launched cruise missile in Europe during the six-month period beginning on the date on which intermediate-range nuclear force reduction talks between the United States and the Soviet Union resume in Geneva, Switzerland, except that if, after such talks have resumed and before the end of that period, the President certifies to Congress that the Soviet Union has unilaterally broken off such talks, the United States may resume such deployment.●

DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE OF THE VICTIMS OF THE HOLOCAUST

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GARCIA) is recognized for 60 minutes.

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great sense of honor that I participate in this special order for Yom Ha'shoa, the Days of Remembrance of victims of the Holocaust.

The human memory is a strange thing. Painful events are pushed into the subconscious, immersed in a depth of forgetfulness that allows us to go on living sane lives despite experiences of unspeakable horror. And the event which we recall on this day, in remembering its victims, is one of the most awesome examples of inhumanity to be inflicted on innocent people in an era of so-called advanced civilization.

It is difficult, nearly impossible to conjure up a vision of the Holocaust without feeling an overwhelming sorrow at the loss, and disbelief at the monstrous plan behind it—conceived by man, in a highly cultured and well-educated society. The impossible has happened over and over again in our lifetime. This was one of the most shameful events in history, particularly when most of the world turned deaf ears to the pleas for help. It is a nightmare from which humanity has awakened, and yet, for those who survived it continues.

Why then, if it is so terrible to contemplate, if the human mind shuns such pain, and recoils from such horror—why should we consciously remember, and build a museum to this memory, read and write the books and poems, tell and retell the horror at length? In three simple words, "Lest we forget."●

● Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, today is Yom Ha'shoa, Holocaust Remembrance Day.

Today the annual National Days of Remembrance civic ceremony took place in the Rotunda of the Capitol. It is a special time of solemnity and sadness when the survivors of the Holocaust and all people of conscience devote special moments in remembrance to the 6 million Jewish victims of the Holocaust.

As a founding member of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, I am proud of the commitment made by this Congress and this Nation to officially recognized and commemorate this uniquely tragic event, and to sensitize our collective conscience so that we will be able to better understand how this living hell could have been allowed to happen. Its enormity is almost impossible to comprehend, yet comprehend we must. How can we understand the purposeful annihilation of 1 million children? It is, as Elie Wiesel says, an act against creation itself.

My 3-year-old granddaughter Deborah is also the granddaughter of Holocaust survivors Hilda and Sol Fox. Deborah and her family were among over 1,000 people who gathered at Temple Beth Sholom in Miami Beach on Sunday, April 29, to commemorate and remember those who now live only in our memories. The speaker was Elie Wiesel, the horror of the Holocaust his overwhelming message. "I have a sad notion," he said, "that the world did not care." The loss of an entire Jewish community in Hungary occurred as world leadership did nothing to save them. There were lost opportunities to do so, to bomb the rail lines to Auschwitz. Perhaps we would not have been able to save them all, but our tragic indictment is the sin of not trying, for failing to be our brother's keeper.

As a member of the Holocaust Council, I pledge to do all I can to see that we remember, that we not fail to understand that such indifference is nothing less than sin of commission, the creation of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, D.C., will be a living memorial to those who perished in the Holocaust and will help us to learn the lessons that must be learned so that we can save ourselves from ourselves.

For the interest of my colleagues I would like to share the Miami Herald article about the memorial service led by Elie Wiesel and attended by Deborah Lehman and her tearful grandmother Hilda Fox.

[From the Miami Herald, Apr. 30, 1984]

HOLOCAUST IN HUNGARY RECOUNTED: WORLD DID NOT CARE, AUTHOR SAYS

(By Fred Strasser)

Early in 1944, the Jews of Elie Wiesel's village in northern Hungary thought the war would soon be over. Only 30 miles to the east, Soviet guns pounded weakening German positions. Nazism, it seemed, had run its course without a takeover of Hungary. They felt they had escaped its terrors.

But in March the German occupation began, and within three months the Jews of Wiesel's village, Sighet, and of all Transylvania, were gone.

"Let us remember," Wiesel said Sunday in a Holocaust Memorial Day service. "Let us remember. Our task, simply because we are here, is to remember."

Looking over 1,000 somber faces at Temple Beth Sholom in Miami Beach, Wiesel, a novelist who has become the persistent voice of that terrible recollection, said:

"Those who took up arms perished, as did those who did not. Those who resisted persecution perished, as did those who did not.

"They all shared the same destiny. They were condemned for what they were, sons and daughters of an ancient people. All the victims were not Jews, but all the Jews were victims."

Wiesel, chairman of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, has spent the memorial day in Miami Beach before, but this year has been dedicated to the experience he most closely recalls.

It is the 40th anniversary of the Hungarian Holocaust, the slaughter that took place in his homeland in the twilight of the war.

"What took place happened with an amazing speed," Wiesel said. "Before, because of the political situation, because of a certain influence, because of money, the Jewish population was more or less protected. It was a normal life.

"Then, on March 19, the German army invaded. At first, there was nothing. They were polite; they smiled at people; they even gave away chocolates. I recall a neighbor of ours, a Jewish woman, and a German officer kissed her hand. That gesture made a deep impression. Imagine, a German officer kissed the hand of a Jewish lady! What we didn't know were the detailed plans that lay behind this guile."

Those plans were executed swiftly and efficiently.

On March 29, the Jews were forced to wear identifying yellow stars.

An April 5, Wiesel's province was transferred from Hungarian to German control as a military zone.

On April 19, his neighborhood was declared a ghetto and closed off from the outside.

On May 11, the first transport trains left for the concentration camps.

On May 18, the last transport departed.

Wiesel, the sad-eyed survivor, asked once again a question he has asked a thousand times:

"Why didn't we know? It remains a mystery to me. It was there. Auschwitz was in The New York Times. I don't know if it would have made a difference, but why didn't we know? Why didn't anyone go on the radio and tell us, 'Jews of Hungary, don't go.' I have a sad notion," he said. "The world did not care."

The week of Holocaust-related activities that began Sunday includes a new exhibit meant to propose the same notion. "And the World Knew and Kept Silent" is a collection of aerial photographs of the Auschwitz concentration camp taken by the U.S. Air Force in 1944. The collection, which belongs to the National Archives, is being shown for the first time at the South Dade Jewish Community Center.

On Sunday, as survivors of the camps lit candles at Beth Sholom, they vowed that such silence would never again cover the facts of the Holocaust, that its lessons will be passed from that aging generation to its children.

Said Alex Hofrichter, the son of two survivors, "We shall tell the world of the depths to which humanity can sink, and the heights which were attained even in hell itself."●

● Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, a Days of Remembrance ceremony, sponsored by the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, was held at noon today in the Capitol Rotunda. I was honored to represent the House at that ceremony and I submit the attached copy of my remarks made at the ceremony:

DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE, APRIL 30, 1984

Mr. Chairman, this is a Day of Remembrance. Recently the Smithsonian National Museum of Natural History held a poignant exhibition of Jewish religious artifacts known as the Precious Legacy. These were selected from a massive collection which the Nazis had gathered from synagogues all over Czechoslovakia and brought to Prague as part of an insidious plan to mark the annihilation of the Jewish people. As the culmination of that plan, Heinrich Himmler intended to make a gift of the collection to Adolf Hitler after the Jewish people had been totally liquidated. It was to be called the Museum to an Extinct Race. Hitler is gone. The precious Legacy remains as a reminder of the madness and horror of Hitler's time.

This is a Day of Remembrance. Almost 40 years have gone by since the end of World War II when the American soldiers liberated the death camps and revealed to an unbelieving world the shame and barbarism of the Nazis. One would have thought that such revelations would have so kindled the conscience of every civilized country that ceremonies and memorials would have been created to keep alive forever the determination that such evils would never happen again. National memorials are taking place only in two nations—the United States and Israel.

This a day of remembrance. We remember the words of General Dwight D. Eisenhower spoken in 1945 when he said "I visited every nook and cranny of the camp because I felt it my duty to be a position from then on to testify at firsthand about these things in case there ever grew up at home the belief or assumption that the stories of Nazi brutality were just propaganda."

This is a day of remembrance, remembering Elie Wiesel who survived the death camps to become a ringing voice of conscience to arouse a callous world and to remind it of its indifference to the destruction of millions of innocent human beings by the Nazis. Last Thursday I joined my colleagues in the House and the Senate to vote proudly to bestow a gold medal in the name of the people of the United States upon Elie.

We remember his soul-searing words in the White House in 1979:

"Those of us who were there," he said "are haunted by those whose lives were turned into ashes, by those whose cemetery was the sky". . . . and Elie spoke of a young boy. "Father," said the young boy, "Is it painful to die? Must I die?" The father answers: "Think of something else, my son. Think of tomorrow."

For the young boy, Tomorrow never came.

This is a day of remembrance. We remember the men and women of other faiths whose superb courage and fierce determination saved the lives of Jews destined for death, providing them with the tomorrows the young boy never saw.

We are thankful that there were so many—more than we will ever know, but yet so very few for the task that had to be done.

This is a day of remembrance for Raoul Wallenberg, the Swedish diplomat, for Oskar Schindler, a German, for Marion Pritchard, one of the brave Dutch, for Italians in Azzizi, the courageous Danes and for all of the people of good will whose names border the path leading up to the memorial of Yad Vashem in Jerusalem. To those names must be added the town of Le Chambon in France whose good deeds might still be unknown except for their telling in the book by Philip Hallie wherein he relates the story of the farmers, peasants, and housewives led by their pastor Andre Trocme who took into their homes thousands of refugees from all over Europe, risking their lives and the lives of their families.

"Why did you do it?" A farmer was asked. He replied with a shrug of his shoulders, "Where else could they go?"

There was Daniel Trocme, who was seized by the SS because he sheltered several hundred Jewish children. His passionate plea for the children was to strong that his captors finally said: "You must be one of them. Otherwise you would not defend them so." He was put to death with the children he sought to save.

We bear witness today to the tragedy and to the triumphs of the Holocaust. In Elie's words: "We must tell, awaken, alert and repeat over and over again without respite or pause the stories that have no end."

We mourn for the millions of innocent victims. We take hope from those whose decency and superlative courage ennobled the best in mankind.

We pledge to the lost and to the living—we will not forget.●

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, the Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust will insure that the terrible reality of the Holocaust is burned in the memory of history.

A young child used these words to describe the Holocaust: "They brought live people to a place called Auschwitz and made them dead." Six million Jews and millions of others were exterminated by the Nazis. More than 400,000 Hungarian Jews alone were murdered in a 46-day period beginning on May 15, 1944.

But 6 million is not just a number. It is a reminder of the parents and children who perished in the death chambers of Auschwitz, Birkenau, and other camps. It is a personal reminder of my grandparents and many uncles, aunts, and cousins lost in that awful barbarity. It is a reminder that the goal of Hitler's "final solution" was the obliteration of all Jewish life and Jewish culture.

We should remember as well those who resisted the madness of the Holocaust. Forty-one years ago yesterday the Jews of the Warsaw ghetto organized to resist their deportation to the concentration camps. These Jewish fighters' desire for freedom spurred them to persevere for nearly 1 month against the infinitely better armed German troops. We should also remember Raoul Wallenberg. Wallenberg, the man known as the "Angel of Rescue," helped save the lives of nearly 100,000 Hungarian Jews. Subsequently he himself was taken prisoner by the Russian Army in 1945.

The philosopher Karl Jaspers said of the Holocaust:

That which has happened is a warning. To forget it is guilt. It must be continually remembered. It was possible for this to happen, and it remains possible for it to happen again at any time. Only in knowledge can it be prevented.

By remembering the victims of the Holocaust we can help to forestall future atrocities. We must keep their memory alive so that future generations will remember and understand where unabated totalitarian leads.●

● Mr. D'AMOURS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and sorrow that I join with many of my colleagues in commemorating the Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust. We can be proud that we have never allowed ourselves to forget this horrendous event and we can be proud of those who courageously survived and who remind us that we must never forget. We feel great sorrow for those who died and who were taken from us in a grotesque instance of man's inhumanity to man, we feel great sorrow over this example of human weakness that created a period in which humanity turned against itself with a vengeance and a fury.

The 6 million Jews who died at Hitler's hands must always be remembered because the Holocaust teaches us many lessons that we should never forget. The continuing massacre of innocent people in nations around the world demonstrates that we have not yet learned those lessons. We must learn to live in peace with one another before we destroy ourselves. If we have learned nothing else from the Holocaust, let it be that life is sacred and must be revered. We must learn that lesson and practice it if we hope to pass on to our children a world of peace and justice.

And let us remember that the forces that inspired and fueled the Holocaust have not disappeared. They exist today and present a continuing danger to the State of Israel and the diaspora. The lessons of the Holocaust serve as a psychological shield against such forces. While we can never fully understand or share the deep suffering and anguish the survivors of the Holocaust have known nor the pain and suffering of those who died, we can pledge to work with one another to insure that such an event will never occur again. May they rest in peace. Shalom.●

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, today we have set aside a special order so that this body may observe the Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust. This is a solemn moment, in which the Nation recalls the tragedy which befell European Jewry. It is the duty of all of us to keep the horror of the Holocaust fresh in our minds, for it is the only way that we can prevent a recurrence of such a genocide. We can never educate ourselves enough about the Holocaust.

It is fitting, Mr. Speaker, that Elie Weisel is the chairman of the commemoration held today in the Capitol rotunda. This man's work stands as a monument to the victims of the Holocaust. He has, for readers all over the world, made the Holocaust come alive. The Holocaust has left its imprint on the conscience of humanity. By commemorating the event we redouble our vigilance. Such an outrage can never be allowed to happen again.●

● Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to join my colleagues in this special order to commemorate the 6 million Jewish men, women, and children who died at the hands of the Nazi forces 40 years ago. Unfortunately, with the passage of time, the vision and understanding of these sickening events become obscure in the minds of many individuals. And for younger people, this is an event from the distant past which may have hardly any real meaning at all. By continually taking the opportunity to reflect on the history of nazism, and its war against the Jewish people, we play a vital role in raising the consciousness of those who might not remember, and the growing number of those who might not otherwise know about the Holocaust at all.

The most effective means of making certain that the American people have a basic understanding of this bleak period in history is to make a special effort to insure that the realities of the Holocaust are brought before the people of our Nation, to bring a sense of reality to the words we speak. I recently had the opportunity to visit the Holocaust memorial in Israel at Yad Vashem. There is no experience like it. Anyone who witnesses the dazed and defeated faces of the men, women, and children being swept from their homes, packed in cattle cars and transported to the concentration camps, cannot help but be moved.

Too often, people do not have a firm understanding of the American commitment to the preservation of Israel or our strong determination to eradicate anti-Semitic activity in this country and throughout the world. The absolute vulnerability of the Jews to the Nazis during World War II has stiffened the resolve of many to guarantee that the nation which has been created from the ashes of the Jewish people will be able to live in peace and security. There is a basic feeling within the Jewish community that every possible step must be taken to insure that an event of such horrible magnitude will never occur again. In order to achieve this objective, the visual experience of the Holocaust must be made available to every citizen of this country. In the United States, we are moving closer to meeting this goal with today's groundbreaking for the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum. This is a momentous occasion for which all individuals associated with this project deserve our recognition and special thanks.

Mr. Speaker, the Holocaust represents one of the worst experiences the world has endured. The fact that one man was able to secure the political and military power that permitted him to organize and execute a plan of such massive destruction must never be stripped from our memories. We must not delude ourselves; it is entirely possible for such actions to be repeated. It is my hope that the Days of Remembrance of the Holocaust will serve as a catalyst for reaffirming the determination of the American people to prevent such inhuman behavior from ever again prevailing while the world stands by.●

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to join my colleagues in commemorating the Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust which is currently being observed throughout the country.

The Holocaust was one of the darkest chapters in human history, one that must never be forgotten. It is estimated that over 10 million people perished at the hands of the Nazis during the Holocaust. An estimated 6 million of those executed were Jews. The systematic slaughter that occurred at the death camps was one of the most abhorrent and heinous crimes in all of human history. In Buchenwald, Germany, where medical experiments were carried out, there were 56,549 deaths. At the Dachau death camp in Munich there were more than 40,000 deaths. The most prolific and repugnant of all the concentration camps were located in Poland where gas chambers and ovens were used to exterminate the Jews as part of the Nazi's master plan to exterminate all the Jews from Europe. At Auschwitz the estimates for the total number of deaths range from 1,000,000 to 2,500,000. At Chelmo death camp the death estimates range from 170,000 to 360,000. At Treblinka death camp there were approximately 750,000 deaths. Those who survived the horrors of these camps were near starvation and had been subjected to a multitude of physical and psychological abuses at the hands of the Nazis. That most of these survivors were able to persevere is a testament to their courage and immense personal fortitude.

The memory of the millions of innocent human beings who perished at the hands of the Nazis shall live forever in the hearts and minds of all those who cherish human freedom, human decency, and human courage. To turn our backs on the Holocaust would indeed be another inexcusable crime. The harsh memory of the Holocaust must be preserved as a tragic reminder to all future generations of the evil and brutality that man is capable of and to insure that the horror and evil of the Holocaust is never repeated.

Yet, while we pay tribute to both victims and the survivors of the Holocaust, we must not forget the perpetrators of those atrocities, especially the Nazi war criminals who still remain at large. While it is not possible to establish the exact number of Nazi criminals who participated in the slaughter of innocent human beings in the Holocaust and the number of those still at large, it is important to recognize that the number who did participate was quite large and quite extensive. There were two main groups of criminals: the instigators, the planners, and the commanders, who directed the killing operations or with whose knowledge, agreement, and passive participation these acts were committed; and the actual implementors of the plans and commands at various levels of authority and initiative. The first group, to which the high command of the German Government belonged—the heads of the Nazi Party, the heads of the Gestapo, the S.S., and the head office for the Security of the Reich—numbered many hundreds. The second group included hundreds of thousands of people—members of the Gestapo, the S.S., the Waffen S.S. units, the S.D., the national police, officials from special departments of the Foreign Ministry and Ministry of the Interior who dealt with Jewish matters, the staff of the concentration camps, doctors who practiced in the concentration camps, and other members of the armed forces. The above number of Nazi criminals who participated actively in the Holocaust is not an exaggeration.

This number, however, does not include the collaborators from the Nazi conquered territories. These number in the tens of thousands; collaborators who participated in the planning and execution of the murder of Jews, Soviet prisoners of war, and local civilian populations. Many of these perpetrators have never been brought to justice and many have been given refuge in countries like Paraguay, Argentina, and Chile. In January of this year another appeal was sent to the Government of Chile by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith urging the detention of Walter Rauff, a former S.S. colonel wanted for wartime killings of as many as 250,000 Jews in mobile gas vans. Because the high number of war criminals, legal constraints, and the passage of time, many of these criminals will never be brought to justice. Despite these problems, as of 1979, the West German Government alone has investigated 84,403 persons for suspected war crimes and has convicted 6,432. Many of the war criminals that are known to be alive are still at large. The knowledge that persons charged with Nazi war crimes have taken sanctuary in countries which refuse to extradite them to face their charges continues to haunt the survivors of the Holocaust and all of us who value justice.

I am outraged that this tragic situation is allowed to persist and I have authored legislation to help bring this final chapter of the Holocaust to a just end. My bill, H.R. 3036, would suspend all U.S. military and economic assistance to those countries known to be harboring Nazi war criminals, including Syria, Argentina, Paraguay, Chile, and Canada, until those countries take the necessary steps to extradite those criminals. By bringing the remaining Nazi war criminals to justice we would be honoring the memory of those who did not survive the Holocaust and we would be making life a little easier for those who did.

This Day of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust is an important step in firmly implanting the memory of the Holocaust and the permanent documentation of this tragic event in the anals of human history. The horror of the Holocaust and the memory of the millions who perished should never be forgotten and all of us who value justice and human freedom should continually work to insure that the Holocaust is not forgotten and that we all learn from the tragedy of the Holocaust so that it may never occur again.●

● Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for this opportunity to commemorate Yom Ha'shoa, the Days of Remembrance of the Jewish Holocaust.

This time of year is one of both festive celebrations and somber remembrances for Jews. The joyous activities of Passover, and the anniversary of the birth of the State of Israel, are darkened by the horrific memories of the Holocaust which left 6 million Jews dead. Although the Holocaust experience is unique to Jews, it serves as a tragic lesson to all of us. The Holocaust vividly demonstrates the danger of combining totalitarianism and religious hatred in an atmosphere of indifference on the part of the community of nations. As we remember the Jews who perished at the hand of the Nazis, let us resolve to challenge violations of human rights wherever and whenever they occur.

The effects of the Holocaust have been felt throughout the world. The great exodus from Eastern Europe which was triggered by the Holocaust, has scattered Jewish families far from their ancestral homes. They have enriched many societies, including our own, and have become a powerful moral force. Their example reaffirms for each of us the strength of the human spirit to survive even the most severe oppression. Their lives are truly an inspiration and I am pleased to join my colleagues in paying tribute to them.●

● Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, today we remember a tragedy which was perpetrated on an innocent group of people in such a calculated, heartless fashion as to be nearly unbelievable. The Holocaust left its scar not only on the Jewish people, but on the entire populace of this Earth. It is a painful episode in the world's history to be remembered, especially for those of us who had relatives among those tortured and killed at the hands of the Nazis. But, painful as it is, it is absolutely essential that we take the time to remember this outrageous crime against humanity and that we assure that future generations never forget the horror of the Holocaust.

Remembering what happened in that period of annihilation must be the basis for preventing similar tragedies in the future. Unfortuntely, intolerance continues to plague this world of ours and acts of man's inhumanity to man, though not of the scale and magnitude of the Holocaust, do continue to occur. We have an obligation to those whose sacrifices we recall today to do everything we possibly can to eliminate that intolerance and curb the inhumane acts which continue to occur.

For the Jewish people, this means that we must continue to work to permit the free and open practice of their religious beliefs everywhere they live, to encourage other governments to allow free emigration, and to maintain our commitment to the independence and security of Israel. To the world at large, this means maintaining our commitment to principles we hold dear and working to secure lasting peace among peoples of differing views.

Let us not forget the tragedy of the Holocaust. Let us continue our vigilance against another such tragedy ever occurring.●

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join with my colleagues during these Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust, in recalling the barbaric atrocities committed by the Nazis during one of the darkest periods in the history of mankind.

The world must never forget the unspeakable crimes systematically perpetrated against the Jewish people and against all humanity, and we must continue to keep the lessons of this tragedy alive for all generations to follow. Out of our efforts come hope and renewal culminating in an unwaivering determination to prevent future genocides and defend liberty, self-determination, and religious freedom for all.

This commemoration serves to remind us that human rights violations around the world must not go unchallenged. We must continue to be vigilant, and the memory of the Holocaust should strengthen our commitment to resist the many forces around the world which are working to undermine the advances made by civilized nations living in freedom.

Mr. Speaker, on these solemn Days of Remembrance, I join with the many Holocaust survivors living in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am honored to represent, and all Jews throughout the world, as we remember the victims of the Holocaust and renew our commitment to preventing another such genocide from ever occurring again.●

● Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to join my distinguished colleagues from both sides of the aisle in this special order commemorating the Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust. It is fitting that we pause to reflect on what the Holocaust means to us as Americans, and I wish to thank my colleagues for their participation today.

On Yom Ha'shoa—the last day of Passover—it is traditional for Jews everywhere to recite "Yizkor," or the memorial prayer for the dead. This Hebrew prayer is said in remembrance of all the departed souls from Biblical times to the present, including those who lost their lives during one of the darkest chapters in human history, the Nazi Holocaust.

Although it is man's nature to put aside unpleasant thoughts, we cannot afford to forget the painful memory of the 6 million Jewish men, women, and children who died at the hands of the Nazi regime. Even though we who were not victims can never fully comprehend the awful reality of the Holocaust, we have a solemn obligation to those who perished in the flames of human hatred to come as close to comprehension as we can and to be conscientious in our remembrance so that a similar atrocity will never again be visited upon any people, anywhere.

It is precisely for this reason that Congress approved in 1980 the creation of a U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council. This organization, under the outstanding leadership of Mark Tailsman and Elie Wiesel, has been charged with the responsibility of creating a living memorial museum to the victims of the Holocaust and to honor their memories in annual Days of Remembrance ceremonies such as the one held earlier today in the Capitol Rotunda. I commend the members of the Council for their efforts to ensure that the United States will continue to remind the world of the horrors of the persecution and genocide of the Holocaust.

During these Days of Remembrance, I urge my colleagues, my constituents and the people of the world to reflect, and to remember the lessons on the Holocaust not only during this week, but in their everyday lives. We who live in freedom must never compromise in our advocacy on behalf of others who seek the same. Let us commit ourselves to the protection of human rights throughout the world with the heavy weight on our conscience of all those, living and dead, who were denied that protection.●

● Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, today is a sad yet important day in that we are observing a day of remembrance for the victims of the Holocaust. It is a solemn duty for those of us in Congress, as it must be in legislative bodies and other places around the world, to once again detail the gruesome tragedy that took place during the years of World War II. At that time, Adolph Hitler established a twisted government policy and oversaw its implementation, resulting in the deaths of over 6 million Jewish people.

Hitler predicted in 1939 that the coming world war would bring about "the annihilation of the Jewish race throughout Europe." He then set about to accomplish that aim, and directed that Jewish men, women, and children in Germany, Poland, and any territory invaded by the Nazis be harassed, separated from the rest of society, driven out of their homes, placed in ghettos in large cities or sent to concentration camps, where they would be tortured and killed. When this particularly dark chapter in our world history was completed, over 6 million Jews were killed by the Nazis. Hitler's reign of terror and inhumane barbarism came to a halt with his defeat in World War II.

As I mentioned earlier, it is indeed our duty as Government officials to remember publicly the awful events which took place during the Holocaust. It is vital that each of our children today hear of this experience, and have it ingrained forever in their own memories. In that way, we can hope that our expressed horror at these murders will be passed on to future generations, thus preventing a Holocaust from ever taking place again.

It is impossible for me to overestimate the importance of any and all organizations taking part in remembering the Holocaust, be they governments, schools, places of worship, or any civic group. As a State Senator in Pennsylvania, I was honored to participate in several events that served to spread the story of the Holocaust throughout the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. In fact, I number among my friends some of the fortunate people who were survivors of the Holocaust. I will always benefit by the expertise they have provided me on this grim subject. We should all dedicate our efforts today to those who were forced to live through the hell known as the Holocaust, and share their hope that it will never even come close to happening again.●

● Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of sharing with my colleagues some observations on a bleak moment in world and American history. Yesterday was Yom Hashoa—a day of memorial for the victims of the Nazi Holocaust of World War II.

This Congress and its predecessors have seen fit to dedicate 1 week each year both to the memory of this tragedy and to the need to benefit from its terrible lessons. Throughout this great Nation, Jews and Gentiles and all colors of America—white, black, red, and yellow—are joining together to reflect and to study the events of the Holocaust so that such events may never be repeated.

It is ironic that a word can, in time, come to mean the exact opposite of what it was originally intended to mean. "Cleave," which can mean either to cut apart or to come together, is one example, and "Holocaust," which once referred to a purifying fire from God, now refers to a Satanic, despicable and unconscionable act by one group against an entire people, and while the holocaust of Biblical times scourged those who treated God's laws in a cavalier way, the modern Holocaust was visited upon the Jews of Eastern Europe for the opposite reason—because they refused to disavow God's laws or surrender their heritage.

The Holocaust is the ultimate act of racism, genocide honed to a precise science. The Holocaust refers to the systematic murder of 6 million Jews by the Nazis and their accomplices from 1933 to 1945.

To be sure, other people suffered severely during World War II. We dare not forget the millions of soldiers who were starved to death by the Nazis, or the countless numbers of gypsies and European nationals who were put to death or who died as a result of the war.

The Holocaust, however, was not an act of war. The planned extermination of Jews was not connected to any military operation. It served no strategic purpose. Others died in World War II, but only the Jews died in the Holocaust. My friends, it is essential that we keep the memory of that event alive. It is essential that we teach its lessons to our children and that we, as leaders of the greatest and freest Nation on Earth, never turn away from those lessons.

The Holocaust is example par excellence of Lord Acton's caveat—"power tends to corrupt; absolute power, to corrupt absolutely." Let no one have too much power. Let no nation, no ruler, no idea, no system have power without checks and balances lest we repeat history. The Holocaust makes vivid the truth of that message. Western civilization depends upon a fine balance between social law and individual rights, between civic concerns and individual freedoms. When that balance is skewed, disaster ensues.

The Nazis showed us how public law can be used destructively. In the hands of tyrants, it can be fashioned to deprive people of liberty first and then of life. It can serve to pervert and corrupt if justice is not its goal. In the hands of the unscrupulous, the uncontrolled, the unbalanced, the law can undo persons, societies, and even civilization itself. That is the message left to us by the Holocaust. It is a message that we must pass along to tomorrow's leaders.

The Holocaust also teaches us about lies and the terrible power of lies. No lie is too inhuman, too cruel, too absurd to be believed if it is told often enough and backed by terror.

The Holocaust must be remembered. Its terrible truths must serve as a lasting reminder that the survival of civilization depends upon the survival of each and every group of people and that if we are each other's keepers, we can also become each other's killers.

Of course, suffering was not the only legacy of the Holocaust. In remembering those who died during those terrible years, we must not forget those who survived. Their triumph over death remains a lasting memorial to the enduring nature of human life and to the finest qualities of the human spirit. These survivors stubbornly refused to abandon hope even when all hope seemed lost. That stubbornness became a kind of courage, and it was that courage which allowed them to cheat the Nazi death machine of its ultimate goal—the total destruction of the Jewish race.

The story of the Holocaust abounds with incidents of personal heroism. To our generation, which is still searching for heroes, the Holocaust offers heroes and heroines by the dozen. To maintain sanity in a world gone mad is itself heroic. Look at how many escaped to the inescapable. Remember the thousands who resisted the irresistable. Hear the many who lived to describe the indescribable. To learn from them is vital if we are to grow as a civilized people.

And not all of the heroes of the Holocaust were Jewish. There were heroic Christians, too, like the Danes and Swedes who rescued 7,000 Jews and the common folk who braved great danger to offer refuge to fugitives from the Nazis. These were not saints who cared nothing about their own lives or safety. They were simply good people whose integrity and values left them no choice but to act. To act righteously when the world is wrong, bravely and forthrightly when the world is craven, is to be truly Christian, truly Jewish, truly human, truly secular, truly holy.

Our children must know that no matter how dark the night, dawn will arrive. I had the opportunity last year to visit Yad Vashem, Israel's memorial to the Holocaust. No experience is so penetrating and so totally overwhelming than to stand in that cavernous memorial and remember.

There is a saying, I am told, which is attributed to an ancient rabbi. A person, he said, should have at all times two scraps of paper in his pockets. On one scrap should be written, "dust and ashes, ashes and dust am I." The other should say, "for my sake was the world created."

This is to teach us that we each have a right to be here and that each and every one of us is responsible, totally responsible, for this world of ours.

So here is the moral of the Holocaust. If we are not all teachers, if we are not all purveyors of the truth, seekers of justice for all and makers of peace between all, if we are not all responsible for this world which was created just for our sake.

Then ashes and dust, dust and ashes are we. That message is an American message and a message for all Americans. Thank you.●

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, almost 40 years have passed since we became fully aware of the crimes that the Nazis committed against humanity with scientific precision. Never before in man's often violent history had we known of a horror of such magnitude. In all that time, our collective sense of revulsion, outrage, and disbelief has never diminished for this is a hurt which time can never fully heal.

But our reaction now to the knowledge of the Holocaust is often to hide our emotions deep inside, to try to keep them far below the surface of our daily lives. We speak out against such horrors but we do so carefully, so as not to disturb the delicate balance of our emotions. But if we are to prevent such madness from ever darkening our world again, we must force ourselves away from the comfort of our daily lives and remember the suffering and indignities of those who were lost.

It is for this purpose that we observe the Days of Remembrance for the Victims of the Holocaust each year. We remember those brave men, women, and children whose precious lives were destroyed in one stroke. We reflect on the greatness and beauty those individuals might have known had their lives not been cut short. But more important, we force ourselves to think about those terrible times so that man will never again commit such heinous crimes against his fellow man.

We remember those millions with a great sense of loss but from this sadness we draw strength and hope for our future. Only we can prevent such tragedy. The observance of the Days of Remembrance reminds us that we must.●

● Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, reflecting over the course of history, I am struck by the awesome scope of human capability. Indeed, one needs only to study the civilization of ancient Athens, a Shakespeare sonnet, or the circuitry inside a microcomputer to appreciate human capacity of enlightenment. Yet there have been too many times when man has turned his ingenuity and imagination against his fellow man as he did in Nazi Germany. No history lesson is complete without a thorough examination of our darkest moments.

Perhaps the most significant aspect of the Holocaust was the methodic ease with which one nation sought to exorcise an entire race. Hannah Arendt referred to this inclination for unconscious brutality as the "banality of evil." In spite of this horrific tendency, there were Holocaust survivors. They and their children are here today—in America, Israel and all over the world.

Their presence means something. Through their bravery, valor, and will they triumphed over the banality of those who sought their destruction. Their survival provides the hope that we can rise above our weakness. Our reflections on the Holocaust cannot heal the wounded or restore lives yet through them, we too, fight that unmitigated propensity to destroy one another without a second thought. Simply by calling to consciousness our own weaknesses we acknowledge the power we can exercise in checking the misapplication of our capabilities as human beings.

It is vital to our society that every generation be encouraged to take on such introspection and reassessment of its powers and limitations. For it is a society which acknowledges its blackest historical periods and openly admits to the heinousness of such weaknesses that is best able to forge ahead to a human and positive future. It is only with a realistic recognition of our weaknesses that we are able to comprehend how far we have come and how far we have to go.●

● Mr. REID. As Congressmen, it is not uncommon for us to participate in activities on the steps of the U.S. Capitol, whether it be meeting with constituents or joining people for photographs.

Yet, no event has affected me more than one day, during the spring of 1983, when I joined a special group on those historic steps for another reason. Though I stood with others, most of them unknown to me, none of us were strangers. For, on that memorable day, we shared a purpose. We shared an identity.

We had united ourselves for a 1-day fast and memorial service—a commemoration of the Holocaust of five decades before—to remind our own Nation and the rest of the world that freedom, an endowment so precious to us all, is not universal.

As we each proudly wore the name of a different Soviet refusenik—a person who is repeatedly refused permission to emigrate from Russia—the realities of personal freedom hastened my heartbeat. I continued to visualize the words and message printed on a B'nai B'rith pamphlet that I had studied: "Let my people go. If you forget them, the world will forget them."

I had learned that these freedom-seeking Russian Jews, who only seek the right to practice their culture and faith without harassment, are isolated, alone and persecuted. Yet, despite the constant deprivations of religious education, culture, and lifestyle, these people continue to demonstrate the ultimate qualities of bravery. They never abandon their faith; this is the foundation of their commitment to freedom.

Strong commitment to faith and freedom, however, is not new for the Jews. Their struggle against the destructive forces of World War II—a struggle for existence that resulted in the deaths of 6 million Jews—has left a painful brand on the history and conscience of the world.

The Holocaust represented an unprecedented governmental policy to purge from the human race all people with Jewish blood in their veins, regardless of the economic, political, religious or military views or circumstances.

But, the consequences for all free societies, and the lessons to be learned by participants and bystanders alike, can and must be generalized. Because of this need to remember the atrocities, so that they will never be repeated, we will one day be able to experience and recall this historical devastation through the everpresence of a permanent reminder—the Holocaust Memorial Museum on the Nation's Capital Mall.

There is probably no more befitting location for this memorial than Washington, which is not only the capital of the United States, but, truly, the capital of the free world. It is appropriate that we should preserve this history, for, at least 45,000 concentration camp survivors call this country home—a place where they sought and found freedom.

As an American who has never had my own freedoms withheld, it is difficult for me to understand how a country could deprive its people of their basic human right to maintain their own religion and culture, or the right to leave a country that is denying them their heritage.

It is for this reason that we people of the free world must speak out for them. We must demonstrate for them. We must continue to do what we can to guarantee that, indeed, they are not forgotten.●

● Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor the memory of the 6 million Jewish victims of the Nazi Holocaust and the survivors of that atrocity. I thank my colleague from New York (Mr. GARCIA) and my other colleagues for holding this special order today. It is important to remember the tragedy of 40 years ago on this Yom Ha'shoa, day of remembrance for the Holocaust, so that society never again repeats this blemish on history.

So often we denounce man's inhumanity to man when we discuss human rights. Today, in every nation of the world there are evident human rights violations directed toward race, color and creed. Even more significant is our obligation as human beings to recall past indiscretions to prevent their happening again. The inhumanity committed against the Jewish people when Hitler reigned in Germany almost eradicated a race, a religion, and a people.

Jews traditionally remember the bitter with the sweet during holidays and celebrations. Never should a Jew forget the times in ancient Egypt when their lives were made bitter with forced labor. We remember the bitter in times of joy because life is intertwined with joy and sadness, sickness and health, blessings and unforeseeable difficulties. Thus, today, we all should remember the suffering of all peoples, the bitter and the sweet, so that no people are again threatened with extinction.

My family suffered personal losses as many other families did. The Holocaust changed the face of Judaism and history. Families were separated, villages and communities were destroyed, and Jewish objects of religious and family life were confiscated. The Jewish heritage suffered a violation, family histories, and heirlooms were lost never to be recovered. As a Jew and as an active member of the Jewish community, I stand here with great sadness that so many people were uprooted, imprisoned, tortured, and murdered.

God bless the victims of the Holocaust. We have not forgotten. God bless the survivors. We will not forget.●

● Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleague in this special order for the "Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust."

The Torah, the Five Books of Moses, admonishes all to "zakhor," to remember. As we are about to observe the 41st anniversary of the Warsaw ghetto uprising and the Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust, it is fitting that we pause to remember and to reflect on the terrible and tragic events that befell the Jews of Europe some 40-odd years ago. At the same time, we should use this occasion to renew our commitment to the future that such a Holocaust will never happen again.

Mr. Speaker, the Holocaust defies understanding and comprehension even today. Never before in human history had genocide on such a grand scale been an all-pervasive, government-directed and organized, bureaucratic policy, totally unrestricted and unchecked by moral, religious, ethical, and judicial restraints. The Holocaust was a central act of state during the Second World War. Adolf Hitler planned and asked for the Final Solution—the death of every single Jew, and even now the horror of his obsession and the fact that so many carried out his orders to exterminate are too much for the human mind to grasp—but we must remember.

We must recall what happened in the death camps of Auschwitz, Bergen-Belsen, Maijdanek, Treblinka, and others, all of whose names today are synonymous with human suffering and torture. Nor can we forget the mass murder and inhuman conditions that were inflicted upon the Jews in the ghettos of Warsaw, Vilna, and other European ghettos, and in the now infamous places such as Babi-Yar. Two-thirds of the Jewish population of the world in 1940, 6 million people, including 1 million Jewish children, were systematically and ruthlessly put to death. Apart from this inconceivable loss, we must also remember the wholesale destruction of Jewish communities, houses of worship, libraries, universities, social service organizations, and civic groups. The gas chambers, the crematoria, the medical experiments on Jewish children, the squalid life in the death camps, and all the death machines of the Nazis seem so unreal, yet they were a reality to an entire race of men, women, and children selected to die.

Even now, the events of the Holocaust remain a reality to those who were lucky or fortunate or brave enough to have survived Hitler's hell on Earth. Thus, Mr. Speaker, in commemorating the Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust, we must pay tribute to the survivors. They have used the memory of that painful experience to reach out and to seek fellow survivors to enjoy life and to help ease the pain and burden of losing their loved ones and friends in the death camps. The survivors have not stood idly by and asked for our pity. To the contrary, they have overcome the destruction and the suffering and have gone on to raise families and to become outstanding members of their communities. Despite the immeasurable suffering inflicted upon them, many have not lost their belief in God and their identity with the Jewish people.

Mr. Speaker, this special order should not only serve as a memorial to the martyred 6 million, but should inspire us to a reaffirmation of life and of the hope that man will never again witness such atrocities. We must never forget what happened in those death camps. We must reach out to our children and to everyone else's children and remind them of what happened to the Jews of Europe during World War II. We must speak out now against those voices being heard today who are denying that there ever was a Holocaust or that the blame for the occurrence of the Holocaust lies with the Jewish people. As we remember that great tragedy of the 6 million, as we remember the heroism exhibited by the Warsaw ghetto fighters in their hopeless struggle against the Nazi hordes, we must insure that never again will such murder be seen on the face of the Earth.●

● Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, once again we gather to remember, to honor, and to mourn the victims of the Holocaust of European Jewry. The fact that this has become an annual event is significant. It means that this Congress recognizes the horrific dimensions of events that occurred 40 years ago; how could we do otherwise? But is also illustrates our understanding that we must do more than identify the evil of the past, we must remember it.

By remembering, we insure that the world never forgets that a people and a culture were destroyed for all time. There are still Jews today, but the world that encompassed the Jews of Europe will never return. During the Nazi reign two-thirds of all the Jews in Europe were destroyed; with them died a cultural tradition of a thousand years. Although the fact of their existence has been extinguished, they will never be completely gone as long as we remember.

Members in this Chamber know better than most that the public never likes to be reminded of unsettling or bad news. This is one time when they must have the facts placed before them. This is one issue that we cannot afford to forget about. As lawmakers we must also review the facts, because the Holocaust was based firmly in Nazi law.

The laws were written to define Jews, to determine how Jews would be treated; then, step by step, the Jews were denied their rights. They lost their jobs, they could no longer participate in society. Next, they lost their property, or were forced to sell their titles, claims, and ownership. Finally they were separated from the rest of society and crowded into ghettos; after that the mass killing began. In Eastern Europe, the process sometimes was not so orderly. Teams of security police would rove from town to town simply exterminating the Jewish population. The expropriation of land and property followed later.

When we look back on these events we do so not to magnify this catastrophe above all others that resulted from the Nazi era. But this evil was unique among all the others. The destruction of the European Jews was a cold and careful implementation of a policy. Vast bureaucratic machinery was created to carry out that goal. And every aspect of the murder, within the context of the Third Reich, was perfectly legal.

There are many things to remember about the Holocaust. These are only some of them. As we commemorate the casualties of this abomination, we should celebrate its survivors. These witnesses contribute much to our understanding. We commend them for their courage and their ability to maintain their humanity after experiencing unimaginable evil. Today we let them know that we will not forget.●

● Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this special order commemorating Yom Ha'shoa, the "Days of Remembrance." While this day is ladened with bitterness and unbearable memories, I am proud to join with the survivors of this tragedy in honoring the dead and celebrating life.

Today's Remembrance is important, first and foremost, so that present and future generations will not forget the horror that engulfed millions of Jews just 40 years ago. The events surrounding the Holocaust were unprecedented in human history, and recollection of the depths of destruction and cruelty that can lie at the bottom of the human soul is critical to ensuring that it never happen again.

The Holocaust was more than a crime against God and humanity. It was an instance where genocide became an all-pervasive Government policy unaffected by territorial or economic advantage and unchecked by moral or religious constraints. The systematic extermination of the Jewish people was an overriding obsession of Adolf Hitler, transcending even the goal of victory in war. Even after the defeat of Nazi Germany on the Russion front, when it was evident that the Germans had lost the war, Hitler pursued the final solution.

And all of this occurred just 40 years ago—40 years in the course of mankind is a very short timespan, yet it is enough time so that a majority of the world's population has no personal recollection of these events. So, it is imperative that we remember. We must remember the number—6 million Jews died, two out of three residing in Europe and one-third of the world's Jewish population, along with countless others who were victims of a dark inferno that swallowed Europe. And, we must remember the places—Auschwitz, Dachau, Majdanek, Bergen-Belsen, Buchenwald, and others. The Torah admonishes us to "zakhor," that is, to remember—and remember we must.

Nonetheless, while we remember in honor of the memory of those who perished, we also must remember because the ghosts of the Holocaust are very much alive and walking among us throughout the world today. Now, more than ever, we must be on our guard against a growing trend of racial and religious intolerance, especially in the United States. For if one lesson of the Holocaust must not be lost, it is that the human hatred that occurred was unleashed as much by inaction and complacency as by the heinous ideology of its perpetrators.

Just last year, hundreds of anti-Semitic incidents were reported nationwide. These incidents ranged from vandalism and cemetery desecrations to arson and bombings. Furthermore, there has been an alarming rise in the number of anti-Semitic occurrences in Western Europe, including everything from swastika graffiti to machinegun murders. While these crimes have led to tougher enforcement and better laws, the fact that they occurred at all is a tragedy that must not be forgotten.

And so, today we have much to remember. We remember the destruction, death, and cruelty of the Holocaust. But, we also remember the gallant heroism of those who fought in the face of hopeless odds in resisting the Nazi exterminators. We remember the survivors, and we celebrate the joys of life and a reaffirmation of the strength of the human spirit with them. But, we also remember that constant vigilance is necessary to prevent the type of incidents we are now experiencing which shows the same hatred and cruelty as was demonstrated by the Nazis.

Finally, we remember the importance of standing up against tyranny so that the principles we believe in, and freedom itself, can be sustained. It is up to us to remember, and that is a lesson we must never forget.●

● Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to have this opportunity to participate in this year's special order to commemorate Yom Ha'shoa, or a Day of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust.

It is difficult to believe that 51 years have passed since Hitler first seized power and moved a nation to frenzy. His reign of terror and bloodshed lasted 12 years; 12 years in which Hitler methodically planned his final solution: the exterminaton of the Jewish people. Through such tools as mass murders and graves, gas chambers, crematoriums, and institutionalized slavery, he almost accomplished his goal. It was estimated in 1944, by Heinrich Himmler in a dispatch to Eichman, that over 6 million Jews had been exterminated to date, thus reducing European Jewry by approximately two-thirds.

Thirty-nine years have passed since the defeat of the Axis powers by the Allies. Already, a generation has succeeded the original survivors of the Holocaust. The concentration camps are now nothing but ruins and tourist sites, Hitler is dead and the mass graves have been bulldozed over. No more do we hear the fanatical talk of final solutions by frenzied crowds. Rather, with the passing of time, all has become settled and quiet. It is therein that lies the danger. We must never become so complacent that the Holocaust becomes nothing but a distant memory. The flame of anger and indignation concerning the near destruction of a people must never die. We must never forget—else such horrors will surely be repeated. Never again should any people be the victims of such heinous and inhuman crimes to suit the purpose of any final solution.

It is for these reasons that I completely support such special orders as this one sponsored by my colleague ROBERT GARCIA, the Evening of Commemoration through the Performing Arts, the Day of Remembrance Civic Ceremony and the establishment of a U.S. Holocaust Memorial. Only through actions such as these and mass education can we combat the fading memory that accompanies time.

My friends, this Yom Ha'shoa I appeal to you to take the time to reflect on the Holocaust. Think of the death camps, the useless and cruel deaths, the indignities, the resistance of a people and remember the children. Never forget the over 1 million children who perished at the hands of the Nazis. Remember all those who were murdered merely to complete a fanatic and insane plan. Remember—so that it will never happen again.●

● Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to remember the Holocaust. Most of us have a difficult time digging back 40 years into the past. But Holocaust survivors have no trouble at all remembering even the smallest details of the most terrible part of World War II.

And perhaps even more tragic than their memories are our own memories of how we knew what was happening, and did little or nothing to help them. Their ships sailed to our shores and we turned them away. Our planes flew over the incinerators at Auschwitz, taking photographs, but dropping no bombs.

We look back on the war and congratulate ourselves for the victory. But there was no victory for the millions who met death in the camps. And the victory for those who survived was haunted by memories of those outside the camps who knew what had happened but did not lend a hand.

For 40 years, survivors have determined to insure that this never happens again. And that means that it never happens again to any people of any race in any nation. Never again.

Of course, the threat of holocaust is always with us. And the threat of holocaust is usually accompanied by a threat of genocide.

Whether the threat occurs in the Soviet Union of Southeast Asia or with Indians in Nicaragua, we must join the Holocaust survivors in saying, "Never again."

We cannot allow ourselves to rationalize that the lives of 600 Indians in Central America or 600,000 refugees in Kampuchea are not as important as 6,000,000 Jews in Germany. In the eyes of God, lives are precious in any circumstance.

So when we remember the Holocaust and those who did and did not survive, let us also remember the possibility of holocaust in our own day and in the days ahead.

We cannot afford to forget how it happened, how we looked the other way, and that the survivors in our midst force us to face the truth. If this ever happens again, it will be because good men and women knew and did nothing to stop it.

We cannot let that happen.●

● Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, today I join my colleagues as we pause from our daily routines to remember the 6 million Jews and other ethnic, religious, and political groups annihilated in Europe during the Nazi reign of terror.

This time has been set aside by request from Mr. GARCIA and my other colleagues as part of the national observance which began yesterday, April 29, with Holocaust Remembrance Day. I commend my colleagues highly for their efforts to insure that this legislative body does its part in remembering the victims of so great a tragedy. As representatives of this great Nation that has long been the symbol of hope and freedom for the oppressed peoples of the world, we cannot help but acknowledge our responsibility to insure that the lessons of the Holocaust are never forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, it is not as simple as remembering the people who lost their lives because they were born into a certain religious or cultural group. It is not enough to commemorate the courage and strength of spirit of those who risked their lives to save others from a terrible fate. Unless we are constantly aware of the circumstances in which we live today which could once again give rise to such a terrible tragedy, we are not truly honoring the memory of those who have died. The Jews in the Soviet Union who are today being persecuted for trying to emigrate, the Bahai's in Iran who are being killed indiscriminately for refusing to disavow their religious heritage, and their fellow human beings all over the world who are being hunted down and oppressed are all the inheritors of the legacy of man's inhumanity to his fellow man—a legacy which spawned the Holocaust.

Recently, I had the opportunity to visit the home in Amsterdam where Anne Frank and her family lived in hiding and in terror of the Nazi occupation troops. The home is a living memorial to tell the terrible story of the Holocaust, so that new generations will never allow this to happen again.

Mr. Speaker, there is much economic, political, and social unrest in the world today that could yet engender another tragedy like that of 40 years ago. We must work to alleviate those conditions which could create an environment capable of spawning the evil of the Nazi era. That is our vigil to keep for the world today, and our duty to those whose memory we honor.●

● Mr. BATEMAN. Mr. Speaker, the 1930's was one of the darkest eras in human history. The world economy was suffering from the most severe depression of the 20th century. Hunger was fast becoming a way of life around the world, and world tensions were at a dangerously high level due to the dissatisfaction many people felt with the economic policies of established governments. The climax of this dissatisfaction was the rise of the Nazi Party to power in Germany.

The fascist Nazi regime represented all that Americans abhor. Adolf Hitler's dedication to the establishment of a German empire and the creation of a so-called superrace for this empire was the antithesis of the goals and ideals which underlie Western civilization and our Christian-Judaic heritage.

The history of the world contains too many examples of cruel and premeditated persecution of ethnic and religious groups. Jewish people through the centuries have been the victim of such persecution, but human history records no persecution as evil, debased, and widespread as that inflicted on the Jews by Adolf Hitler and his Nazi henchmen. Not only did Hitler intend to remove Jews from his "perfect society," he openly proclaimed that he intended to exterminate them as he added more and more conquered territory to the Nazi empire.

The people of the world must never forget the Holocaust. The memories of Treblinka, Buchenwald, Auschwitz, and Dachau, as horrible as they are, must remain in our minds so that we can understand the horror associated with a repressive totalitarian regime.

Even today, some Jews are not at peace. Israel, our ally in the Middle East, is under nearly constant terrorist attack. In addition, few Jews in the Soviet Union are allowed to emigrate to join their families and friends in other nations, particularly Israel. The United States must continue to address this persecution of the Jewish community.

As we in the Congress observe the Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust, let us reflect upon the pain and horror experienced by the Jews, and other people who were subjected to the barbaric and obscene fascist persecution. As a humane, peace-loving society, America must be ever vigilant and exert itself to deter such crimes against humanity.●

● Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I address this body today not only as a Member of Congress, but also as a member of the Jewish community. I rise in order to remember, honor, and commemorate those fellow Jews who perished in the most tragic event ever to occur in the history of the civilized world, and also to celebrate the ideal of Jewish identity and distinctiveness.

Chanukah, Purim, Passover, Tisha B'Av, these holidays throughout the Jewish calendar all have at least one thing in common. They commemorate an important characteristic of the Jewish people: Adaptability tempered with continuity. For on each of these occasions a malicious attact or an attempted genocide was made on the Jewish people. Yet, on each of these occasions, the Jewish people not only survived the attack, but preserved their traditions as well.

Despite the long history of persecutions and attempted genocides made on the Jewish people, the Holocaust was allowed to happen while the rest of the world looked the other way in a policy of isolation and professed ignorance. And so on this Day of Remembrance, I ask you to recall once more the horrors of 40 years ago: Remember the prison, labor, and extermination camps where 4 million Jews were gassed and where an additional 2 million died of starvation, disease, and torture. Dachau, Oranienburg, Auschwitz, Buchenwald, Bergen-Belsen, Treblinka, and Ravensbrueck were only a few of the countless camps.

Remember those individuals that were responsible for the massive devastation that was allowed to occur: Not only Hitler, but also Himmler, Diels, Goering, Eichman, Horst Schumann, Karl Clauberg, Gerhard Madaus, Ernst Kock, August Hirt, Odilo Globocnik. Their legacy of horrors—advances in mass extermination and human experimentation are too cruel to be believed.

Remember the pseudonyms employed by the Nazis: "Sonderbehandung" which literally means special treatment but a term which came to mean execution; "selektion" the sorting and selection of those to die; "desinfektion" which meant gassing. Remember Zyklon B, a gas which was designed to destroy insects but which was used by the Nazis to destroy Jews. Remember the crematoriums and the mass graves. Remember the horrors, remember the Holocaust.

World War II did not mark the end of anti-Semitism. Israel has fought four wars against the Arabs in her constant struggle for survival beginning in 1948 and again in 1956, 1967, and 1973. Israel has also had to contend with terrorist groups such as the Palestine Liberation Organization, devoted to the extermination of the State of Israel. Indeed, the 100-member Palestine National Council rewrote the Palestine National Covenant in 1948 which declares in article 9 that "armed struggle is the only way to liberate Palestine and is therefore a strategy and not tactics." The PLO is perhaps best remembered for the slaughter of Israeli athletes in the 1972 Olympics in Munich, Germany, but has proudly taken credit for countless other attacks on innocent civilians.

Israel, however, is not the only country where Jews are continuously targeted. Jews in the Soviet Union continue to face devastating oppression by the repressive regime that will not let them practice their religion or emigrate to the land of their forefathers. I have received numerous letters from constituents and nonconstituents alike, urging me to write on behalf of a friend or a relative so that he or she may be allowed to leave the Soviet Union and be reunited in Israel with their families.

In Ethiopia, groups such as the Falasha have been singled out by the Government for oppression. The Jews living in Ethiopia are one of the oldest Jewish communities in existence. Most alarming is the fact that the old population of 250,000 Jews in Ethiopia has been reduced to a mere 20,000 and those survivors are not allowed to attend their synagogs nor to emigrate to Israel.

Since the end of World War II, the world has had to bear witness to numerous calamities which have resulted in the loss of countless Jewish lives. No region has been granted immunity from anti-Semitism be it the Middle East, Africa, South America, the Soviet Union, Europe or even our own country.

On this Day of Remembrance I believe that it is of paramount importance to not only remember the tragedy of the Holocaust, but to also remember and commemorate all the other tragedies that have subjected the Jewish people to torture, persecution and death. Failure to do so, as history has shown, may result in the reenactment of the most abominable chapter of man's history to date. In our endeavor to remember and ultimately prevent a future holocaust we must not falter, we must not fail.●

● Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, these are the most solemn and awesome days of the year. On these days we remember the 6 million people, the innocent victims of barbaric racism, who were exterminated in Nazi death camps.

We broke ground on the Mall this morning to begin construction of a U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum and Education Center. This permanent, living memorial to the victims of the Holocaust will enable present and future generations of Americans to learn of the ghastly atrocity. And our collective memory of the Holocaust, the darkest moment in human history, will serve the cause of democracy and freedom. The memorial will embody our determination to protect the civil and human rights of all people in all places.

The Days of Remembrance were marked yesterday in New Haven, Conn., at the Holocaust Memorial Place, a shrine to the 6 million erected jointly by the New Haven Jewish Federation and the city of New Haven. This modern, free-flowing structure, which contains ashes from the ovens of Auschwitz in its base, was ringed by 1,500 people, including many survivors of the camps and ghettos. I was privileged to address this gathering, and to give tribute there.

On the Days of Remembrance we rekindle our memory of the victims of the Holocaust. To sustain the living, to honor the dead, we shall never forget.●

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues today in observing a Day of Sorrowful Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust. The ceremonies taking place today in conjunction with the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council will help us all reflect upon the horrifying crimes against humanity perpetrated in Nazi Germany during World War II. It is a painful, emotional experience to look back to a time 40 years ago when almost an entire people perished under Nazi tyranny. Six million Jews were put to death—almost all of Europe's Jewish population. Six million victims of Hitler's barbarism.

These horrifying and unspeakable crimes must never be forgotten by anyone. We need to listen to those who survived this carefully planned, deliberate genocide of the Jewish people, who lived to tell the truth to recall the horrors they endured.

Those who survived have a harsh, but vital lesson to teach every one of us: That lesson is that these evil crimes man committed against his fellow man must never be forgotten. We must never again permit such hatred, bigotry, and barbaric cruelty to go unchallenged. All of us here today, as Members of this hallowed body, have a special obligation to help make clear to the world the brutal facts of this terrible atrocity; the pain and suffering 6 million Jews endured must never be forgotten. It is our responsibility to assure the memory of the Holocaust remains fresh in all minds. Part of our efforts today will help make certain we understand the importance of that responsibility. Only in this way can we prevent such an evil from recurring, that a Holocaust never happens again. We must remember. We must be willing to act to make sure this human tragedy never happens again.

On this Day of Remembrance, I urge my colleagues to observe the exhibits at the Holocaust Memorial Museum, exhibits brought from Yad Vashem.

And join me in pledging anew: "Never again."●

● Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, among the darkest pages in the history of mankind are those that mark the Holocaust—the systematic slaughter of 6 million Jewish men, women, and children during World War II by Nazi Germany and its minions.

Would that this Day of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust be unnecessary. But, it is necessary. It is necessary that we recall the unprecedented barbarism of the Holocaust so that today's generations—and those yet to come—understand what can happen when hatred overcomes reason.

The death of an individual moves us. Yet, the enormity of the Holocaust crimes tends to desensitize our emotions. The Holocaust, so overpowering in numbers killed and depravities committed, numbs the heart and the mind. The tableau is so unbelieving that it becomes only a surrealistic nightmare from the newspapers and news films of a past to be forgotten. We cannot let this happen and so call attention to the Holocaust, lest history be permitted another atrocity equal or greater.

The Holocaust is remembered also so we do not forget that lesser slaughters of peoples because of religion, color, or ethnic origin have been taking place around the globe since the end of World War II. Along with the rest of the civilized world, perhaps, we in this country have looked the other way or have not exerted enough effort to prevent future slaughters or to bring to account those responsible.

I know that I shall be haunted constantly by the memories recalled when I stood at the Martyrs' Shrine, Yad Vashem, in Jerusalem. In that cradle of Christianity, Yad Vashem stands as an unforgiving reminder of how far we traveled from Bethlehem to Dachau, and how little we have learned.

The civilized world can do better. We, as a government and a people, can do better. We must do better.●

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, communities across this country and around the world gather this week to commemorate Holocaust Memorial Day—Yom Ha'shoa. We join in sharing painful memories of the Holocaust. We pay tribute to those who suffered immeasurably and survived and to those who resisted, spiritually and physically, to the attempt by the Nazis to annihilate the Jewish people. And today we grieve for the more than 6 million who perished; a testimony to the lowest form of barbarism to which man can sink.

But our purpose here today is not just to mark an occasion in history, an event out of our past. We are here to teach a lesson—that the circumstances of the Holocaust could have, should have, been avoided. America, and the rest of Europe did not do enough to save those endangered by the Nazi regime. We closed our eyes and ears and hearts to the horrors of that time. The lesson of the Holocaust must be taught from generation to generation so that humanity will never forget, and never repeat, the catastrophic events of those dark days.

Toward that end we gather today in the Rotunda of the Capitol to affirm the strength and resolve of those who resisted and those who survived. We who were not caught up in the maelstrom can never fully know what their world was like. We can never fully assimilate the horror of the Holocaust. But while we can never fully understand the horror, we can take steps to insure that it never happens again. We cannot sit back and believe that this was an accident of history and that it will never occur again to the Jews, or to other peoples. The building of the U.S. Holocaust Museum is one way to keep the memory of the Holocaust alive—to teach each generation the reality of the Holocaust and how the world allowed it to occur. We must also pledge our continued support for the state of Israel, so that never again will the Jewish people have to depend on the sufferance of others for their survival.●

● Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having this opportunity to join together with my colleagues in remembrance of the victims of the Holocaust.

As painful as this moment in history was, we must not allow its memory to die. All of mankind can take a lesson from the fact that remembrance of the 6 million has become a Mitzvah of Jewish observance. It is through reminders such as this that we can assure that the Holocaust will never be relived.

Many have postulated on how the Holocaust was allowed to come about. Indifference, cynicism, whatever the cause, we, particularly as national leaders, must be vigilant and cautious in our deliberations, with the Holocaust serving as a warning against indifference toward our fellow men and women.

Ours is a humanitarian nation; a nation which respects and promotes human rights world-wide. As such, we carry an obligation to support, among other causes, the perpetuation of the state of Israel. What better time to repledge this commitment than during the days of remembrance of the victims of the Holocaust.●

● Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to join with my colleagues in recognizing the Days of Remembrance of the victims of the Holocaust. There will be few special orders in this body which are more important or significant than this one.

The Holocaust, at the hands of Nazi Germany, was unprecedented; never before in human history had genocide been an all-pervasive bureaucratic, government policy, unaffected by territorial or economic advantage and unchecked by moral or religious constraints. The Holocaust was the systematic extermination of 6 million Jews and countless other people by the Nazis and their collaborators as a central act of state during the Second World War. The overriding obsession of Adolf Hitler became the purpose of the Nazi state, transcending the cause of victory in the war. Even after the defeat of Nazi Germany on the Russian front, when it was evident that the Germans had lost the war, the killings were intensified in a last desperate attempt at complete annihilation of an entire culture. Adolf Hitler asked the final solution—the death of every Jew—and even after 41 years, the horror of his obsession and the fact that others carried out his orders to kill are too much for the human mind to comprehend, but we have to remember.

We shall never forget the horror and the genocide which engulfed millions of Jews just 41 years ago. This crime against God and against humanity points to the depths of behavior of which mankind is capable. By reminding us, and all of the world, of the Holocaust in their gathering here in Washington, the survivors do the world a great service by inspiring us to pledge our efforts to insure a Holocaust never happens again. It has been said that "those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it." We must listen to the survivors and do our part to make sure such a human tragedy never again occurs.

The purpose of the special order, I believe, is not to dwell on the despair of the Holocaust, but remember it well and to use its memory to strengthen us in never allowing a recurrence. The Holocaust was not just a grotesque crime against the Jews, but a crime against all of humanity. This month also marks the 41st anniversary of the Warsaw ghetto uprising, where the Jews of that city demonstrated great courage and heroism by revolting against the brutal Nazi occupation of their homeland. Although unsuccessful, the revolt was of enormous importance. It demonstrated the extent to which people will resist persecution in the face of overwhelming odds. The Holocaust made clear to the world the strength and conviction of the Jewish people. The Jews stood defiant to the greatest assault on a culture that mankind has ever seen.

We must continue our efforts to insure that basic human rights are never denied by the state because of race or religion. We must teach our children that man's fate is in his own hands, and by learning the lessons of history, a better future is indeed possible.●

● Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, today the entire world joins in the observance of the Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust, the anniversary of the liberation of the camps.

For those of us who lived through those dark years, the fact that the Holocaust occurred is a chilling and stark reality. But to more recent generations, it may seem impossible that a civilized society could degenerate so completely. It may seem impossible that evil could so permeate the world.

Our participation in this Day of Remembrance demonstrates that we shall never forget, and we shall never let future generations forget, the genocide and the horror which engulfed millions of Jews, and indeed the whole world, some 42 years ago. It was, and will forever remain a global nightmare that will serve as a perpetual warning of the atrocities and unspeakable cruelty of which man is capable.

We gather today in remembrance of the 6 million Jews and others who died in the Holocaust. Six million Jews went to their deaths in ovens and gas chambers, or were worked to death, throughout Eastern Europe. Two out of every three European Jews died—one-third of the world's Jewish population. Those camps were so unimaginably horrible that even children and grandchildren of those who survived bear psychological scars. Those who survived live not only with the scars, but with the fear that it could happen again.

We remember the Holocaust today to insure that history not repeat itself. All generations must know of these horrors. If they do not know, they will not learn the lessons history offers. History demonstrates that the world cannot remain indifferent to human misery and evil without suffering grave consequences. In Elie Wiesel's book "The Town Beyond the Wall," a survivor of Auschwitz says there is only one thing he has wanted to understand since the war—how a human being can remain indifferent.

Today we join together with firm resolve that this Nation will not remain indifferent to human misery and suffering.

Our most sacred task now is insuring that the memory of this greatest of human tragedies, the Holocaust, never fades—that its lessons are not forgotten. Although so much has been written and said, words are somehow never enough.

To remember means not only to gather here each year in this important commemoration. It means to open our memory and include those who are not allowed to keep this memory alive. Remember that in the Soviet Union, Jews today are not allowed to remember.

To remember means to issue an appeal so powerful that it would break all the indifference in the world on behalf of the Soviet Jews.

To remember also means to open our soul and make it more sensitive to suffering and injustice everywhere, no matter what forms it takes, or against whom it is directed.

Let us return next year, and the following, and the following, to do our best to see that this dark stain on the history of man is not forgotten, and never repeated.●

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE EDWIN B. FORSYTHE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I wish to voice my strong support for the adoption of House Joint Resolution 537. This resolution will rename the Brigantine and Barnegat units of the National Wildlife Refuge System as the Edwin B. Forsythe National Wildlife Refuge.

Due to Ed's diligent efforts in protecting the environment, I believe this measure will properly honor both the legislator, who fought many battles to secure environmental legislation, as well as the man, who strongly felt that we needed to protect the environment for future generations.

Over the years, Ed worked steadily, maintaining the highest standards in his efforts. With his unobtrusive style, Ed was a conscientious and effective lawmaker who let his actions display his intent, rather than counting media attention.

Ed Forsythe was active in public service from 1948 until this year, starting out in local New Jersey offices and continuing his involvement up through his election to the 91st Congress, and his service in each Congress since then. But even after years in Washington, Ed never lost sight of his constituency at home.

I had the privilege of working closely with Ed Forsythe on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, where we worked closely on a number of proposals aimed at protecting our New Jersey shore. Ed left his mark as a leader in the fields of environmental protection and conservation, never letting partisan affiliations stand in the way of what he believed was right.

Ed's rarest quality, which I deeply admired, was this conviction to follow his conscience. Ed legislated with honesty and integrity. By doing so, he always stood out as an example of what is right about the Government.

By the simple task of renaming this portion of the wildlife refuge, much of which is located in my southern New Jersey district, we can immortalize the efforts of an esteemed colleague, but most importantly, of a truly decent man. I ask that you vote to adopt House Joint Resolution 537.

Thank you.

SENATE—Monday, April 30, 1984

The Senate met at 11 a.m., and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens; and thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds. Thy righteousness is like the great mountains; thy judgments are a great deep: O Lord, thou preservest man and beast. How excellent is thy loving kindness, O God!—Psalm 36: 5-7.

We thank thee, Gracious Father, for your unconditional, impartial, unwearying, patient, forgiving, victorious love, love which never changes, never coerces, never manipulates, never ceases. Forgive our indifference—our reluctance—our rejection—our rebellion against this relentless love which seeks us throughout our lives from conception to death.

Deliver us from whatever it is within us that causes us to deprive ourselves of the matchless grace which Thou dost lavish upon us. We pray in the name of Him whose cross is the measure of that love. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there is one special order today in favor of Senator PROXMIRE to be followed by a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not more than 30 minutes. Then we will resume consideration of H.R. 2163, which is the boat bill, which is carrying its heavy cargo of a tax bill and now appropriation bills and in effect a budget resolution. A reporter in dugout chatter, as we call it, this morning asked me why things were going so slowly, and I thought to myself what a remarkable question considering what is being packaged in this one measure. It is extraordinary, if indeed we can finish this bill, that we are putting together all of these things in one piece of legislation and doing so in a relatively brief period of time. We have not yet done it so I should not crow about it until it is finished, but we have done the tax portion of it, which has been known to take weeks. In this case it took 1 week. With the exception of a couple of amendments that may be offered and others that might follow in another way, and we are now into the appropriations part of it and the budget part of it.

I hope, Mr. President, that we can finish this bill this week, and by this week I am afraid I mean by Thursday, the end of business on Thursday. I wish to say right now that I have tried hard to keep the Senate in on Friday in the springtime, but it is very difficult, and this Friday for a variety of reasons is going to be especially difficult. I will be glad to confer with any Member on a more private basis on what those special circumstances are but most of them already know. In any event, Mr. President, I think we can finish this bill by Thursday evening.

We will not be in late tonight. I estimate the Senate will be in no longer than 5 or 6 p.m. today, but I wish to put Senators on notice that we may be in late Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, or any combination thereof, if there is a realistic opportunity to finish this bill. So let me repeat, the Senate will be in until normal hours today, but all bets are off on the remainder of the week through Thursday evening. We may be in late on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. I do not anticipate, however, that we will be in on Friday.

Mr. President, there are other bills that may be taken up this week. I am told, for instance, that the clean water bill is available and we might be able to get a fairly short time limitation on it. I would like to do that if we can. It is not yet done. It is not cleared on this side either yet, but I have asked staff to explore the possibility of clearing it.

There are a few items on the Executive Calendar that have been there for a while, and it is possible that we could get to that this week or next week.

My principal ambition, Mr. President, is to try to finish the boat bill this week. I have been advised by the chairman of the Finance Committee that that committee will probably report a debt limit bill on Thursday of this week. We will have to pass that sometime toward the middle of May, and I am giving that notice now so Senators will be aware that we have a debt limit debate coming up at sometime beginning after the first of the month, perhaps before May 15.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. What does the distinguished majority leader foresee from the standpoint of a date when we might take up the math-science bill and also the bankruptcy bill?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, if the minority leader will let me have until tomorrow, I have a caucus and a chairmen's meeting tomorrow and both of those items are on my agenda. So if I can defer my answer until tomorrow, I will be in a position to give the minority leader more information.

Mr. BYRD. Very well. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I think that is all I have. I thank the minority leader for his consideration and I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

SENATE RECONFIRMATION ACT OF 1984

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in March 1984, I introduced S. 2446, the "Senate Confirmation Act of 1984." That legislation was designed to improve the Senate confirmation process—

First, by taking the responsibility for supervising background investigations out of the White House and placing it in the hands of an independent office of Government; namely, the Office of Government Ethics.

Second, by requiring that the Senate be given exactly the same information about a nominee that is provided to a President or to a President-elect and his transition team.

Third, by providing that with respect to a limited number of high-ranking officials, there would be a reconfirmation requirement in the event a President were reelected to a second term and wished to keep those same officials in place.

On April 11, 1984, in the wake of the discovery that the Director of Central Intelligence had not adequately informed the Senate Intelligence Committee about the Nicaragua mining operation, I announced that I had decided to introduce the third provision—requiring reconfirmation of certain top officials of Government, in the event a President were to be elected to a second term—as separate legislation. It seems to me that that would be the most meaningful way we could hold such officers accountable for their performance in office.

Mr. Casey is not the only official I would like to see go through the confirmation process the second time, so that the Senate might have the advantage of a previous track record and make its judgments accordingly.

Mr. Casey is not an elected official, and the most responsible way for the Senate to exercise its responsibilities under the "Advice and Consent" clause would be to require that nominees for such positions be reconfirmed.

Also, I would like very much to find a way to include the Director of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, in view of the recent history of that plagued agency.

Moreover, this is not necessarily a situation that is limited to this administration. As I stated on April 11, "Senators will remember that, from time to time, I differed with President Carter, a member of my own political party, and this requirement of reconfirmation should apply regardless of what party is in control of the Senate or the White House."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may introduce this legislation today, at this point, as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SYMMS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2604

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Senate Re-Confirmation Act of 1984".

SEC. 2. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no person who—

(1) is an appointee to a position listed in section 5312 of title 5, United States Code, or to the position of Secretary of the Air Force, Secretary of the Army, Secretary of the Navy, Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Director of Central Intelligence, or Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency; and

(2) has served in such position for the last year of a Presidential term, may serve in the same position during the next succeeding Presidential term unless and until such person is reappointed to such position by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does my senior colleague wish to have some time to speak? I will be glad to yield him as much of my time as he may require.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the minority leader. The majority leader said there was a special order for the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIRE). Finding him not in the Chamber and wanting to make just a very brief remark, I hope the two leaders can accommodate me just for perhaps a minute or two.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I note that maybe I have not used my entire standing order time. I yield it to the minority leader as he may wish.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader.

Now, Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to my distinguished senior colleague (Mr. RANDOLPH).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the able minority leader.

IN MEMORY OF PRESIDENT TRUMAN

Mr. RANDOLPH. I call attention at the beginning of the session of the Senate today to a very meaningful service which was conducted yesterday at the Washington Cathedral. It was a service in memory of our beloved former President of the United States, Harry Truman.

There will be official programs for the remembrance of our 33d Chief Executive as we celebrate the 100th anniversary of his birth this year. Truman served in difficult times, as a former Member of this body who was in the Roosevelt administration as Vice President and was then elected President in his own right.

Margaret Truman Daniel, daughter of the President spoke, as did her husband, Clifton Daniel.

The Right Reverend John T. Walker officiated, assisted by the Reverend Provost Charles A. Perry.

More than a thousand worshippers joined in this memorable tribute.

In the service on Sunday morning, eloquent comments were made by Clark Clifford on the faith and the beliefs and the Christian character of Harry Truman. He quoted the President. I ask unanimous consent that the remarks of Clark Clifford, who served President Truman as a naval aide and later as a special counsel, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SERVICE AT WASHINGTON NATIONAL CATHEDRAL APRIL 29, 1984

Divine providence has played a great part in our history. I have the feeling that God has created us and brought us to our present position of power and strength for some great purpose.

It is not given to us now to know fully what that purpose is, but I think we may be sure of one thing. And that is that our country is intended to do all it can, in cooperating with other nations to help create peace and preserve peace in the world. It is given to us to defend the spiritual values—the moral code—against the vast forces of evil that seek to destroy them.

This is a hard task. It is not one that we have asked for. At times we would like to lay it down. And, as we go on with it, we see it is full of uncertainties and sacrifices. But we need not be afraid, if we have faith.

We often hear it said that spiritual values are indestructible, but I think it should be said that they are indestructible only so long as men are ready and willing to take action to preserve them.

The essential mission of the church is to teach the moral law. Religion is not an easy thing. It is not simply a comfort to those in trouble or a means of escape from present difficulties, as some people today would have us believe. Moreover, religion is not a negative thing. It is not merely a series of prohibitions against certain actions because they are wicked.

Our religion includes those elements. But it also includes more. It is a positive force that impels us to affirmative action. . . . Selfishness and greed can tear this Nation apart. . . . Our religious faith gives us the answer to the false beliefs of communism. We are defending freedom of worship and conscience. . . .

My political philosophy is based on the Sermon on the Mount. And it is the hardest thing in the world for any man to live up to. If you haven't read it lately, I would advise you to go home tonight and read it. It will do you a lot of good.

I am convinced that we are strong enough to meet the challenge. We are strong enough because we have a profound religious faith. The basic source of our strength as a nation is spiritual. We believe in the dignity of man. We believe that he is created in the image of God, who is the father of us all.

"Oh, Almighty and Everlasting God, creator of heaven, Earth and the universe:

"Help me to be, to think, to act what is right because it is right; make me truthful, honest and honorable in all things; make me intellectually honest for the sake of right and honor and without thought of reward to me. Give me the ability to be charitable, forgiving and patient with my fellow men; help me to understand their motives and their shortcomings even as Thou understandest mine."

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have some time remaining. If the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin would like that time, I would be happy to yield it to him.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I thank the Senator. I am all right.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I therefore yield back to the majority leader any of his time and my remaining time, if he wishes to utilize it.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIRE) is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

ALLEGED WRONGDOING BY GENERAL DYNAMICS

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, serious allegations of wrongdoing in connection with the Navy's nuclear attack submarine program have been made by the former head of the General Dynamics shipyard. The allegations of fraud were first made months ago together with an offer to provide full details to the Justice Department. Yet, the Justice Department has been dragging its feet about following up the offer, and the circumstances of the case are beginning to suggest that the Government is more interested in keeping the lid on a potential new scandal than in finding out some unpleasant facts about defense contracting.

SHIPBUILDING COST OVERRUNS AND CLAIMS

The facts of the case are these:

In 1978, the Navy "settled" a longstanding dispute with General Dynamics over huge cost overruns on the 688 submarine program. General Dynamics blamed the Navy for the overruns and filed a $544 million claim for reimbursement. Later, it told the Navy that the overruns would be much larger and that the claim would be increased to about $1 billion.

Although the Navy's Claims Settlement Review Board found that the claim was worth only $125 million, the Navy decided to pay General Dynamics about $624 million, party under a law authorizing financial rescues of ailing contractors. The decision to pay General Dynamics was made despite charges of possible fraud made by Adm. H. G. Rickover, who was then in charge of procuring the nuclear components of the submarines.

The Justice Department began an investigation of the alleged fraudulent claims in 1978. After nearly 3 years, in late 1981, Justice decided there was insufficient evidence for a prosecution and terminated its investigation.

ALLEGED KICKBACKS

In 1983, a Federal grand jury indicted P. Takis Veliotis, a vice president of General Dynamics and former general manager of the company's Electric Boat Division, where the submarines are built, for allegedly taking kickbacks from a supplier. Mr. Veliotis holds dual citizenship from the United States and Greece and he now resides in Greece as a fugitive from the U.S. Government. The kickback case is apparently unrelated to the alleged false claims.

VELIOTIS ACCUSES GENERAL DYNAMICS

In January of this year, the news media reported that Mr. Veliotis was accusing General Dynamics of an illegal "buy-in" to the submarine contract and of then falsifying the claims, and was offering to provide detailed information to the Justice Department.

After I made several inquiries to the Justice Department about Mr. Veliotis' allegations, it became clear to me that the top officials were not enthusiastic about going to Greece to meet with him. I requested that such a meeting be arranged, not because I accepted at face value Mr. Veliotis' allegations, but because he was in a position to have information and his allegations are too serious to be ignored.

The Justice Department's position has been that it does not want to undermine the criminal kickback case. I agree with that, but simply discussing the alleged fraudulent claims with Veliotis would not undermine the kickback prosecution.

In later February, I informed the Justice Department that I was sending a member of my staff to Athens to interview Mr. Veliotis and I requested that a Justice Department official accompany the staff person. The Justice Department refused my request on the grounds that it would be impractical and could raise procedural and substantive problems.

MEETING WITH VELIOTIS

Richard F. Kaufman, assistant director of the Joint Economic Committee, met with Mr. Veliotis in Athens during March 22-24 and held extensive interviews with him. On the basis of what has been reported to me of those discussions, I am more convinced than ever that it is urgent for the Justice Department to meet with Veliotis, to hear what he has to say, and to obtain copies of documents that might substantiate his allegations. If his allegations can be substantiated, every effort should be made to arrange for his return to the United States so that he can testify about what he knows.

Before summarizing what Mr. Veliotis said, I want to reiterate that his statements should not now be taken at face value. Veliotis is under indictment for a Federal crime and is a fugitive from justice. That certainly makes anything he says suspect. On the other hand, contrary to some published reports, he has not asked for immunity from the kickback prosecution in return for information about the claims. He has asked for immunity from any prosecution that might arise from his information about the claims. Also, it should be kept in mind that his allegations have not yet been substantiated. The truth of what he has to say has not been established.

For these reasons, while I believe it is my duty to pass along the essence of his accusations, I will not identify the individuals he names. However, he does name names as well as places and dates of meetings, the substance of conversations, and actions that were taken.

VELIOTIS' ALLEGATIONS

Mr. Veliotis alleges that the Electric Boat Division intentionally "bought-in" to the contract for 11 688-attack submarines awarded in 1973 by offering a price below the shipyard's own estimated costs. The buy-in was considered necessary because the shipyard's estimates of what it would cost to build the submarines were so high it was believed the company would not get the contract unless it lowered the price.

Mr. Veliotis further alleges that the company decided to file false claims against the Navy to seek reimbursement for the cost overruns. A scheme was developed to simply blame the Navy for the overruns, although it was known from the outset that the costs would exceed the price.

According to Mr. Veliotis, the final decisions to lower the price so as to buy in to the contract and to falsify the claims were made at General Dynamics headquarters by high officials of the corporation.

The claims were filed in 1976, 1 year before Mr. Veliotis was named general manager of the Electric Boat Division. During that period, Mr. Veliotis was general manager of the Quincy Division, General Dynamics' other shipyard. However, Mr. Veliotis states that, for a number of months prior to taking over Electric Boat, he interviewed all the key officials and employees at Electric Boat and reviewed the books and records in order to familiarize himself with the shipyard.

In addition, he says he participated in meetings with high officials of General Dynamics, both before and after he became general manager of Electric Boat, at which the fraudulent claims were discussed.

Mr. Veliotis states that some officials at Electric Boat objected to falsifying the claims but were overridden by General Dynamics. At least one was forced into early retirement and replaced by an individual from corporate headquarters who had no experience in shipbuilding and was made responsible for seeing to it that the false claims were prepared.

According to Mr. Veliotis, he was surprised when the Justice Department failed to question him and when he was not asked to testify before the grand jury during the investigation into the alleged fraudulent claims. He says he had intimate knowledge of the buy-in and the false claims and had in his possession numerous documents that spelled out what had been done. Some of the documentation had been given to him for safekeeping by another official of Electric Boat.

He claims to have copies of much of the documentation and says that he has offered to provide them to the Justice Department. Among other things, the documents contain a record of the original cost estimates of the submarine contract, notes about why and at whose request the price was reduced, a record of periodic presentations to corporate management of projected costs and why they were overrunning, and a description of how the false claims were put together.

Finally, Mr. Veliotis states that Admiral Rickover was right all along about the false claims. He states that he, Mr. Veliotis, was able to convince Members of Congress that the claims were valid by citing figures and using devices such as films to illustrate his points. He states that in all of his meetings with Members of the House and Senate, no one ever questioned the validity of the claims, and Rickover's allegations were ignored.

VELIOTIS NOT QUESTIONED DURING INVESTIGATION OF CLAIMS

One of the most astonishing parts of Mr. Veliotis' story is that he was never questioned by the Justice Department. He was the head of the shipyard throughout most of the nearly 3-year investigation. Yet, he was never questioned. I asked the Justice Department about this and was told that he was not questioned because the claim was filed before he became general manager.

Apparently, the Justice Department did not know that he had spent a significant amount of time interviewing key officials before he took over the shipyard, a fact that has been verified by my staff. It may not have occurred to the Justice Department that Mr. Veliotis might have obtained important information before he became general manager of Electric Boat, either by interviewing key officials or by taking part in meetings with officials of the corporation.

But why would it not occur to the Justice Department that the head of the shipyard might come across important facts after he took over the management of the shipyard? Why would it not occur to the investigators that he would have access to all the books and records? Why would it not occur to them that, if the claim was false to begin with, it might be necessary for the general manager to know the truth? Why would it not occur to the Justice Department that, as one who had spent many years managing shipyards, Mr. Veliotis might have useful information and insights about shipbuilding?

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT INVESTIGATION MISMANAGED

One can only conclude that the failure to question Mr. Veliotis during the original investigation was a gross oversight. It suggests that the investigation may have been longer than it was deep, and that it may have been mismanaged.

Indeed, a report issued by the Justice Department last year concludes that there was mismanagement in the investigation of the General Dynamics claims. The report, entitled "Review of Navy Claims Investigations," was prepared by the Office of Policy and Management Analysis of the Criminal Division of the Justice Department. It reviews the Justice Department's handling of three separate shipbuilding investigations, including the investigation of the General Dynamics claims. Among the report's findings are the following:

At the outset of these investigations, the Fraud Section did not recognize how large and complex these matters would become or how difficult proof of criminality would be given the nature of the Navy claims process.

The Division did not direct concentrated management attention to these cases until an indictment review meeting or when a problem arose. In addition, there were problems with attorney and agent staffing. Although it was clear that Navy assistance was needed in these cases, there was no consensus on how a criminal investigation should be staffed to use the assistance best.

Concerning the handling of the General Dynamics-Electric Boat Division claim, the report states:

The Electric Boat matter was also first assigned to the Fraud Section attorney who was to coordinate the establishment of USAO-Navy-Section teams for that matter. . . . This attempt floundered in the Electric Boat investigation because both the Fraud Section line attorney assigned to the case and the Assistant U.S. Attorney from Connecticut moved on to other jobs. Then, after the FBI had been working on the case for about 10 months, the Fraud Section assigned the line attorney who ultimately performed most of the work on the case.

It is clear to me that the investigation was botched from beginning to end. There was excessive manpower turnover, a lack of coordination, and general mismanagement. Now there is a real possibility in light of the Veliotis allegations that the Justice Department made a mistake in closing down the investigation. If Mr. Veliotis is correct, there is more than one smoking gun in this case, and he can help find it.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT DRAGGING ITS FEET

The incredible thing is that the Justice Department has dragged its feet in taking up Mr. Veliotis' offer. I can understand that some in the Justice Department would want to avoid the embarrassment of learning it had made a mistake. I cannot understand the reluctance to do the prudent and appropriate thing even if it means admitting a mistake was made.

The Justice Department wrote to me on February 17, 1984, in response to questions I raised about the allegations made by Mr. Veliotis. I had also suggested that the Justice Department reopen its investigation of the claims based on Mr. Veliotis' allegations. The Justice Department states in its response:

We are pursuing all avenues toward securing any information in Mr. Veliotis' possession. Without the cooperation of Mr. Veliotis there is no "new information" to warrant reopening the investigation.

This is a classic "Catch-22." The Justice Department will not reopen the investigation until it gets new information. It admits that it needs Mr. Veliotis' cooperation to get new information. But it refuses to talk with Mr. Veliotis and thereby rules out any chance to get his cooperation.

The Justice Department also says in its letter:

However, we consider it important that Mr. Veliotis, currently in a fugitive status from an indictment charging serious offenses, not be permitted to utilize vague suggestions of information of criminality to undermine an important pending prosecution charging him with receipt of $2.7 million in kickbacks.

This statement is misleading in three respects:

First, Mr. Veliotis' allegations are not "vague suggestions of criminality." As reported to me, they are concrete allegations of specific acts of wrongdoing, with dates, names, and places.

Second, there is no way that talking with him to get the information he has firsthand will undermine the pending prosecution.

Third, the kickback case is important, but the shipbuilding claims case is not just chopped liver. The claims case involves about $642 million in taxpayers' money paid or obligated to be paid by the Navy to General Dynamics. Besides, there is no reason why the Justice Department cannot prosecute the kickback case and look into Mr. Veliotis' allegations of fraudulent claims.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the close of my remarks the letter from the Justice Department, dated February 17, 1984.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, much time has already been wasted since Mr. Veliotis offer to cooperate was first reported in January. Months have gone by. What is the Justice Department waiting for?

EXHIBIT 1

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
CRIMINAL DIVISION,
Washington, DC, February 17, 1984.

Hon. WILLIAM PROXMIRE,
Vice Chairman, Subcommittee on International Trade, Finance and Security Economics, Joint Economic Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. VICE CHAIRMAN: This is in reply to your letter to the Attorney General of February 7, 1984, concerning allegations of fraudulent contract claims on nuclear attack submarines built by Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics,

As you know prosecution was declined in that matter in 1982 after an intensive three year investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the grand jury. That investigation concerned claims submitted by Electric Boat in 1976 on contracts with the Navy in 1971. These claims were the subject of a Navy settlement as well as Public Law 85-804 relief in 1978.

You may be aware that Takis Veliotis is a fugitive from an indictment pending in the southern District of New York charging him and others with obstruction of justice and racketeering offenses in connection with a kickback scheme beginning in 1973 and continuing through 1979. Mr. Veliotis, through his attorney in that case, has initiated discussions concerning information in his possession about wrongdoing at General Dynamics relating to the claims matter. We have advised his attorney we continue to be interested in any such information, but are not willing to compromise or otherwise prejudice the pending prosecution. These discussions are continuing.

For your information at the time the claim was submitted to the Navy, Mr. Veliotis was not employed at Electric Boat. Mr. Veliotis became the general manager of the Electric Boat Division in October 1977. We are pursuing all avenues toward securing any information in Mr. Veliotis' possession. Without the cooperation of Mr. Veliotis there is no "new information" to warrant reopening the investigation. However, we consider it important that Mr. Veliotis, currently in a fugitive status from an indictment charging serious offenses, not be permitted to utilize vague suggestions of information of criminality to undermine an important pending prosecution charging him with receipt of $2.7 million in kickbacks.

Sincerely,

STEPHEN S. TROTT,
Assistant Attorney General.
By JOHN C. KEENEY,
Deputy Assistant Attorney General.

SENATOR BIDEN ON "MEET THE PRESS"

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, yesterday one of our colleagues, the junior Senator from Delaware, JOE BIDEN, appeared on "Meet the Press." Senator BIDEN's performance was remarkable. He fielded a series of questions primarily on foreign affairs with eloquence. His answers were specific. They were brief, sometimes terse, but right on target and Senator BIDEN ducked nothing.

Frankly, he made this Senator proud to be a colleague. As a U.S. Senator, Senator BIDEN made this body look good.

WHY WE MUST ACT NOW TO STOP NUCLEAR WAR

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, President Reagan has announced our withdrawal of military forces from Lebanon. Our troops may be engaged in limited hostilities at any time in Central America. But overall for most Americans we are living in a time of peace with personal income breaking all records and almost as high a proportion of American adults at work as ever before in our history. There is other good news. Americans have never been so healthy. Life expectancy is now greater than it has ever been. For the first time, an American who discovers he has cancer has a better-than-ever chance of surviving and leading a healthy life. The No. 1 killer of Americans—heart disease—takes a lighter toll of Americans on a per capita basis than ever. Our elderly in many cases still have a hard time. But thanks to medicare and improvement in social security benefits, they are better off now than the elderly have ever been in American history.

The situation is not all hearts and flowers, however. We do, indeed, have more Americans living in poverty than we had 10 years ago. Certainly that is a blemish on our country. But the economy is recovering vigorously. Unemployment has been declining at a steady rate—with nearly 5 million more Americans employed than 15 months ago in December of 1982. Public opinion polls show a general upbeat, optimistic expectation by most Americans about our future. So while millions of Americans are in trouble and need help, most Americans are doing well now and expect the future to be even better.

In spite of our generally good and improving economic situation, there is a corrosive, haunting fear that a few years from now or even next month or tomorrow we could suffer the catastrophe of a nuclear war that could destroy our good lives and happy dreams. People seldom talk of this fear unless you ask them. Surveys show that this concern about nuclear war especially haunts youngsters. Some studies show that millions of our young people suffer nightmares frequently in dreaming about an agonizing death or the death of their parents—leaving them alone—in a nuclear devastated world. Unfortunately, Mr. President, these nightmares are not just passing childish fantasies, not simply a concern with ghosts and hobgoblins that will pass as children grow into maturity. These nightmares are based on a truthful understanding of the grim world that actually confronts mankind today. Those who foresee the end of the world at hand, are not deluded visionaries, they are realists. They are looking squarely and honestly at very real dangers that threaten us and that will utterly destroy this country and perhaps all of mankind, unless we act to prevent it.

Mr. President, George Kennan is one of our wisest and most thoughtful historians and experts on the Soviet Union. Mr. Kennan has served as the U.S. Ambassador to the Soviet Union. He has written and lectured for many years on the Soviet Union. Now he has told us:

> It is not just that Soviet-American relations are at the lowest point in thirty years—at a point where there is very little cushion of mutual understanding and communication to absorb any unexpected shocks. It is not just that the present weapons race plus political tension bears all the earmarks of the situations which have relentlessly led to great wars in the past. It is also the fact that we have in several parts of the world where the interest of the two super powers are now heavily engaged, situations of extreme instability where complications could spring up at any moment, complications which neither of the super powers may have provoked or desired or even foreseen, and where these complications might nevertheless create highly fragile and tense crises, in the face of which neither super power would feel itself in a position to avoid the resort to armed measures.

Mr. Kennan wrote these words 3 years ago. The situation between the two superpowers is worse today. So what do we do? First, we recognize the critical importance of moving promptly to negotiate a mutual, verifiable, and comprehensive nuclear arms control treaty with the Soviet Union. We do everything we can to encourage the administration to propose such comprehensive negotiations to replace the suspended START and INF talks. Second, we stop the export of any nuclear technology from the United States to any foreign country, unless that country has agreed to international inspection to assure that the nuclear technology we export is not diverted to military purposes. And we work to greatly strengthen both the resources and the procedures of the International Atomic Energy Agency in its critical mission to stop the spread of nuclear weapons. Third, we use our full economic and diplomatic power to persuade other countries with nuclear technology to desist from any exports that could conceivably build or strengthen nuclear arsenals in other countries. Fourth, we should take seriously the proposal of Dr. Carl Sagan to move promptly for deep, very deep cuts in the nuclear arsenals of all countries to try to achieve a reduction in the number of strategic nuclear weapons worldwide from the present level in excess of 20,000 to less than 500. Professor Sagan has argued that this is necessary to assure that a nuclear war would not bring a nuclear winter that could literally exterminate mankind.

THE MISTREATMENT OF A REFUSENIK: A CLIMATE FOR GENOCIDE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, Nadezhda Fradkova, a Soviet Jew, was finally released from a Leningrad hospital on March 16, where she had been held for 75 days. Fradkova has become yet another symbol of Soviet human rights violations.

On December 24, 1983, Nadezhda began a hunger strike in protest of Soviet harassment and repeated refusals to receive permission to emigrate. She was later abducted by Soviet authorities, taken to the emergency room of the Leningrad Hospital, and forcibly drugged and fed to break her hunger strike.

In the hospital, Fradkova suffered repeated abuse. A KGB agent remained at her bedside for her entire hospital stay. A psychiatrist from a local clinic considered Nadezhda para-noid for thinking that she was always watched by the KGB. Another psychiatrist told her that she was developing mental illness because she was not working in her profession. Incidentally, Fradkova lost her job as a mathematical linguist several years ago when she first applied to emigrate from the Soviet Union. Finally, the hospital staff physician who gave her drug injections gave her a steady dose of anti-Semitic insults as well.

The many examples of Soviet human rights violations do not constitute genocide as defined in the Genocide Convention. These violations are, however, evidence of the Soviet Union's promotion of hatred and persecution along religious lines. Such action creates the kind of climate in which genocide can occur.

As I have pointed out time and time again, Mr. President, the Genocide Convention is a definitive condemnation of the appalling abuse of the right of man to live. Let us remember that the General Assembly, at the request of the United States, gave its unanimous approval, 55 to 0, to the text of the Genocide Convention in 1948.

The Genocide Convention would strengthen our hand in dealing with human rights abuses, both those that meet the test of the Genocide Convetion and others such as the case of Nadezhda Fradkova, which fall short.

Can we ignore the persecution of the Soviet Jews, the Bahai'is, the Timorese, or the Tamils? Shall we allow the climate for genocide the opportunity to flourish?

Mr. President, the answer is "No." Let us embrace the fundamental principle of the Genocide Convention. Let us condemn this international crime once and for all. Let us act now to ratify the Genocide Convention.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to exceed 30 minutes, during which Senators may speak for up to 5 minutes apiece.

PRIVATELY PROVIDING PUBLIC SERVICES

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, on Tuesday, May 1, and Wednesday, May 2, the Joint Economic Committee's Subcommittee on Monetary and Fiscal Policy will hold hearings to examine innovative privatization approaches to reduce Federal expenditures. I should like to announce to may colleagues, those who may be listening in their offices, or their staff people, that the first witness will be J. Peter Grace, chairman of the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control. These hearings on privatization of the Federal Government will be held on May 1 at 2 p.m., and on May 2 at 10 a.m. That is tomorrow afternoon and the following morning, Wednesday morning.

Both hearings will be held in the Dirksen Senate Office Building, room 562.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an article by Mr. Steve H. Hanke entitled "Privately Providing Public Services," which was in the New York Times of March 29, 1984. That person, Mr. Hanke, is the staff person on the Joint Economic Committee who has done the work to put together these hearings. I think many Senators will find it of interest on the general subject of the possibilities that are offered this country for the privatization of some of the services that Government is now offering, that might otherwise deliver more services for less cost to the taxpayers who will receive these services. I ask unanimous consent to have that printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRIVATELY PROVIDING PUBLIC SERVICES

(By Steve H. Hanke)

BALTIMORE.—For the many municipalities facing grave fiscal problems, privatization may be the wave of the future. Wisely, New York City has latched on to the trend.

Item: Scottsdale, Ariz., saves $2 million a year by contracting for fire protection.

Item: One-third of the refuse in Newark, N.J., is privately collected, saving $200,000 a year.

Item: Dallas closed its municipal late-night gasoline depots; now police cars and some fire vehicles use gas pumps at 7-11 stores after midnight, saving $200,000 annually.

Item: A private firm operates the Orange County, Calif., computer center, at an annual saving of $1.6 million.

Item: Butte, Mont., contracted for the private operation of its municipal hospital; annual savings are $600,000.

Item: Newton, Mass., saves $500,000 a year through a contract with a firm that supplies the city with paramedical and ambulance service.

The innovative, cost-cutting transfer of public services to the private sector is increasingly being given attention as mayors and other municipal officials find traditional fiscal solutions more and more unattractive.

The national magnitude of the problem was demonstrated in a study, "Trends in the Fiscal Conditions of Cities: 1981-1983," prepared for the Joint Economic Committee of Congress by staff members and published last November. It found that 64 percent of the 299 cities sampled anticipated operating deficits last year.

The growing desirability of the solution was demonstrated by another survey. The International City Management Association in 1982 looked at 1,780 cities and counties and found that 59 different types of public services were being privately provided. Of the cities and counties reporting, 41 percent used private contractors for commercial solid-waste disposal, 34 percent for residential solid-waste collection, 30 percent for tree trimming and planting, 78 percent for vehicle towing and storage and 28 percent for vehicle fleet management. Moreover, since the survey was taken, the types of public services privatized has almost doubled and the frequency with which privatization is used has increased, according to my own studies.

What has set the privatization trend in motion?

To address their fiscal problems, municipalities customarily have cut back public services, raised more revenue, or both. But these standard options are disappearing. Reduction of services can create political problems for everyone involved. As for revenue-generating, citizens' revolts have made increases in local taxes fraught with political peril, too. In the face of high real interest rates, constitutional debt limitations, voter disapproval and the prospect of poorer bond ratings, municipalities have slowed down their borrowing. State and Federal grants-in-aid, and old source of municipal funds, have been reduced in recent years and show no prospect of being increased.

Cost savings are the key to privatization's success. With the private sector brought into play, services don't have to be reduced; rather, they are simply provided cheaper. The process works well because private enterprise usually can outperform public enterprise. Entrepreneurs' incentives are imposed by the competitive market, while politicians' and bureaucrats' incentives are imposed by political and bureaucratic processes. As a result, private enterprise is usually able to supply the same quantity and quality of service at about one-half the cost of public provision.

In addition to contracting out, cities are realizing the benefits of privatization by putting unused or underused real assets on the auction block. New York City, for example, sold the old United Nations School in midtown Manhattan for $12.3 million—a bid that was almost twice the original asking price. The city, in 1983, received $13.15 million for a parcel at William and Beaver Streets in Lower Manhattan—a local record for a single parcel of city-owned property—after a 10-minute bidding spree. Moreover, the city has made sure that some idle property has been put to productive, higher valued used: For example, the abandoned King Street School, in Greenwich Village, was sold to a private interest and then converted into apartments. Another benefit of such action, of course, is that once properties are privatized, they join the tax rolls.

Troubled municipalities and counties that have begun to privatize are putting their fiscal houses in order. More important, they are setting the stage for depoliticization of economic decisions, improved delivery of services, tax reductions—and for the consequent economic growth and social revival that they need.

THE DIFFICULT SEARCH FOR PEACE IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, it is easy to lose track of the search for peace in Central America. In recent days, two events, one in Managua and one in San Salvador, remind us how difficult is the role of peacemaker in the region, but that there are those who persist in making proposals for national reconciliation.

Mr. President, I bring to the attention of the Senate the remarkable peace proposals of three Central American foreign ministers and the heroism of the bishops of Nicaragua, particularly Archbishop Miguel Obando y Bravo.

On April 25, the foreign ministers of Costa Rica, El Salvador, and Honduras met in San Salvador to discuss the prospects for peace in the region. They agreed to promote actions to achieve the internal reconciliation that will permit both the establishment of more democratic governments in their respective countries and a possible political resolution to the Central American crisis.

There is great specificity in the statement of the foreign ministers, and I would hope that all interested governments, including the United States, Cuba, Nicaragua, and the Contadora Group, find this effort a useful guide in the search for peace.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD an account of the foreign ministers' statement as monitored by the Foreign Broadcast Information Service.

There being no objection, the information was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

C.A. FOREIGN MINISTERS ISSUE JOINT COMMUNIQUE

SAN SALVADOR, APR. 25 (ACAN-EFE).—The foreign ministers of El Salvador, Honduras, and Costa Rica today agreed in San Salvador to promote actions to achieve the internal reconciliation that will permit the establishment of democratic regimes in their respective countries and a political resolution to the Central American crisis. In a joint communique, Fidel Chavez Mena of El Salvador, Edgardo Paz Barnica of Honduras, and Carlos Gutierrez of Costa Rica stated that promotion of a political and democratic resolution to the regional crisis through diplomatic means is advisable.

The foreign ministers reaffirmed their respective governments' commitment to begin negotiations to conclude a general treaty on Central American peace, democracy, security, and cooperation that will simultaneously resolve all the differences among the countries of the region, and that will create a favorable climate to resolve the internal conflicts in each nation.

In the communique, the foreign ministers indicated that in order to achieve regional peace and harmony, appropriate conditions must be created so that each country can achieve social peace and political stability through a process of internal reconciliation. They stated that the efforts being carried out by the Contadora Group, made up of Mexico, Panama, Colombia, and Venezuela, are an important mechanism for the achievement of those objectives and that those efforts must continue in an impartial and neutral manner.

In the political field, the foreign ministers of El Salvador, Honduras, and Costa Rica promised to support the efforts for national reconciliation in each country by maintaining unconditional offers to the political and armed opposition groups to seek suitable means to guarantee their participation in the electoral process. This offer includes guarantees for the personal security of the opposition candidates, equal participation of the political parties, free access to the communications media, and their due representation in the electoral bodies, as well as the compilation of a trustworthy electoral register.

The foreign ministers also promised to support the establishment of national reconciliation or peace commissions to begin or to reactivate a dialogue with the armed or unarmed opposition groups and to invite Nicaragua to do likewise. On behalf of their respective governments, the foreign ministers expressed their commitment to issue a broad amnesty that will lead to the pardoning of political crimes and to permit full press freedom.

In order to achieve a military balance in the region, the foreign ministers of El Salvador, Honduras, and Costa Rica said that the introduction into the region of new types or systems of weapons that are not held by any of the Central American governments must be prohibited. In addition, they said that the inventory of weapons must be reduced, that no country in the region should be left with an advantage over its neighbors, and that the number of foreign military and security advisers must be reduced. According to the communique, the traffic of weapons, ammunition, and other supplies from or through any country of the region to persons or groups that carry out subversive activities in another nation of the area must be stopped. The foreign ministers proposed reducing the number of troops in the various Central American countries and prohibiting or disbanding the paramilitary groups that operate within or outside the normal structure of the armed forces.

In the economic area, the foreign ministers expressed support for the Contadora Group's efforts, such as those of capitalizing the Central America Bank of Economic Integration, granting legal status to the Central American Monetary Council, and negotiating the necessary measures to resume free trade.

Guatemalan Foreign Minister Fernando Andrade was invited to the meeting that the foreign ministers of El Salvador, Honduras, and Costa Rica held in San Salvador today. According to Chavez Mena, Andrade did not attend due to "unforeseen circumstances." This meeting was held just 5 days before the meeting of Contadora Group and Central America foreign ministers in Panama.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the Catholic bishops of Nicaragua on Easter Sunday issued a pastoral letter regarding internal reconciliation in their own country. The pastoral letter suggested that all Nicaraguan parties, political and armed groups alike, be involved in this reconciliation effort. The foreign ministers' statement included a similar appeal for each of the Central American countries.

The risks to the peacemaker in Central America who suggests discussions with the opposition are always great. There are those in El Salvador who would oppose the role of Foreign Minister Chavez Mena in the joint statement, but as far as I know, he spoke for the Government of El Salvador when he made the joint initiative for peace.

In the case of Nicaragua, the Sandinista Government prohibited publication of the pastoral letter for 3 days, and undertook a campaign of personal attacks against the leading bishop, the Archbishop of Managua, in the government press and radio. No Nicaraguan who remembers Archbishop Obando y Bravo's role in the fight against the Somoza dictatorship will believe the charges that the archbishop called for reconciliation because he favors a return of the Somoza family, but such charges could provide an excuse for an attack on him.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD an Associated Press account of the danger faced by Archbishop Obando in the search for peace by the bishops of Nicaragua.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times, Apr. 30, 1984]

ARCHBISHOP RAPS MEDIA IN NICARAGUA

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA (AP).—Managua's Roman Catholic archbishop issued a letter accusing the government-controlled news media of conducting a campaign against him and saying the media would be responsible for his safety.

The Office of Archbishop Miguel Obando y Bravo said in the letter dated Saturday that the media of the left-wing Sandinista junta was trying to "darken" the church leader's reputation by making him appear to be a rightist.

It said the church was holding "the official means of communication" responsible for "anything that might happen in terms of the personal safety" of the archbishop.

Archbishop Obando y Bravo has frequently been critical of the Sandinistas, who gained control of the country after winning the civil war against the government of the late President Anastasio Somoza in July 1979.

Church-state tensions increased after a pastoral letter was read in Catholic churches on Easter Sunday calling for negotiations between the government and anti-Sandinista rebels.

The archbishop's office said the prelate was in Rome on Saturday, meeting with Pope John Paul II and other church leaders.

Articles and broadcasts critical of Archbishop Obando y Bravo have become prominent since the Easter statement.

On Tuesday, the government newspaper Barricada published old photographs of the archbishop meeting with Mr. Somoza. On the same day, the pro-government newspaper El Nuevo Diario carried a picture of the archbishop with the headline, "Guess Who's in Florida?" Many Nicaraguans consider Florida a haven for ex-members of Mr. Somoza's national guard.

"Not having any meaningful argument against [the pastoral] call for reconciliation, they have begun to attack the archbishop . . . trying to darken his image as pastor," the statement from Archbishop Obando y Bravo's office said. "They [the government media] have manipulated mere meetings and acts of protocol from the past" in a way that makes the archbishop appear as a Somoza supporter, it added.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I believe the time for the transaction of routine morning business has expired; has it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. Morning business is closed.

MISCELLANEOUS TARIFF, TRADE, AND CUSTOM MATTERS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of the unfinished business, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2163) to amend the Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

(Pending: Baker amendment No. 3027, to further reduce deficits by including reconciliation provisions and appropriations caps for defense and nondefense discretionary spending for fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987.)

RECESS UNTIL 1 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there is a ceremony in the rotunda of the Capitol beginning at 12 o'clock in commemoration of the Holocaust.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now stand in recess until the hour of 1 p.m. today.

There being no objection, the Senate at 11:54 a.m., recessed until 1:01 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. WILSON).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from California, suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, the amendment I am offering today is similar to the one that was offered unsuccessfully last week by Senators

HELMS and MCCLURE. I hope this budget proposal will have some appeal to those Members of the Senate who felt that enacting 10-percent cuts in all spending categories of the Federal budget, except for defense and social security, was too extreme. What I propose is a 7½-percent cut in all spending, still leaving untouched the two contentious areas of the budget—national defense, and social security, including medicare.

As with the Helms/McClure proposal, this plan would still give the authorizing committees the authority to streamline or restructure programs to bring about these spending cuts. It does not instruct the committees in how to reduce the cost of any entitlement program by 7½ percent. Now I know that there has been great resistance in this body to any social spending cuts, and particularly in an election year.

I think that was demonstrated quite amply on the amendment this Senator offered last week. Also, it included everything under the tent for some freezes and reductions.

The problem with many of these social spending programs is that they are indexed for rapid growth, usually along the lines of a cost-of-living estimation formula. Indexing has put us in a vicious circle: We are risking destroying this fragile economic recovery by the growing level of Federal spending, and yet we are paying people more Federal money to compensate for the inflation and higher living costs that are fueled by heavy taxation and deficit spending.

The budget proposals this year are all deficit reduction packages of one sort or another.

Deficit reduction—a new phrase here in Washington, Mr. President. That is what they are, deficit reductions, because they obscure the fact that the real problem is not the deficit, but the Federal spending.

How many Members of Congress go back to their States and districts and tell their constituents that they are not being taxed enough? I venture to say that very few of us do that.

How many of us believe that tax increases will promote economic recovery? Federal tax collections this year are running at 20 percent of the GNP, the total value of the country's annual economic output. Just 20 years ago, the tax share of GNP was 18.7 percent. During the same period of time, Federal spending has risen from just under 20 percent to 25 percent of GNP. Why has the Government amassed four times more debt in the past 13 years than in the first 170 years of this country's existence? It is elementary: spending by Government has accelerated at a much greater rate than tax collections.

Now, I know that, as in the previous debate on the Helms/McClure proposal and on my other budget proposal last week, there will be opposition on reducing funding in certain areas. That is to be expected—everyone, including me, has spending priorities. We all have certain things we think are more important than others. That is only human. The problem is that when each one of us steps in and fattens up the appropriations for our individual priority items, the budget just keeps getting larger and larger and larger. We need a comprehensive approach and a consensus for restraint in spending. Otherwise, the budget will only continue to expand. There has got to be a way out of this swamp; if Government does not reduce the amount of national wealth it consumes, our economic problems will only worsen.

It is apparent to me that some of the biggest decriers of the deficit are some of the very same people who have voted for years for excessive appropriations. Here is the opportunity for my colleagues to show their constituents that their talk about deficit reduction is more than just election-year rhetoric. There seems to be a great deal of concern that voting for budget restraint may be interpreted as being hard-hearted or uncaring about the needy in our society. I think we forgot that inflation and interest rates are perhaps harder on the poor than on other sectors of society. My colleagues should also keep in mind that an overwhelming number of Americans—well over 70 percent—favor achieving deficit reduction through spending restraints, not through tax increases.

I believe there is a point above which Government's boundless appetite should not be satiated. I believe the Government is already consuming too much of the national wealth. I urge my colleagues who share that belief to support this budget plan. There is a large public interest in controlling the deficit, but somehow it always seems to take second place beside the opportunity to placate a special interest group by spending more money. The American people, however, are growing tired of duplicitous chatter about deficit concerns and are ready for action. This is a chance to show that Congress recognizes that concern and will exercise fiscal responsibility.

Mr. President, this amendment would reduce deficits by $226 billion over the next 3 years. The amendment adopts the leadership proposal for defense spending, thereby saving $43.4 billion in defense. The amendment reduces entitlement spending 7½ percent below the CBO baseline except for social security and medicare. This saves $94.6 billion fiscal year 1985 through 1987. The amendment would reduce nondefense spending by 7½ percent, therein saving $59.2 billion over fiscal year 1985 through 1987. With a net interest saving of $28.8 billion, the 3-year deficits would be reduced by $226 billion and the deficit would decline to $169 billion from $189.4 billion today.

So I think it is a very worthy amendment. It is patterned after an amendment this body has already voted on. Senators have already voted basically on this issue based on 10 percent. Now we are cutting it to a 7½-percent reduction, and Senators can voice their dismay at this never ending cause for more spending.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? The Chair is advised by the clerk there is not a sufficient second.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from Idaho, who once again has shown that he has a great deal of courage in offering this kind of amendment in an effort to reduce the deficits that beset our country.

I will summarize this. The Senate voted last week on a Helms amendment, which was basically a 10-percent across-the-board reduction, with the exception of social security and medicare; and the Baker amendment, or leadership amendment, was used as the baseline for defense spending.

In this particular case, instead of 10 percent, it is a 7.5 percent across the board on everything except social security and medicare. Defense is the same as the Helms amendment, or Baker amendment.

Frankly, I am not going to take any more time. The Helms amendment received 27 yea votes. This may be 2.5 percent better than the Helms amendment.

Nonetheless, it would seem to me that for those who did not think the other was an appropriate course of action, they might very well think this is close to it.

But I do commend the distinguished Senator for a substantive amendment, which is well thought out, giving us an opportunity to do some work here today.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, my understanding is that the amendment as presented by the Senator from Idaho would provide that defense would have a 7-percent increase. That is real above inflation. So that would mean a 13-percent total increase.

Domestic programs would go down 7½ percent nominal, so they would actually be down 12½ percent in real.

So that looks to me that we would be talking about a 25-percent gap between how we would be treating domestic programs and how we would be treating defense.

I am afraid that if we pass this it would be very difficult to enforce, but I wonder if we really can consider this a fair way to deal with the deficit when we have those kinds of numbers. It is a little less drastic, I guess, than the amendment that was at 10 percent, but I think it still fails to meet any test of fairness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

TITLE —COMPETITION IN CONTRACTING

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 10. This title may be cited as the "Competition in Contracting Act of 1984".

Subtitle A—Amendments to the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949

COMPETITIVE AND NONCOMPETITIVE PROCEDURES

SEC. 11. (a) Title III of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 251 et seq.) is amended—

(1) by striking out section 303 (41 U.S.C. 253) and the heading of such section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"COMPETITION REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (e) or otherwise authorized by law, executive agencies shall use competitive procedures in making contracts for property or services. Executive agencies shall use advance procurement planning and market research and shall prepare specifications in such a manner as is necessary to obtain effective competition with due regard to the nature of the property or services to be acquired. Executive agencies shall use the competitive procedure or combination of competitive procedures that is best suited under the circumstances of the procurement action and shall specify its needs and solicit bids or proposals in a manner designed to achieve effective competition for the contract.

"(b) An executive agency may provide for the procurement of property or services in order to establish or maintain any alternative source or sources of supply under this title using competitive procedures but excluding a particular source for that property or services if the executive agency determines that to do so would (1) increase or maintain competition and would likely result in reduced overall costs for such procurement, or for any anticipated procurement, of such property or services, (2) be in the interest of industrial mobilization in case of a national emergency, or (3) be in the interest of national defense in establishing or maintaining an essential research capability to be provided by an educational or other nonprofit institution or a research and development center funded by the United States.

"(c) Procurement regulations shall include special simplified procedures and forms for small purchases to facilitate making small purchases efficiently and economically.

"(d) For other than small purchases, and executive agency, when using competitive procedures—

"(1) shall solicit sealed bids when—

"(A) time permits the solicitation, submission, and evaluation of sealed bids;

"(B) the award will be made on the basis of price and other price-related factors;

"(C) it is not necessary to conduct discussions with the responding sources about their bids; and

"(D) there is a reasonable expectation of receiving more than one sealed bid;

"(2) shall request competitive proposals when sealed bids are not required under clause (1) of this subsection.

"(e) An executive agency may use noncompetitive procedures only when—

"(1) the property or services needed by the Government are available from only one source and no other type of property or services will satisfy the needs of the executive agency;

"(2) the executive agency's need for the property or services is of such unusual and compelling urgency that the Government would be seriously injured by the delay associated with using competitive procedures;

"(3) it is necessary to award the contract to a particular source or sources in order to (A) maintain a facility, producer, manufacturer, or other supplier available for furnishing property or services in case of a national emergency, (B) achieve industrial mobilization in the case of such an emergency, or (C) establish or maintain an essential research capability to be provided by an educational or other nonprofit institution or a research and development center funded by the United States;

"(4) the terms of any international agreement or treaty between the United States Government and a foreign government or international organization, or the directions of any foreign government reimbursing the executive agency for the cost of the procurement of the property or services for such government, have the effect of requiring the use of noncompetitive procedures;

"(5) a statute authorizes or requires that the procurement be made through another executive agency or from a specified source or the agency's need is for a brand-name commercial item for authorized resale; or

"(6) the disclosure of the executive agency's needs to more than one source would compromise the national security.

"(f) For the purposes of applying subsection (e)(1)—

"(1) property or services shall be considered to be available from a source if such source has the capability to produce the property or deliver the service in accordance with the Government's specifications and delivery schedule; and

"(2) in the case of the procurement of technical or special property which has required a substantial initial investment or an extended period of preparation for manufacture, and where it is likely that production by a source other than the original source would result in additional cost to the Government by reason of duplication of investment or would result in duplication of necessary preparation which would unduly delay the procurement of the property, the property may be deemed to be available only from the initial source and may be procured through noncompetitive procedures.

"(g) An executive agency may not award a contract using noncompetitive procedures unless—

"(1) the use of such procedures has been justified in writing; and

"(2) a notice has been published with respect to such contract pursuant to section 313 and all bids or proposals received in response to such notice have been considered by such executive agency.

"(h) For the purposes of the following laws, purchases or contracts made under this title using other than sealed bid procedures shall be treated as if they were made with sealed bid procedures:

"(1) The Act entitled 'An Act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes', approved June 30, 1936 (commonly referred to as the 'Walsh-Healey Act') (41 U.S.C. 35-45).

"(2) The Act entitled 'An Act relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed on public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by contractors and subcontractors, and for other purposes', approved March 3, 1931 (commonly referred to as the 'Davis-Bacon Act') (40 U.S.C. 276a—276a-5).".

(2) by adding at the end of section 309 (41 U.S.C. 259) the following new subsections:

"(b) The term 'executive agency' has the same meaning as provided in section 4(a) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U..C. 403(a)), except that such term does not include the departments or establishments specified in section 2303(a) of title 10, United States Code.

"(c) The term 'competitive procedures' means procedures under which an executive agency enters into a contract after soliciting sealed bids or competitive proposals from more than one source that is capable of satisfying the needs of the executive agency.

"(d) The term 'noncompetitive procedures' means procedures other than competitive procedures.

"(e) The term 'small purchase' means any purchase or contract which does not exceed $25,000. A proposed procurement shall not be divided into several procurements primarily for the purpose of using the small purchase procedures."; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SOLICITATION REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 311. (a)(1) Each solicitation under this title shall include specifications which—

"(A) consistent with the needs of the executive agency, permit effective competition; and

"(B) include restrictive provisions or conditions only to the extent necessary to satisfy such needs or as authorized by law.

"(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1), the type of specification included in any solicitation shall depend on the nature of the needs of the executive agency and the market available to satisfy such needs. Subject to such needs, specifications may be stated in terms of—

"(A) function so that a variety of products or services may qualify;

"(B) performance, including specifications of the range of acceptable characteristics or of the minimum acceptable standards; or

"(C) design requirements.

"(b) Each solicitation for sealed bids or competitive proposals other than for small purchases shall at a minimum include, in addition to the specifications described in subsection (a)—

"(1) a statement of—

"(A) all significant factors, including price, which the executive agency reasonably expects to consider in evaluating sealed bids or competitive proposals; and

"(B) the relative importance assigned to each of those factors;

"(2) in the case of sealed bids—

"(A) a statement that sealed bids will be evaluated without discussions with the bidders; and

"(B) the time and place for the opening of the sealed bids; and

"(3) in the case of competitive proposals—

"(A) a statement that the proposals are intended to be evaluated with, and awards made after, discussions with the offerors but might be evaluated and awarded without discussions with the offerors; and

"(B) the time and place for submission of proposals.

"EVALUATION AND AWARD

"SEC. 312. (a) An executive agency shall evaluate sealed bids and competitive proposals based solely on the factors specified in the solicitation.

"(b) All sealed bids or competitive proposals received in response to a solicitation may be rejected if the head of the executive agency determines that such action is in the public interest.

"(c) Sealed bids shall be opened publicly at the time and place stated in the solicitation. The executive agency shall evaluate the bids without discussions with the bidders and shall, except as provided in subsection (b), award a contract with reasonable promptness to the responsible bidder whose bid conforms to the solicitation and is most advantageous to the United States, solely considering the price and the other factors included in the solicitation under section 311(b)(1). The award of a contract shall be made by transmitting written notice of the award to the successful bidder.

"(d)(1) The executive agency shall evaluate competitive proposals and may award a contract—

"(A) after discussions conducted with the offerors at any time after receipt of the proposals and prior to the award of the contract; or

"(B) without discussions with the offerors beyond discussions conducted for the purpose of minor clarification where it can be clearly demonstrated from the existence of effective competition or accurate prior cost experience with the product or service that acceptance of an initial proposal without discussions would result in fair and reasonable prices.

"(2) In the case of award of a contract under paragraph (1)(A), the executive agency shall conduct, before such award, written or oral discussions with all responsible offerors who submit proposals within a competitive range, price and other evaluation factors considered.

"(3) In the case of award of a contract under paragraph (1)(B), the executive agency shall award the contract based on the proposals as received (and as clarified, if necessary, in discussions conducted for the purpose of minor clarification).

"(4) The executive agency shall, except as otherwise provided in subsection (b), award a contract with reasonable promptness to the responsible offeror whose proposal is most advantageous to the United States, considering price and the other factors included in the solicitation under section 311(b)(1). The executive agency shall award the contract by transmitting written notice of the award to such offeror and shall promptly notify all other offerors of the rejection of their proposals.

"(e) If the head of an executive agency considers that any bid or proposal evidences a violation of the antitrust laws, he shall refer the bid or proposal to the Attorney General for appropriate action.

"PROCUREMENT NOTICE

"SEC. 313. (a)(1) Except as provided in subsection (c)—

"(A) an executive agency intending to solicit bids or proposals for a contract for property or services at a price expected to exceed $10,000 shall furnish for publication by the Secretary of Commerce a notice described in subsection (b); and

(B) by striking out clauses (2) and (3) of section 2302 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) 'Agency' means any department or establishment specified in section 2303(a) of this title.

"(4) 'Noncompetitive procedures' means procedures other than competitive procedures.

"(5) 'Small purchase' means any purchase or contract which does not exceed $25,000. A proposed procurement shall not be divided into several procurements primarily for the purpose of using small purchase procedures.";

(2) in section 2303(a)—

(A) by redesignating clauses (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5) as clauses (2), (3), (4), (5), and (6), respectively; and

(B) by inserting before clause (2) (as redesignated by subclause (A)) the following:

"(1) The Department of Defense.";

(3) by striking out sections 2304 and 2305 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"§ 2304. Competition requirements

"(a) Except as provided in subsection (e) of this section or otherwise authorized by law, the head of an agency shall use competitive procedures in making contracts for property or services. The head of an agency shall use advance procurement planning and market research and shall prepare specifications in such a manner as is necessary to obtain effective competition with due regard to the nature of the property or services to be acquired. The head of an agency shall use the competitive procedure or combination of competitive procedures that is best suited under the circumstances of the procurement action and shall specify the needs of the agency and solicit bids or proposals in a manner designed to achieve effective competition for the contract.

"(b) The head of an agency may provide for the procurement of property or services in order to establish or maintain any alternative source or sources of supply under this title using competitive procedures but excluding a particular source for that property or services if such head of an agency determines that to do so would (1) increase or maintain competition and would likely result in reduced overall costs for such procurement, or for any anticipated procurement, of property or services, (2) be in the interest of industrial mobilization in case of a national emergency, or (3) be in the interest of national defense in establishing or maintaining an essential research capability to be provided by an educational or other nonprofit institution or a research and development center funded by the United States.

"(c) Procurement regulations shall include special simplified procedures and forms for small purchases to facilitate making small purchases efficiently and economically.

"(d) For other than small purchases, the head of an agency, when using competitive procedures—

"(1) shall solicit sealed bids when—

"(A) time permits the solicitation, submission, and evaluation of sealed bids;

"(B) the award will be made on the basis of price and other price-related factors;

"(C) it is not necessary to conduct discussions with the responding sources about their bids; and

"(D) there is reasonable expectation of receiving more than one sealed bid; and

"(2) shall request competitive proposals from responding sources when sealed bids are not required under clause (1) of this subsection.

"(e) The head of an agency; may use noncompetitive procedures only when—

"(1) the property of services needed by the Government are available from only one source and no other type of property or services will satisfy the needs of the agency;

"(2) the agency's need for the property or services is of such unusual and compelling urgency that the Government would be seriously injured by the delay associated with using competitive procedures;

"(3) it is necessary to award the contract to a particular source or sources in order to (A) maintain a facility, producer, manufacturer, or other supplier available for furnishing property or services in case of a national emergency, (B) achieve industrial mobilization in the case of such an emergency, or (C) establish or maintain an essential research capability to be provided by an educational or other nonprofit institution or a research and development center funded by the United States;

"(4) the terms of any international agreement or treaty between the United States Government and a foreign government or international organization, or the directions of any foreign government reimbursing the agency for the cost of the procurement of the property or services for such government, have the effect of requiring the use of noncompetitive procedures;

"(5) a statute authorizes or requires that the procurement be made through another agency or from a specified source; or the agency's need is for a brand-name commercial item for authorized resale; or

"(6) the disclosure of the agency's needs to more than one source would compromise the national security.

"(f) For the purposes of applying subsection (e)(1) of this section hereof—

"(1) property or services shall be considered to be available from a source if such source has the capability to produce the property or deliver the service in accordance with the Government's specifications and delivery schedule; and

"(2) in the case of the procurement of technical or special property which has required a substantial initial investment or an extended period of preparation for manufacture, and where it is likely that production by a source other than the original source would result in additional cost to the Government by reason of duplication of investment or would result in duplication of necessary preparation which would unduly delay the procurement of the property, the property may be deemed to be available only from the initial source and may be procured through noncompetitive procedures.

"(g) The head of an agency may not award a contract using noncompetitive procedures unless—

"(1) the use of such procedures has been justified in writing; and

"(2) a notice has been published with respect to such contract pursuant to section 2305(c) of this title and all bids or proposals received in response to such notice have been considered by such head of an agency.

"(h) For the purposes of the following laws, purchases or contracts made under this chapter using other than sealed bid procedures shall be treated as if they were made with sealed bid procedures:

"(1) The Act entitled 'An Act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes', approved June 30, 1936 (commonly referred to as the 'Walsh-Healey Act') (41 U.S.C. 35–45).

"(2) The Act entitled 'An Act relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed on public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by contractors and subcontractors, and for other purposes', approved March 3, 1931 (commonly referred to as the 'Davis-Bacon Act') (40 U.S.C. 276a—276a-5).

§ 2305. Solicitation, evaluation, and award procedures; notice requirements

"(a)(1)(A) Each solicitation under this title shall include specifications which—

"(i) consistent with the needs of the agency, permit effective competition; and

"(ii) include restrictive provisions or conditions only to the extent necessary to satisfy such needs or as authorized by law.

"(B) For the purposes of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the type of specification included in any solicitation shall depend on the nature of the needs of the agency and the market available to satisfy such needs. Subject to such needs, specifications may be stated in terms of—

"(i) function so that a variety of products or services may qualify;

"(ii) performance, including specifications of the range of acceptable characteristics or of the minimum acceptable standards; or

"(iii) design requirements.

"(2) Each solicitation for sealed bids or competitive proposals other than for small purchases shall at a minimum include, in addition to the specifications described in paragraph (1) of this subsection—

"(A) a statement of—

"(i) all significant factors, including price, which the executive agency reasonably expects to consider in evaluating sealed bids or competitive proposals; and

"(ii) the relative importance assigned to each of those factors;

"(B) in the case of sealed bids—

"(i) a statement that sealed bids will be evaluated without discussions with the bidders; and

"(ii) the time and place for the opening of the sealed bids; and

"(C) in the case of competitive proposals—

"(i) a statement that the proposals are intended to be evaluated with, and awards made after, discussions with the offerors but might be evaluated and awarded without discussions with the offerors; and

"(ii) the time and place for submission of proposals.

"(b)(1) The head of an agency shall evaluate sealed bids and competitive proposals based solely on the factors specified in the solicitation.

"(2) All sealed bids or competitive proposals received in response to a solicitation may be rejected if the head of an agency determines that such action is in the public interest.

"(3) Sealed bids shall be opened publicly at the time and place stated in the solicitation. The head of an agency shall evaluate the bids without discussions with the bidders and shall, except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, award a contract with reaonable promptness to the responsible bidder whose bid conforms to the solicitation and is most advantageous to the United States, solely considering the price and the other factors included in the solicitation under subsection (a)(2)(A) of this section. The award of a contract shall be made by transmitting written notice of the award to the successful bidder.

"(4)(A) The head of an agency shall evaluate competitive proposals and may award a contract—

"(i) after discussions conducted with the offerors at any time after receipt of the proposal and prior to the award of the contract; or

"(ii) without discussions with the offerors beyond discussions conducted for the purpose of minor clarification where it can be clearly demonstrated from the existence of effective competition or accurate prior cost experience with the product or service that acceptance of an initial proposal without discussions would result in fair and reasonable prices.

"(B) In the case of award of a contract under subparagraph (A)(i) of this paragraph, the head of an agency shall conduct, before such award, written or oral discussions with all responsible offerors who submit proposals within a competitive range, price and other evaluation factors considered.

"(C) In the case of award of a contract under subparagraph (A)(ii) of this paragraph, the head of an agency shall award the contract based on the proposals received (and as clarified, if necessary, in discussions conducted for the purpose of minor clarification).

"(D) The head of an agency shall, except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, award a contract with reasonable promptness to the responsible offeror whose proposal is most advantageous to the United States, solely considering price and other factors included in the solicitation under subsection (a)(2)(A) of this section. The head of the agency shall award the contract by transmitting written notice of the award to such offeror and shall promptly notify all other offerors of the rejection of their proposals.

"(5) If the head of an agency considers that any bid or proposal evidences a violation of the antitrust laws, he shall refer the bid or proposal to the Attorney General for appropriate action.

"(c)(1)(A) Except as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection—

"(i) the head of an agency intending to solicit bids or, proposals for a contract for property or services at a price expected to exceed $10,000 shall furnish for publication by the Secretary of Commerce a notice described in paragraph (2) of this subsection; and

"(ii) the head of an agency awarding a contract for property or services at a price exceeding $10,000 shall furnish for publication by the Secretary of Commerce a notice announcing such award if there is likely to be any subcontract under such contract.

"(B) The Secretary of Commerce shall publish promptly in the Commerce Business Daily each notice required by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

"(C) Whenever a head of an agency is required by subparagagph (A)(i) of this paragraph to furnish a notice of a solicitation to the Secretary of Commerce, such head of an agency may not—

"(i) issue such solicitation earlier than fifteen days after the date on which such notice is published by the Secretary of Commerce; or

"(2) Each notice required by paragraph (1)(A)(i) of this subsection shall include—

"(A) an accurate description of the property or services to be contracted for, which description is not unnecessarily restrictive of competition;

"(B) the name and address of the officer or employee of the agency who may be contacted for the purpose of obtaining a copy of the solicitation;

"(C) a statement that any person may submit a bid or proposal which shall be considered by the agency; and

"(D) in the case of a procurement using noncompetitive procedures, a statement of the reason justifying the use of noncompetitive procedures and the identity of the intended source.

"(3)(A) A notice is not required under paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection if—

"(i) the notice would disclose the agency's needs and the disclosure of such needs would compromise the national security; or

"(ii) the proposed noncompetitive procurement would result from acceptance of an unsolicited research proposal that demonstrates a unique or innovative research concept and the publication of any notice of such unsolicited research proposal would disclose the originality of thought or innovativeness of the proposed research or proprietary data associated with the proposal.

"(B) The requirements of paragraph (1)(A)(i) of this subsection do not apply—

"(i) to any procurement under conditions described in clause (2), (3), (4), or (5) of section 2304 (e) of this title; and

"(ii) in the case of any procurement for which the head of the agency carrying out such procurement makes a determination in writing, with the concurrence of the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, that it is not appropriate or reasonable to publish a notice before issuing a solicitation."; and

"(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 2316. Record requirements

"(a) Each head of an agency shall establish and maintain for a period of five years a record, by fiscal year, of the procurements, other than small purchases, in such fiscal year in which—

"(1) noncompetitive procedures were used; and

"(2) only one bid or proposal was received after competitive procedures were used.

"(b) The record established under subsection (a) of this section shall include, with respect to each procurement—

"(1) information identifying the source to whom the contract was awarded;

Subtitle D—Applicability

SEC. 41. The amendments made by this title shall apply with respect to any solicitations for bids or proposals issued on or after the date two hundred and seventy days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I am offering this amendment, I believe, as an offer that really cannot be refused. I am offering it on behalf of myself and Senators LEVIN and ROTH. This amendment is identical to S. 338, the Competition in Contracting Act of 1983, which we passed unanimously in this body last November. The reasons I am offering it now are, first, it is projected to save at least $2 billion annually and is therefore consistent with the goal of this bill to reduce the Federal deficit; and second, it is the most expeditious way to insure the enactment of S. 338 this Congress. I might point out there seem to be some procedural difficulties taking place in the House which prevent them from moving forward expeditiously before the end of this session on adopting S. 338 or even something reasonably close to it.

The objective of this amendment is to increase the use of competition in Government contracting and to impose more stringent restrictions on the awarding of noncompetitive—sole-source—contracts.

Each year, the Federal Government spends more than half of its discretionary budget on the procurement of property and services, ranging from weapons systems to janitorial services, from the private sector. According to the Office of Management and Budget, Federal procurement costs in 1985 are projected to be $207 billion—an 88-percent increase from the 1980 level. I am convinced that savings can be realized through the effective implementation of procurement reforms.

The Competition in Contracting Act is one such reform which the Congressional Budget Office estimates would result in significant savings. The CBO found that each 1 percent saved in new contract actions reduces costs by about $200 million per year. Since studies on the use of competitive contracting have concluded that potential savings range from 15 to 50 percent, a conservative estimate of the savings resulting from this amendment would be well over $2 billion.

A number of recent examples come to mind which demonstrate the efficacy of this approach.

The recent Air Force jet engine competition is a good example of how competition in contracting may result in substantial savings. While the Air Force paid a 5-percent premium by having two companies compete rather than awarding a sole-source contract, the expected savings over the next 10 years may exceed $3 billion because the engines will be more dependable and efficient. By dual-sourcing, moreover, the Air Force hopes to continue pressure on the companies to hold down prices and provide service and spares at lower costs.

This amendment represents over 2 years of work, beginning in the 97th Congress with S. 2127, the Competition in Contracting Act of 1982. S. 338 was subsequently introduced in this Congress and has been subject to extensive hearings before the Governmental Affairs and Armed Services Committees, both of which reported the bill unanimously. Considering the bipartisan support for S. 338 in the Senate and widespread support from the administration, the General Accounting Office, the American Bar Association and others throughout the procurement community, I strongly believe that this amendment represents the best opportunity for procurement reform this year.

This amendment, while not intended to be a panacea to our contracting problems, was based on the administration's Feburary 1982 proposal for a uniform Federal procurement system. The administration's proposal, in turn, was based on recommendations from the Commission on Government Procurement's 1972 report to Congress, which set forth nearly 150 recommendations to improve the efficiency of the Federal procurement process.

I repeat, in 1972, the Commission made a recommendation which embodied these principles. Here we are, in 1984, still talking about it.

Despite the consensus that has developed over the past years, the laws which have governed contracting since 1947 have remained largely intact. Under these current laws, Government agencies are required to promote the use of full and free competition in the procurement of property and services. In Government contracting, competition is a marketplace condition which results when several contractors, acting independently of each other and of the Government, submit bids or proposals in an attempt to secure the Government's business.

Formal advertising is currently the preferred procurement procedure, with negotiation authorized by proscribed exceptions. Despite this stated preference for competition through formal advertising, negotiated contracts account for the vast majority of Federal procurement dollars. Negotiated contracts can be competitive—and this amendment recognizes and encourages competitive negotiation when it is the appropriate contracting method—but more than half of all negotiated contracts are sole-sourced.

While not all Government contracts can be awarded competitively, too often agencies contract on a sole-source basis when competition is available. This problem arises from what I consider to be two primary shortcomings in the present laws: First, they do not recognize negotiation as a legitimate competitive procurement procedure; and second, they do not adequately restrict the use of noncompetitive negotiation.

I wish to take this opportunity to summarize the five major provisions of this amendment:

First, this amendment removes the present restriction from—and the written justification required for—competitive negotiation and places it on par with formal advertising. Together, they constitute competitive procedures, with exceptions provided for noncompetitive procedures. The objective is to establish an absolute preference for competition and to provide more flexibility in contracting.

Second, agencies under this amendment are not only required to obtain competition under this amendment, but to increase its effectiveness. Agencies would be required to obtain effective competition through advance procurement planning, market research, and the development of specifications which do not restrict competition.

Third, this amendment places greater restrictions on the use of noncompetitive procurements without precluding its use when necessary. Six exceptions are provided to competitive procedures which permit agencies to use noncompetitive procedures in awarding a contract when competition is not possible. Awarding a contract on a sole-source basis would for the first time constitute a clear violation of statute unless permitted by one of the following six exceptions:

First, the property or service is available from only a single source and no competitive alternatives are available;

Second, the agency's need is of such unusual and compelling urgency that the Government would be seriously injured by the delay involved in using competitive procedures;

Third, the Government needs to award the contract to a particular source in order to create or maintain an essential industrial capability or for purposes of industrial mobilization;

Fourth, the terms of an international agreement have the effect of requiring the use of noncompetitive procedures;

Fifth, a statute requires that the procurement may be obtained through a specified source; or

Sixth, disclosure to more than one source of the property or service to be obtained would jeopardize the national security.

Those, Mr. President, are the six basic exceptions to the rule that we have to have competition. I believe that they would help to narrow the present exceptions down to a more manageable and more realistic level.

These six exceptions parallel the conditions under which the Comptroller General has historically permitted agencies to award on a sole-source basis. Even in these situations, however, I feel there should be a "double-check" for potential competition before the sole-source award is made. The fourth major provision would therefore generally require agencies to publish a notice of their prospective contracts over $25,000 in the Commerce Business Daily. The objective is to alert contractors, who may be capable of meeting the agency's needs but would have otherwise not known of the contract, to submit offers.

Fifth, this amendment facilitates oversight of noncompetitive contracts by requiring agencies to maintain records, by fiscal year, which identify all sole-source procurements. In addition, an advocate for competition would be appointed in each procuring agency who would be responsible for reporting the opportunities to achieve competition and any conditions which could potentially restrict competition.

In summary, Mr. President, I believe this amendment substantially reduces the costly and longstanding problem of unnecessary sole-source contracting. It puts us on record to do what we say we are pledged to do and that is, base our system upon the free enterprise system under the notion that more competition will insure a better product at a lower cost. This amendment also removes what I believe to be the great cynicism that exists and is pervasive in this country—that we have a revolving door from which many people go out of Government into private companies and have a straight line right back into the very agencies that they worked with and thereby have an inside track on getting a sole-source contract which results in millions, and I submit to you billions, of dollars being spent each year unnecessarily. In view of the fact that the Senate has already passed S. 338 unanimously, I hope the chairman of the committee will see fit to accept the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me first say to my good friend from Maine, I think he has an excellent amendment. I am hopeful that we are going to be able to accept it today. Obviously, the amendment under normal circumstances does not belong on a budget proposal, but we do have a substantive bill instead of a budget resolution before us today. It is a law. And since this proposal is not only a substantive change in the law but is clearly prompted by a desire to save substantial amounts of money, and since the report from the Congressional Budget Office would indicate in a very serious way that this is apt, if applied properly, to save $2 billion, I have no objection, if others do not, to voting on this. Hopefully, the vote would be on the Senator's side, he would prevail, and we would take this entire amendment which heretofore was a bill that passed without any objection, as I understand it, by the Senate and for some reason has not yet been considered in the House.

I would like to discuss the matter briefly by asking the Senator a question. First, I think he knows the Senator from New Mexico has the greatest respect for him. I believe he is furnishing a very valuable service to the American people by proposing this competitive measure, but I also think he is doing a marvelous job in enhancing the image of military procurement as an example. Some people do not quite understand that the American people might very well support military preparedness, might support increased budgets for it, more money, new systems, but they, too, have pretty good commonsense approaches to things and when they see noncompetitive approaches, they really need a very valid reason why. If this becomes substantive law, there will be valid reasons for noncompetitive contracts by the Government but the exemptions and the exceptions will be few—am I correct?

Mr. COHEN. That is precisely correct. When we read the horror stories of the thousand-dollar wrenches and plastic caps—and the list of abuses goes on and on—it is because the procuring agency is not taking advantage of the competition in the defense industry. One of the best ways of reducing that kind of outrageous abuse, which is almost tantamount to fraudulent abuse, I might add, is to have greater competition which to date has not been sufficiently accomplished.

I believe that Senator BAUCUS would like to have an opportunity to speak on this matter, although he is not on the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. I want to ask a specific question by way of interpretation and then certainly I will yield the floor and confirm with the leader that it would be all right to accept the amendment or to voice vote it. That is satisfactory to the Senator from New Mexico.

I say to my friend from Maine that I have a situation that does concern me. I believe the Senator has made an exception for it. I find the exception on page 24 of the original S. 338 among those ways that the head of an agency may use noncompetitive procedures and I refer specifically to paragraph 3, item (c), when the Senator is speaking of——

Mr. DOMENICI. Page 24. All right, on the amendment that the Senator has submitted, I believe it is on page 18, top of the page, item (C), six lines down: "or establish or maintain an essential research capability to be provided by an educational or nonprofit institution or a research and development center funded by the United States." I want to ask about that.

In the case of New Mexico—and I am sure this exists across this land—there are certain contracts—let us just give a general one—with the Department of the Army. They have been doing basic research for 10, 15 years and have an established record, have a physical plant, the academic capacity, on an annual basis they make their proposal, and they receive the award. Now, it seems to me that if we forced every one of those kinds of contracts to go to bid, with no exceptions, we clearly could end up with contractors that clearly had no ability or capacity to provide the continuity required for the kind of services needed.

They may be able to do it for 2 years or 3 and then if they went on to something else because the private sector business said get on with something else, we would have to start all over again and perhaps we would lose money over a 5- to 10-year period because sooner or later somebody is going to have to bid the physical plant, have to provide the kind of overhead that maintains some of these very excellent educational or nonprofit type of commitments.

Now, do I understand it is that kind—and perhaps I am even too limited—of exception that the Senator has in mind in the paragraph that I read?

Mr. COHEN. Yes, that is precisely the reason it was incorporated into S. 338, after we consulted at length with educational institutions, not only as an exception to completion but as a criterion for dual sourcing. I might say to the Senator that dual sourcing is not necessarily desirable in every single situation. If you have an aircraft carrier or if you have some large weapons system which is going to cost billions of dollars and is going to be one type of ship over a very long period of time, it does not make a good deal of sense to necessarily have dual sourcing. But when you are dealing with smaller contracts with universities and the types of research capability that is provided by those universities and educational institutions, we felt it made sense to create exceptions in order to preserve that capability.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CHILES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. CHILES. The amendment that the Senator from Maine is proposing is identical to a bill that has passed the Senate. The Senator from Maine has been working on this long and hard in the Committee on Governmental Affairs. It is a proposal that I have certainly supported for a long time. I was a cosponsor of the bill that passed the Senate.

I concur in the remarks of the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee. Normally this is something we would be objecting to on a budget resolution, but we find ourselves not with a budget resolution but a substantive bill. I see no reason why we can raise that objection at this time. Because the legislation has passed the Senate and certainly would invoke savings, I think it is an amendment that we should accept.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays be vitiated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3035) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COHEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3036

(Purpose: To provide for a pay increase for Article III judges subject to salary adjustments pursuant to section 461 of title 28 of the United States Code)

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the Baker amendment and ask that it be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine (Mr. MITCHELL) proposes an amendment numbered 3036.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the amendment insert the following new section:

SEC. . Effective on the first day of the first applicable pay period commencing on or after January 1, 1984, each rate of pay subject to adjustment by section 461 of title 28, United States Code, shall be increased by an amount, rounded to the nearest multiple of $100 (or if midway between multiples of $100, to the next higher multiple of $100), equal to the overall percentage of the adjustment taking effect under section 5305 of title 5, United States Code, in the rates of pay under the General Schedule during fiscal year 1984.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that the names of Senators MATHIAS, THURMOND, BENTSEN, and BOSCHWITZ be added as cosponsors of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the amendment I am offering will authorize a salary adjustment for those Federal judges who have been excluded from salary adjustments afforded most other Federal employees on January 1.

As of January 1, the salary of officers and employees of the U.S. Government were to have been increased 3.5 percent in accordance with President Reagan's recommendation of August 31, 1983 (Presidential Message No. 74, H.R. Doc. No. 98-97), and the "comparability adjustment provisions" of title 5, U.S.C. Under the provisions of section 202, Public Law 98-270, which was enacted just this month, Federal pay rates have been increased another 0.5 percent retroactive to January 1.

One distinct class of Government officers, however, has been denied the total 4 percent adjustment, Fedeal judges. Judges of the appeals courts and district courts, the Justices of the Supreme Court, judges of the Military Court of Appeal, judges of the U.S. Tax Court and senior judges for the article III courts have been excluded from any salary adjustment, an inequitable consequence directly attributable to an amendment added to a continuing resolution for fiscal year 1982 passed in December 1981.

That amendment, section 140, Public Law 97-92 requires express statutory authorization for any increase in judicial salaries. The Comptroller General of the United States has determined that this provision is permanent legislation, and as such, was not limited to fiscal year 1982. This removes judges from coverage of the Executive Salary Cost-of-Living Adjustment Act of 1975 and in the annual payroll comparability adjustments received by other Federal employees.

My amendment would constitute the required statutory authorization to enable members of the judiciary to receive a pay raise this fiscal year equal to the pay raise given to other Federal employees. Under my amendment, outlays will increase under $2 million. Since that is the same amount that is included in the CBO baseline, my amendment does not add to the deficit, according to the method of accounting used by the Congressional Budget Office.

As the Comptroller General has interpreted section 140, Public Law 97-92, judges, and judges only, are singled out for special treatment. Judges, and judges only, are precluded from the operation of statutory provisions applicable to all other employees of the Federal Government. Judges, and judges only, have to overcome the hurdle of affirmative congressional action that no other Federal employee need face. That prejudicial, discriminatory treatment is precisely what article III of the Constitution was intended by our Founding Fathers to prevent.

Section 1, article III, of the U.S. Constitution, which provides that "Judges * * * shall * * * receive for their Services, a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office," was designed to further three public policies: To promote the independence of the judiciary, to attract the highest quality lawyers to the bench, and to reinforce the guarantee of life tenure for Federal judges.

The current system of judicial compensation, however, undermines all of these policies. Faced with salaries that are slipping behind the cost of living, and, perhaps most critically, other career opportunities open to them, many judges are moving closer to the point where they must decide, for financial reasons, to leave the bench. At the same time, lawyers of the caliber sought for Federal judgeships are declining nominations for these same reasons.

If we fail to correct this situation quickly, we may see the judiciary lose the services of those individuals who serve it best: Those who will not permit their performance in office or their personal integrity to be compromised or questioned.

Before assuming my current office, I was a Federal judge in Maine. Perhaps because I have served as a Federal judge, I have heard, directly or indirectly, from or about many judges around this country. What I see on the part of the Federal judiciary is an increasing apprehensiveness over action or inaction on the part of Congress vitally affecting their security and their ability to plan for their families. So intense is this apprehensiveness becoming that we, perhaps unintentionally, are well along toward achieving precisely what the Constitution seeks to avoid: A judiciary in fear of a retributive Congress. Passage of this amendment is one step toward assuaging those fears.

I believe it is a mistake for Congress to have made available routine cost-of-living adjustments to the employees and top officials in the legislative branch, to the employees and top officials in the executive branch, and to employees in the judicial branch, but not to Federal judges. Decency, equity, and commonsense require immediate remedial legislative action to confer upon judges the same adjustment all others are already receiving.

Commonsense requires corrective action to insure that this situation does not arise again. Legislation which I introduced in January, S. 2224, would repeal section 140, Public Law 97-92 so that the Senate would not have to address this issue again and again and again in future years. That is the course I recommend to my colleagues.

This amendment, however, would only constitute the required authorization to enable members of the judiciary to receive a pay raise this year. It would not repeal or alter in any way section 140 of Public Law 97-92 which is the underlying cause of this immediate problem.

My amendment is a first step which I hope the Senate will support so that these highly deserving individuals will not be singularly excluded from an otherwise across-the-board pay increase retroactive to January 1.

Mr. President, I understand that this matter has been cleared with the manager of the bill, Senator DOMENICI, and with Senator CHILES, the ranking minority member.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I have not talked to Senator DOMENICI, but it is my understanding that this has not been cleared on this side of the aisle.

At this point, I should like to add something with respect to procedure that may relieve some fear the Senator might have as a result of what I have just said.

It would be our intention on this side that the Senator's amendment be the pending order of business when the Senate reconvenes in the morning, and this afternoon we would like to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to that, but I have been informed—obviously erroneously, because I accept what the Senator has said—that Senator DOMENICI had agreed to this.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I will let the Senator from New Mexico, the distinguished chairman of the committee, speak for himself at this point.

Mr. MITCHELL. Obviously, I have been misinformed.

Mr. GRASSLEY. That can happen. But I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not know what the issue is. I have just returned to the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is the cost-of-living increase which was granted to all Federal employees, the one-half of 1 percent which was added to legislation recently enacted; and because of section 140 of Public Law 97-92, it does not go to Federal judges.

Express statutory authorization is required for any increase to be received. My amendment would constitute that authority, so as to permit the judges to receive the additional one-half of 1 percent that is going to all other employees of the Federal Government.

Mr. DOMENICI. I understand the issue.

The Senator from Maine and I talked about the incremental amount of one-half of 1 percent; but the Senator from New Mexico, as floor manager, cannot accept the amendment. There are Members who want to address the issue. Some may want to insist upon a rollcall vote, and some may want to oppose it on a rollcall vote. So I am not in a position to do anything more than to say that we are prepared to take it up. But if the Senator brought it up because he thought it would be accepted, I do not want to mislead him, and I will do anything possible to alleviate his situation. He can withdraw it or do whatever he wishes at this point. However, because of objections, I cannot agree to accept it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that. I brought it up under the misapprehension that it had been cleared, but I do not wish to withdraw it. If others wish to oppose it and to have a vote on it, we will proceed to do that tomorrow.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, is this amendment going to be taken up now or on another day? I want to say a few words in favor of this amendment, of which I am a cosponsor. Is this an appropriate time?

Mr. MITCHELL. The amendment is now pending. It is appropriate for the Senator to discuss it now. It will be the order of business tomorrow, and there may be a vote on it tomorrow. I welcome the Senator's remarks.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor this amendment with my distinguished colleague from Maine, Senator MITCHELL. His amendment would constitute the necessary congressional authorization to give members of the Federal judiciary the same pay raise already given to other Federal officers and employees. This amendment would not, however, repeal or alter the requirement in existing law that Congress specifically authorize any salary increases for the article III Federal judiciary.

On March 26 of this year, I introduced a bill, S. 2476, which would accomplish the same goal as the Mitchell amendment. That bill, cosponsored by Senators MITCHELL, DOLE, MATHIAS, DECONCINI, and BENTSEN, would have given all Federal judges and justices a 3.5 salary increase retroactive to January 1, 1984. Like the pending Mitchell amendment, it did not repeal or alter current law requiring congressional authorization for such an increase.

As many of my colleagues will recall, Congress in December of 1981 passed, as part of the continuing resolution for fiscal year 1982 appropriations, a provision requiring express statutory authorization for any increase in judicial salaries. Subsequent to passage of this appropriations rider, the Comptroller General of the United States determined that this provision, section 140 of Public Law 97-92, was permanent legislation, not limited to fiscal year 1982.

This change effectively removed judges from coverage of the Executive Salary Cost-of-Living Adjustment Act of 1975, which had included judges, as well as Members of Congress and high-ranking executive branch officials, in the annual payroll comparability adjustments received by other Federal employees. Thus, Federal judges and justices were not allowed the salary increase received this year by other Federal employees because there was no specific authorization for such an increase. The decision of the Comptroller General of the United States is file No. B-200923, December 28, 1983, and that determined that no such specific authorization had been enacted.

This amendment would constitute the required authorization to enable members of the judiciary to receive a pay raise this year. It would not repeal—I want to repeat this—it would not repeal or alter in any way section 140 of Public Law 97-92. Express statutory authorization by Congress would continue to be necessary for any salary increases for the Federal judiciary.

Mr. President, I strongly support the existing requirement for such specific statutory authorization. Rather than including more Federal employees within automatic pay adjustment provisions, we should be including more Federal employees within the requirement that Congress specifically authorize their pay increases. It will be difficult, if not impossible, for Congress to establish any control over Federal spending while automatic pay adjustments and cost-of-living increases in a variety of areas slowly but steadily increase the costs of Government. Congress should begin by reasserting its control over Federal pay increases, especially for those employees covered by the Executive Salary Cost-of-Living Adjustment Act of 1985 and should face up to the difficult decisions which we were elected to make.

Mr. President, I am in favor of fair and equitable treatment of all Federal employees. That is why I support this amendment giving members of the Federal judiciary the pay increase received by all other Federal workers. I would be strongly opposed, however—and I want to repeat—I would be strongly opposed to any repeal of the requirement for statutory authorization for such increases. This is a sound principle which should be extended to cover more Federal employees.

Mr. President, I just wish to say that it is my judgment that Congress should have to approve each year any increases for any Government employees and not have automatic increases.

This does not give an automatic increase. As I said, I am opposed to that. But we have already given the other Federal employees an increase. Why not give the judges a similar increase?

That is all this amendment does, as I understand it; is that not correct?

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator is correct.

I should note, as the Senator has indicated, all other employees of the Federal Government have now received a 4-percent increase, first 3½ percent, then an additional one-half of 1 percent. Federal judges have received neither because they have received none. They did not get the 3½ percent; they did not get the additional one-half percent.

So we are talking here about a 4-percent increase that has been provided, as the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee has made clear, to all other Federal employees other than the 700 men and women who serve as Federal judges.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, it seems to me this would be a fair step to take. Just give the judges the same increase as others, no more, no less. I feel that it is reasonable under the circumstances.

Again I wish to say I am not in favor, as some people are, of just having automatic increases. That is one thing that has gotten this country into the trouble it is in today. That is one thing that has gotten the budget into the trouble that it is in today—automatic increases. Some years we may be able to do it; other years we may not be able to do it.

But this year we have already given it to the other employees, so I say let us give it to the judges, also, this year.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I do not very often disagree with the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, who is also chairman of the Judiciary Committee on which I serve, but this is one of those opportunities that seldom occur in which I feel I must take exception to the amendment that is being proposed by the Senator from Maine and now supported by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

I wish to say that we are dealing with an effort here in the Chamber on reconciliation in which our thrust is almost totally the reduction of the level of expenditures. This would be the wrong time to make an exception to that.

I also wish to say that we in this body have already taken the opportunity to disapprove of the pay raise that was voted to Members of Congress. We have expressed our opposition to pay raises and at this time of the year when we are faced with $200 billion budget deficits, it is no time to think about increasing anything.

I think the debate of whether or not there should be automatic increases, or whether they should be voted by us and our being on record in each instance is a very worthy debate. But that is not the real issue before us as far as what we are faced with here.

I wish to have my colleagues be cognizant of what Federal judges make at this point.

The Chief Justices' salary is $100,700; the Associate Justices, $96,700; the U.S. circuit court of appeals judges, $77,300; the U.S. district court judges, $73,100; the Court of International Trade judges, $73,100; the U.S. Court of Military Appeals, $77,300; and judges of the U.S. Tax Court, $73,100.

Now, if this salary increase were to go through, as suggested by my good friend from Maine, there would be increases from a high of $3,500 for the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, to a smaller increase of $2,600 for the U.S. district court judges.

The bottom line is that once a judge's salary is increased, of course, under the Constitution, it cannot be decreased because the Constitution says that Federal judges compensation, "* * * shall not be diminished during their continuance in office."

Now if we were to approve a pay raise for Federal judges, it would be impossible to reduce it if congressional pay were later reduced. As I said, we in the Senate have previously passed this. This would result in even greater differences between congressional and judges salaries.

Now, I know this issue has not been presented so far in this debate, but I would remind all of my colleagues that there was a relationship until about 3 years ago between what judges were paid and what we in the Congress, both the House and the Senate, were paid. Basically there was a relationship at the district judge level that they would not receive more than Members of Congress would. This would be even further distorted if we were to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Maine and then later have our salary decreased as a result of our earlier vote.

Now I pointed out, in my listing of what the pay is for the various members of the judiciary, that the weighted average is $75,000, but even for those at the district court level, where I said that there was parity between Members of Congress and district courts until very recently, that level is distorted to a point where those judges of the district court now receive $73,100.

So for all the various reasons given, I think that this amendment should be disapproved. But most important, we do not want to approve the amendment at this time, when we are considering bringing the Federal budget deficit under control. It has very little control now, so we want to institute not just greater control, but control, period. It would set a very poor example if we were to approve this amendment at this point.

Consequently, we are asking that this amendment be disapproved and that when we have ordered the yeas and nays—and we would hope that they would be ordered—that we would have a resounding no vote on this amendment and in support of fiscal austerity. This is a time when, quite frankly, almost any increase in any pay level of any position within the Federal Government is not going to set a very good example, as we go into private sector negotiations on collective bargaining agreements that are up this fall.

We in the Federal Government ought to be setting an example. And there is no place it can be better set than as we deal with public officials, including judges of the various courts.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for this comments, and I certainly understand them.

The question of pay for Members of Congress is, of course, one of the most awkward issues with which we, as Members of Congress, must deal. But it is unfortunate, I think, that we would permit our own difficulty with our own salaries to affect the legitimate views of the small number of people who the President nominates, and we confirm, to make decisions regarding issues of great importance to the people of this country.

I emphasize that we are talking about 700 people in all—that is all there are—700 Federal judges who would be affected by this. The total amount involved in less than $2 million. So we are dealing with 700 people out of millions of Federal employees and less than $2 million out of billions of Federal spending. And the notion that we are somehow going to balance the budget or make a major step toward balancing the budget if we will just single out 700 Federal judges, deny them the pay increase that has been granted to very other Federal employee, is, I submit, preposterous on its face.

But, second, I would point out to the Senator from Iowa, who has unfortunately since left the Chamber, that the $1,900,000 which this amendment would entail is included in the CBO baseline assumption which is used in the budget resolution. Therefore, this amendment's adoption will have no effect on the deficit when contrasted with the budget resolution which, as I said, incorporates the CBO baseline figures.

So if that is the only argument to be made, then there really is no argument. It seems to me what we have is an attitude that has existed and continues to exist. It is understandable in human terms, but it makes no sense in logic, either for this body or for this country, that because of our own difficulties with pay raises—and it is a difficult, awkward issue, I concede that—that we somehow improve our own circumstance by denying the Federal judges an increase that was granted to every other employee of the Government. I do not think it makes any sense. I hope very much that the Members of this body will agree and approve this amendment.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, if there are no further arguments to be made at this time, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). The Clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there is a request for the yeas and nays on this amendment, as I have advised the distinguished Senator from Maine. By the same token, for a variety of reasons—numbering about 30—I would prefer not to vote this afternoon. It seems agreeable with the Senator from Maine that we try to arrange a time in the morning. We have not yet done that. I wish to confer with the minority leader before we go any further. But, in the meantime, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not past the hour of 5 p.m. in which Senators may speak for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there will be no more rollcall votes today.

DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks of our distinguished leader, the senior Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), made today at the Holocaust ceremony in the great rotunda of the U.S. Capitol, be made a part of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY SENATOR BAKER AT CEREMONY COMMEMORATING VICTIMS OF THE HOLOCAUST

Mr. BAKER. I am honored to join you today for this special ceremony commemorating the victims of the Holocaust. It has been nearly 40 years now since the end of World War II and the liberation of the death camps in which 6 million people were put to death at the hands of the Nazis.

As General Eisenhower described one such camp, it was a horror almost beyond human comprehension, and yet it was an act of atrocity by humans against humans—not a passionate struggle in battle, but bureaucratized, systemized, authorized evil.

It is the way of human nature to block such horrors from our consciousness, to bury them beneath our memory, to convince ourselves that they are aberrations that "couldn't happen here."

It is for precisely this reason that we come together here today in the Rotunda, which so clearly symbolizes this country's struggle for freedom. We must make people think and remember and understand how fragile is the separation between civilization and barbarism, between the precious rights we take for granted, and the monstrous wrongs of which man is capable.

I join with each of you today not only to memorialize the victims of the Holocaust, but to join with you in renewing our pledge to ensure that we never forget the Holocaust and its horrors and to remember that "all that is necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men and women to do nothing."

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have been advised by the minority leader that there is no objection on his side to the consideration of one item on today's Executive Calendar. I refer to Calendar No. 568, the nomination of Lloyd D. George, of Nevada, to be U.S. District Judge for the district of Nevada.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now go into executive session for the purpose of considering that nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE JUDICIARY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Lloyd D. George, of Nevada, to be U.S. District Judge for the district of Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the nomination was confirmed, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the President be immediately notified that the Senate has given its consent to this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

S. 2570. An act to continue the transition provisions of the Bankruptcy Act until May 26, 1984, and for other purposes.

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of April 26, 1984, the enrolled bill was signed on April 26, 1984, during the adjournment of the Senate by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary reported that on April 26, 1984, he had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bill:

S. 2570. An act to continue the transition provisions of the Bankruptcy Act until May 26, 1984, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-610. A resolution adopted by the Olymphant Borough Council, Olyphant, Pennsylvania urging Congress to direct the Environmental Protection Agency to recognize Giardia as a water pollutant; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

POM-611. A resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Syracuse, New York urging Congress to reauthorize Issuance of Mortgage Revenue Bonds; to the Committee on Finance.

POM-612. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio; to the Committee on Finance.

"RESOLUTION

"Whereas, The members of the 115th General Assembly of Ohio wish to take this opportunity to memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact into law H.R. 4352, known as the Fair Trade in Steel Act of 1983, which would temporarily limit imports of steel mill products into the United States; and

"Whereas, The United States steel industry is critical to the national defense and to maintaining a strong industrial economy, on which millions of Americans depend for their livelihood. Over the past twenty years, unfair trade practices in the international steel market, such as subsidization, dumping, industrial targeting, discriminatory bilateral agreements, selling below cost, and other predatory practices have substantially injured the United States steel industry; and

"Whereas, Continuing financial losses in the domestic steel industry are a threat to national military security and economic prosperity. In the past decade, the industry has seen a drastic reduction in employment, a drop in steelmaking capability, the permanent and temporary closure of plants and facilities, and the costly deferral and cancellation of vital capital investment projects. These trends are evidence that existing United States trade statutes have failed to deal effectively with the problem of widespread unfair trade practices, and that new legislation is needed to save an ailing industry; and

"Whereas, In order to promote and expand the economic viability of the United States steel industry, to protect the jobs of its workers, and to prevent the industry's further decline, it seems necessary and appropriate to limit imports of carbon, alloy, and specialty steel mill products for at least five years. It is hoped that this action will safeguard the national security, reduce unfair trade and ensure orderly trade in steel mill products; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the members of the 115th General Assembly of Ohio, in adopting this Resolution, petition the Congress of the United States to enact H.R. 4352, known as the Fair Trade in Steel Act of 1983, and by this action enable the domestic steel industry to become fully competitive in the world market; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the Senate transmit duly authenticated copies of this Resolution to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the members of the Ohio Congressional Delegation, and the news media of Ohio."

POM-613. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the State of Rhode Island; to the Committee on Finance.

"SENATE RESOLUTION

"Whereas, Spiraling costs for physicians' services and hospitalization threaten to deprive many elderly citizens, handicapped persons, and persons on fixed incomes of affordable health care; and

"Whereas, While theories abound on the reasons for the rise in health care costs, no action yet taken has been successful in controlling these increased costs; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this senate of the state of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations hereby respectfully memorializes the congress of the United States to investigate, through a proper committee, the high costs of physicians services and hospital services in this country for the elderly and handicapped with an eye toward the imposition of possible excess profit taxes similar to those imposed on the oil companies; and be it further

"Resolved, That duly certified copies of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of this senate, to the House and Senate of the Congress of the United States and to the repective members of the state of Rhode Island congressional delegation."

POM-614. A resolution adopted by the City Council and the County of Honolulu, Hawaii relating to the reauthorization of mortgage revenue bonds; to the Committee on Finance.

POM-615. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Kentucky; to the Committee on Finance.

"A CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

"Whereas, the American steel industry has engaged in extraordinary self-help efforts including the commitment of millions of dollars to modernization and the reduction of employment cost; and

"Whereas, foreign steel imports now account for approximately twenty percent (20%) of the steel consumed in the United States; and

"Whereas, the American steel and coal industries, and those particularly in Kentucky, are suffering from painfully high levels of unemployment which result in large measure from foreign steel imports; and

"Whereas, most steel entering the United States is unfairly traded because it is dumped, subsidized or the beneficiary of targeted foreign government development assistance; and

"Whereas, United States trade laws have been ineffective in stemming the tide of unfairly traded foreign steel; and

"Whereas, unfair trade in steel is the single most serious threat to the survival of a healthy industry in Kentucky and in the United States; and

"Whereas, the American steel industry produces industrial material which is essential to the United States economy and necessary to our national defense; and

"Whereas, the steel industry is an important part of the Kentucky economy, providing employment for thousands of the Commonwealth's residents; and

"Whereas, the American steel industry and Kentucky's coal mining industry are linked by an important and mutually beneficial customer-supplier relationship; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, the Senate concurring therein:

"SECTION 1. That the Commonwealth of Kentucky urges Congress to support the Fair Trade in Steel Act of 1983 which limits imports of foreign steel to not more than fifteen percent (15%) of American steel, consumption for a period of at least five (5) years; and

"SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be sent to each member of the Kentucky delegation to Congress, each member of the Congressional Steel Caucus, the presiding officers of each House of Congress, and the President of the United States."

POM-616. A resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska; to the Committee on Finance.

"LEGISLATIVE RESOLUTION 279

"Whereas, the Social Security Amendments of 1983, Public Law 98-21, completely altered Medicare reimbursement for in-patient hospital services by creating the prospective payment system (PPS); and

"Whereas, the Medicare PPS is being phased in over a three year period to prospectively reimburse hospitals on a fixed price based on the principal diagnosis of the patient and known as diagnostic related groups (DRGs); and

"Whereas, this system of predetermined rates totally reverses the incentives of the retrospective payment system used since the creation of the Medicare program and may be applied to other providers, such as physicians and skilled nursing care, in the near future; and

"Whereas, the new Medicare reimbursement system will provide incentives for hospitals to control health care costs; and

"Whereas, many of the effects of the new system are not yet known and may result in the closing of many hospitals across the United States; and

"Whereas, Nebraska's rural health care structure, consisting primarily of rural hospitals and nursing homes smaller than the national average and a higher proportion of primary care physicians, may be effected in a manner substantially different than in other states; and

"Whereas, an example is demonstrated by the PPS formula which is based in part on the Wage Index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, adjusted for local wage rates; and

"Whereas, this index does not account for differences between full-time and part-time employees and many of Nebraska's rural and metropolitan hospitals employ a large percentage of part-time workers in their efforts to contain hospital costs; and

"Whereas, this index fails to recognize differences in rural hospital wages due to hospital size and specialization of services provided; and

"Whereas, this wage index fails to recognize that wages for rural hospitals located adjacent to metropolitan areas or with specialized employees must be competitive; and

"Whereas, the Medicare PPS wage formula currently affects Nebraska hospitals in an inequitable manner and a change in the formula to reflect these differences would increase the wage index component for rural hospitals in Nebraska as well as in Lincoln and Omaha; and

Whereas, the Health Care Financing Administration should recognize the intent of Congress in the development of the wage index and make monetary adjustments for inadequacies in this index; and

Whereas, when Congress reconvenes on January 23, 1984, the Senate will begin debate on S. 2062, which includes an amendment to correct the PPS formula and reflect such wage differences; and

Whereas, the House of Representatives will consider H.R. 4170, including an amendment to provide an appeal process for situations where the wage index is inequitable; and

Whereas, the Nebraska Congressional delegation has been instrumental in the effort to correct the inequity in the current wage index; and

Whereas, the magnitude of the Medicare PPS and its potential effect on the state indicate a need for the State of Nebraska to become more actively involved in federal health policies; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Members of the Eighty-eighth Legislature of Nebraska, Second Session:

"1. That the State of Nebraska assume an advocacy role in monitoring federal health policies and developing responses to policies which adversely impact the state in an inequitable manner.

"2. That the Legislature carefully examine health care cost containment issues at the state level in light of the recent federal policy changes.

"3. That the Legislature recognize the efforts of the Reagan administration and the Congress of the United States to develop cost containment mechanisms through a prospective Medicare reimbursement system.

"4. That the Legislature urge the Members of Congress to actively support and vote favorably for amendments to S. 2062 and H.R. 4170 which will correct the current inadequacy of the wage index used in the PPS formula.

"5. That the Clerk of the Legislature send copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, and Members of Congress representing the State of Nebraska."

POM-617. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Finance.

"RESOLUTION

"Whereas, There is a substantial imbalance in international wine trade resulting from the easy accessibility enjoyed by foreign wines to the California market which is in direct contrast to the export position of the California wine industry in virtually every existing or potential foreign wine market; and

"Whereas, The United States government does not impose any nontariff trade obstacles to the entry, distribution, and sale of foreign wines; and

"Whereas, Foreign wines move freely in the American market subject only to the same laws and regulations which apply to American wines and to payment of the lowest duties assessed anywhere in the world by a significant wine-producing country on foreign wine; and

"Whereas, Even though California produces some of the finest wines in the world, this state's wine producers who seek to market their products abroad are faced with a maze of restrictive and prohibitive tariff and nontariff barriers, thus placing California wine producers in an unfair position; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the California Legislature hereby respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to enact legislation that would accomplish all the following:

"(1) Achieve access to foreign markets for United States wine substantially equivalent to the market access afforded to foreign wine by the United States.

"(2) Provide the President of the United States with the authority and remedies to deal with trade barriers relating to wine; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

POM-618. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Georgia; to the Committee on Finance.

"A RESOLUTION

"Whereas, the Congress of the United States has enacted legislation establishing the Medicaid Program; and

"Whereas, the Secretary of Health and Human Services has promulgated regulations governing eligibility standards for Medicaid recipients and state participation in the Medicaid Program; and

"Whereas, the Medicaid regulations provide that in the case of institutionalized individuals eligible for Medicaid coverage, such individual's income, excluding a "personal needs allowance," must be applied to cover the cost of that individual's care; and

"Whereas, the Medicaid regulations provide that the personal needs allowance must be at least $25.00 per month for the aged, blind, or disabled individual and at least $50.00 per month for an institutionalized couple if both spouses are aged, blind, or disabled and their income is considered available to each other in determining eligibility; and

"Whereas, the amounts of personal needs allowance required to be protected by the Medicaid regulations have not been increased since January, 1974, although social security payments and inflation have increased substantially during that time period; and

"Whereas, the increase in social security payments made on behalf of such institutionalized Medicaid recipients has been used solely to pay for the cost of such patients' care with no portion thereof being available to cover increases in the cost of the patients' personal needs; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Georgia, That this body respectfully requests the Congress of the United States to enact legislation and requests the Secretary of Health and Human Services to promulgate regulations to increase the amounts of personal needs allowance required to be protected for institutionalized Medicaid recipients who are aged, blind, and disabled to at least $35.00 per month for individuals and $70.00 per month for institutionalized couples and to provide for periodic automatic increases in such amounts based on the percentage increase in any social security assistance payments.

"Be it further resolved That the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed to transmit an appropriate copy of this resolution to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, to the President of the United States Senate, and to each and every member of the Georgia congressional delegation."

POM-619. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

"RESOLUTION

"Whereas, 'Project: Bring Americans Home' is a volunteer, nonprofit organization, based in Orange County, California, that is dedicated to the identification and prompt repatriation of fellow American citizens unlawfully imprisoned as a consequence of past military hostilities in Southeast Asia; and

"Whereas, Reliable information available to the United States Government indicates that substantial numbers of the 2,494 Americans officially listed as "missing in action" are in fact held in physical custody by one or more estranged governments of Southeast Asia; and

"Whereas, 'Project: Bring Americans Home' supports a reasoned and responsible effort to resolve this highly emotional issue of human enslavement by nonviolent, diplomatic initiatives even after 12 years of deliberate delay and misinformation by the offending nations; and

"Whereas, The continuing injustices imposed upon those captive American citizens and their families must be condemned as ongoing violations of international law and human decency, as well as a latent threat to the ultimate achievement of world peace; now, therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California hereby memorializes the President and Congress of the United States to take immediate appropriate action to secure the prompt release of all American personnel now held as military or diplomatic prisoners by certain nations of Southeast Asia, including the governments of Vietnam and Laos; and be it further

"Resolved, That the California Legislature herewith conveys the commendation and appreciation of the people of California to the organizers and participants of 'Project: Bring Americans Home' for their exemplary efforts to secure the freedom of unjustly detained American servicemen; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, and to the Chairperson of 'Project: Bring Americans Home.'"

POM-620. A resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Hawaii; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

HOUSE RESOLUTION

"Whereas, although the United States, along with Great Britain, and the Soviet Union signed and ratified a Nuclear Test Ban Treaty in 1963 banning atmospheric, outer space and underwater testing, nuclear weapons testing in the Pacific Basin continues; and

"Whereas, France, one of the international community's largest producer and supplier of nuclear weaponry has conducted nuclear testing that virtually destroyed one Pacific atoll and currently is threatening to do the same to another while leaking radioactive materials into the seabed; and

"Whereas, as an intrinsic part of the Pacific Basin community, residents of Hawaii are deeply affected by the apparent insensitivity of the nuclear powers' unclear and inconsistent policies regarding nuclear weapon testing; and

"Whereas, the potential and actual hazardous and destructive effects of nuclear testing on the environment and all forms of life must be averted; and

"Whereas, the well-being of the people of the Pacific Basin demands that the leaders of our nation make every possible effort toward keeping the Pacific Basin free of all nuclear weapon testing; now, therefore,

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twelfth Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Session of 1984, that President Ronald Reagan, Secretary of State, George P. Schultz, and the United States Congress work toward the banning of all forms of nuclear weapon testing in the Pacific Basin, and

"Be it further resolved That certified copies of this Resolution be transmitted to President Ronald Reagan, Secretary of State, George P. Schultz, the Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, the President of the U.S. Senate, members of Hawaii's Congressional delegation, the President of France, Francois Mitterrand, and the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Margaret Thatcher."

POM-621. A resolution adopted by the City of Dothan, Ala., relating to the Civil Rights Act of April 20, 1871; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POM-622. A resolution adopted by the Executive Committee of the National Institute of Municipal Law Officers urging Congress to adopt the amendments to the Bankruptcy Act which were developed by the U.S. Conference of Mayors and the National Association of Bond Lawyers Bankruptcy Project; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POM-623. A resolution adopted by the Ninth Circuit District Judges Association relating to the Criminal Justice Act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POM-624. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the State of Iowa; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

"SENATE RESOLUTION 107

"Whereas, the economy of Iowa is heavily dependent upon the well-being of the agricultural producers of this state; and

"Whereas, the Iowa producers of cattle, hogs, sheep, grains, and soybeans are large in number but small in market power because each individual producer constitutes only a miniscule segment of the producers of the agricultural product; and

"Whereas, markets into which the agricultural producers of Iowa sell are highly concentrated and are susceptible to pricing collusion because of the small numbers of purchasers with significant market shares; and

"Whereas, the markets into which the agricultural producers of Iowa sell are in interstate commerce and thus subject to the jurisdiction of the United States of America; and

"Whereas, agricultural producers of Iowa typically sell their commodities to middleman handlers before they reach the buyer with the highly concentrated market power; and

"Whereas, the Supreme Court of the United States has interpreted Section 4 of the Clayton Act as preventing persons not dealing directly with price fixers from suing for damages resulting from the price fix, even though the middleman has no significant damage and all damage is aimed at and incurred by the indirect sellers, such as the agricultural producers of Iowa; and

"Whereas, there has been introduced into the Senate of the United States a bill to amend the Clayton Act to allow certain sellers of agricultural products to bring antitrust actions to redress injuries by an action in damages; now therefore,

"Be it resolved by the Senate, That the Congress of the United States be encouraged to enact into law the Agricultural Producers Antitrust Access Act now pending for consideration before the United States Senate in order to protect the interests of Iowa producers of cattle, hogs, sheep, grains, and soybeans from price fixing and other violations of the antitrust laws occurring in interstate commerce and now insulated from effective redress by federal court interpretations of Illinois Brick v. Illinois, 432 U.S. 720 (1977), and Hanover Shoe Co. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., 392 U.S. 481, (1968), and

"Be it further resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States Senate and all members of the Iowa Congressional Delegation."

POM-625. A joint resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

"SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION No. 16

"Whereas, The Constitution of the United States requires members of the House of Representatives to have attained twenty-five years of age, have been a citizen of the United States for seven years, and inhabit the state from which they are chosen; and

"Whereas, The Constitution of the United States requires members of the Senate to have attained thirty years of age, have been a citizen of the United States for nine years, and inhabit the state from which they are chosen; and

"Whereas, The Constitution of the United States requires a member of the House of Representatives or a member of the Senate to be a citizen of the United States for a specified period of time so that such members may apprise themselves of the ideals and needs of their adopted country, and the Constitution should also require that such member inhabit, for a specified period of time, the state from which he is chosen so that such members may also apprise themselves of the ideals and needs of the state which they not only inhabit but represent at the Congress of the United States; and

"Whereas, The requirement that a member of either the House of Representatives or the Senate merely inhabit the state from which he is chosen was appropriate for an agrarian nation which had little personal mobility but is not appropriate for a highly industrialized nation with a great deal of personal mobility; now, therefore,

"Be It Resolved by the Senate of the Fifty-fourth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, the House of Representatives concurring herein:

"That the General Assembly hereby petitions the Congress of the United States to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and to submit such amendment to the state legislatures for ratification, in a form substantially as follows:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the age of twenty-five years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, for at least the twelve months next preceding his election, have been a qualified elector within the territory of the state in which he shall be chosen.

"SEC. 2. No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of thirty years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, for at least the twelve months next preceding his election, have been a qualified elector within the territory of the state in which he shall be chosen.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission."

"Be it further resolved, That copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to each member of Congress from the State of Colorado."

"HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION No. 1017

"Whereas, American servicemen throughout the history of the United States have been called upon to uphold the ideals and honor forming the principles upon which this country was founded; and

"Whereas, In the course of defending our country, many servicemen have been put at risk of loss or capture at the hands of the enemy; and

"Whereas, April 9 commemorates the fall of Bataan in the dark days of World War II, and the memories of that battle cause us to stop and consider not only the 12,000 soldiers captured there, but also the approximately 127,000 other soldiers who were prisoners of war during the remainder of World War II and the 4,900 soldiers who were prisoners of war during the Korean conflict; and

"Whereas, Most poignantly and recently, American soldiers have been prisoners of war while serving in Vietnam and, in a number of situations, soldiers remain missing in action long after American involvement in the conflict has ended; and

"Whereas, The families of those soldiers missing in action from the Vietnam War live with uncertainty about the fate of their loved ones to this day; and

"Whereas, It is fitting and proper to remember those both living and dead who were prisoners of war or missing in action in each and every American military action, up to and including the present; now, therefore,

"Be It Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fourth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, the Senate concurring herein:

"That April 9 shall be designated as POW-MIA Day to honor and remember those soldiers who have been prisoners of war or missing in action while defending the honor and ideals of the United States in military conflicts and that, in memory of those brave soldiers, we send our condolences to the families of those still considered missing in action.

By Mr. THURMOND (for himself and Mr. BIDEN) (by request):

S. 2606. A bill to authorize appropriations for the purpose of carrying out the activities of the Department of Justice for fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEAR 1985

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, at the request of the administration, and on behalf of myself and the ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee, Senator JOSEPH R. BIDEN, Jr., I am introducing a bill authorizing certain activities of, and appropriations for, the Department of Justice.

Last year, the Department sent two bills to Congress. The first primarily authorized appropriations for fiscal year 1984. The second would have enacted into the United States Code various authorities which traditionally have been part of the annual authorization bill, such as those relating to the purchase of vehicles and firearms, and some new provisions. The request for this change in approach stemmed from "serious concern" on the part of the administration that authorizing legislation for the Department had not been enacted since fiscal year 1980, except on a continuing basis. There was even a lapse in that continuing authorization during 1982, with considerable confusion and disruption.

Mr. President, since we also felt great concern and frustration about the authorization situation, Senator BIDEN and I carefully examined the proposal relating to permanent authority with an eye toward minimizing the disruptive effects of the annual authorization process on the Department, while preserving the important oversight responsibilities of the Committee on the Judiciary. When the committee reported the fiscal year 1984 authorization bill (S. 1192), it adopted an amendment in the nature of a substitute aimed at achieving that goal, which I offered, along with Senator BIDEN. That amendment provided appropriations ceilings for fiscal year 1984, created permanent authority for routine, noncontroversial activities of the Department, and retained annual authority for sensitive Department activities and new functions requested by the Department. The bill, as amended, passed this body without objection last summer.

The bill requested by the Department this year essentially combines the two bills submitted last year, with a few new requests. As a result, the amendment sponsored by myself and Senator BIDEN last year will serve as a good basis for beginning work on the fiscal year 1985 bill. We will take under careful consideration any new authority requested in order to continue strengthening our Federal law enforcement effort.

Mr. President, I want to thank the various committee members for their past assistance in processing authorization bills. Senator BIDEN and his staff have been especially cooperative in this effort. I look forward to continuing our fruitful working relationship in connection with the fiscal year 1985 measure. Hopefully, with the responsible cooperation of all of our colleagues here and in the other body, we will be able to enact an authorization bill for the first time in 5 fiscal years.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill which I am introducing, the letter of transmittal from the Department of Justice, and section-by-section analysis of the bill be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, April 26, 1984.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: There is forwarded herewith a legislative proposal to meet the requirements of the Fiscal Year 1985 appropriations authorization process for the Department of Justice. This proposal would incorporate much of the general authorization language previously contained in the Department's annual appropriations authorization bill within title 28 and other titles of the United States Code. It would take most of the funding related authorities out of the annual authorization cycle. Sections one through five of the proposal have been drafted to satisfy the statutory requirement of submitting to the Congress an annual funding level authorization request for the Department. This portion of the legislative proposal addresses only specific funding levels for 1985.

As in the 1984 request, we have taken the approach of drafting such a two part proposal because of our serious concern regarding the current authorization process. The Department's 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984 authorization bills were not passed and action on continuing our authorities is often in doubt.

It is critical that the Department be provided a reasonable expectation of continuity for its basic programs. The current authorization process does not provide this expectation. On the contrary, it has created an environment which makes planning and program implementation most difficult; hence, the need for legislation which would take many basic, noncontroversial authorities out of the annual authorization cycle.

The annual authorization bill requests resource levels identical with the President's 1985 appropriation request. The "permanent" authorization portion requests most of the same general provisions the Department routinely includes in its authorization requests, e.g. undercover provisions for the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), authority to use confidential funds, authority to pay rewards, etc.

However, this authorization bill does include some changes. The most pertinent changes are as follows:

Section 4 (Proposed section 576(a)(11)(p. 4)) would authorize the Attorney General to procure the services of interpreters and translators who, while not United States citizens, are legally allowed to work in the United States. This provision is identical to that granted to the Immigration and Naturalization Service and would facilitate the Executive Office of Immigration Review's mission.

In Section 4 (Proposed section 576(d)(4) (p. 5)) language has been added in order to clarify the Department's authority to use the Fees and Expenses of Witness appropriation to fund specific expenses incident to the operation of the Witness Security Program. Specifically these changes pertain to the construction, renovation and operation of command posts and safe sites to insure the protection of individuals admitted to the Witness Security Program.

Section 5 (p. 6) would amend 18 U.S.C. 263a to allow the Department to periodically host the annual meeting of the General Assembly of INTERPOL, and to periodically sponsor INTERPOL conferences on emerging topics of international crime. This measure is extremely important to the INTERPOL United States National Central Bureau (USNCB). As United States involvement continues to expand, it is important that the United States assume a greater participatory role in the organization. This authority would allow the United States to host the annual meeting of the INTERPOL General Assembly for the first time since 1960, facilitating the efforts to establish a greater leadership role in the international organization.

Proposed Section 6 (pp. 6-7) would amend chapter 31, title 28, United States Code, to establish a Department of Justice Gift Fund. The Department currently has no general authority to accept gifts. Thus, when the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) wished to accept donated horses for the use of its Border Patrol, it was necessary for the Department to submit to Congress proposed legislation authorizing INS to accept gifts. A general gift acceptance authority for the Department could end the need for piecemeal legislative solutions.

Proposed Section 6(p) (p. 17) would provide INS the flexibility to hire individuals on a temporary basis at times when vacancies and the normal recruitment process leave the INS foreign offices without the assistance of necessary support personnel for extended periods of time.

Proposed Section 6(q) (p. 17) provides the INS with a uniform purchase allowance for members of the U.S. Border Patrol to mitigate the inequitable burdens placed upon over 2,400 of these uniformed personnel within the INS.

We are confident the overall approach contained in this legislative proposal will adequately address the needs of the Congress to carry out its legislative mandate and oversight function while, at the same time, providing for the Department's program continuity needs.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection from the standpoint of the Administration's program to the presentation of these legislative proposals to the Congress and that their enactment would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

ROBERT A. MCCONNELL,
Assistant Attorney General,
Office of Legislative Affairs.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

PROPOSED SECTION 4

This language amends title 28 of the United States Code by creating a new Chapter 38 which would provide general authorizations for the Department of Justice especially the General Administration area.

Part 11 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 37 the following new chapter.

Chapter 38 general authorizations—Department of Justice

§ 576. General authorizations—Department of Justice

Proposed Section 576(a)—The Attorney General or his designee is authorized to make payments from Department of Justice appropriations for.

Proposed Section 576(a)(1) the hire of passenger motor vehicles.

This provision allows the Department of Justice to lease automobiles and general purpose vehicles from the General Services Administration for the purpose of providing necessary transportation for the Attorney General and other high-level staff in the Washington, D.C. area.

Proposed Section 576(a)(2) miscellaneous and emergency expenses authorized or approved by the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General for Administration.

This provision allows the Attorney General to respond to unforeseen circumstances where a need for action is clear but is not considered a normal cost of administration. Examples of these expenses include the Department's response to the Miami Civil disturbances, the Atlanta mass homicide situation, and the influx of the Cuban boatlift entrants. Another situation which required the use of this emergency authority was the Department's initial involvement at Wounded Knee, South Dakota.

Proposed Section 576(a)(3) benefits authorized under section 901 (3)(5)(6)(A)(8)(9) and section 904 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 4081 (3)(5)(6)(A)(8)(9) and 22 U.S.C. 4084), and under the regulations issued by the Secretary of State.

The Foreign Service Act of 1946 was the basic statutory source for providing medical treatment and health care facilities for Department of Justice employees serving overseas. The Foreign Service Act of 1946 was replaced by the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (P.L. 96-465) on October 17, 1980. The new language conforms the FY 1985 Authorization bill with certain benefits included in the Foreign Service Act of 1980. These provisions would allow the payment of certain travel benefits for employees stationed overseas and their dependents.

Proposed Section 576(a)(4) the purchase of insurance for motor vehicles and aircraft operated in official government business in foreign countries.

A number of overseas employees in the Department of Justice, in particular the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the Drug Enforcement Administration, are required to operate motor vehicles or aircraft in the scope of their employment. In addition, a number of officers stationed in the United States at points along the borders use automobiles to enter Canada and Mexico in the performance of their official duties. This provision authorizes the Department to pay the premiums or fees for contracts of indemnification or insurance of officers, employees and agents for their liability or that of the United States.

If an employee of the Department, while operating a motor vehicle or aircraft on official business in a foreign country becomes involved in a collision which causes personal injury or property damage, then this section provides a basis for payment of damages to a third party. Failure by the United States to assume responsibility for these third party claims could possibly result in international incidents, especially in those countries with compulsory insurance laws. This provision protects employees and permits them to comply with the laws of countries where they operate vehicles and aircraft on official business and, at the same time, avoids embarrassment or unfavorable publicity for the United States.

This provision allows the Department flexibility in its hiring practices, and maximizes managerial efficiency. Section 3109 of title 5 requires that the use of temporary or intermittent services be authorized by an appropriation or other statute.

Proposed Section 576(a)(6): official reception and representation expenses in accordance with distributions, procedures, and regulations issued by the Attorney General.

This language authorizes the use of funds to cover the expenses of Department of Justice senior employees whose official positions entail the responsibility for establishing and maintaining relationships of value to the Department.

Proposed Section 576(a)(7): per diem allowances in accordance with regulations prescribed under 5 U.S.C. 5707 by the Administrator of General Services or his designee, for an employee who serves in a law enforcement, investigative, protective, or other capacity, or members of his immediate family, or both when necessarily occupying temporary living accommodations at or away from the employee's designated post of duty, and transportation to and from such location, because of threat to life or property or because law enforcement, investigative, or protective interests may be compromised.

Authority is proposed to provide per diem allowances and transportation expenses for law enforcement employees and transportation expenses for their families in emergency situations, principally because of threat to life or property. Primarily, the adjustment amends the current travel regulations to permit temporary living accommodations.

Proposed Section 576(a)(8): attendance at meetings in accordance with the regulations issued by the Attorney General.

This provision ensures that funds for attendance at meetings are expended in the legally required manner, thus eliminating waste and deliberate abuse.

Proposed Section 576(a)(9): anti-terrorism training for dependents of Department of Justice personnel who will be stationed abroad on the same basis as Department of State personnel.

This would provide virtually identical training opportunities to dependents of the Department of Justice personnel assigned to foreign posts that are available to dependents of the U.S. Foreign Service authorized by Chapter 7 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980. The training provides classes primarily in safety precautions.

Proposed Section 576(a)(10): assistance to individuals under section 501(c) of the Refugee Education Assistance Act of 1980 (P.L. 96-422) who meet the definition of "Cuban and Haitian entrant" under section 501(e) of said Act but for the application of paragraph (2)(B) thereof; and Title V of the Refugee Education Assistance Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-422) was added primarily to provide federal reimbursement for State and local government expenditures for Cuban and Haitian entrants. However, because of the way section 501(e) of the Act defines Cuban and Haitian entrants, funds provided for this program cannot be applied to Cuban and Haitian entrants who are under "final, nonappealable, and legally enforceable orders of deportation or exclusion." Since Cuba will not accept these individuals, this language will authorize the Department of Justice to carry out the processing, care and maintenance activities associated with Title V for all Cuban and Haitian entrants notwithstanding the restricting clause. This language was included in the FY 1984 Appropriations Act, P.L. 98-166.

Proposed Section 576(a)(11): payment of interpreters and translators who are not citizens of the United States.

This legislation would permit the Attorney General to pay interpreters and translators who are not U.S. citizens. It is designed primarily to assist the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR) in carrying out its functions. Translators and interpreters are necessary to facilitate communications between EOIR personnel and persons who do not speak or write English. EOIR has occasionally had difficulty in obtaining the services of native-born or naturalized United States Citizens. This provision would provide EOIR the capability to procure the services of interpreters and translators who, while not United States citizens, are legally allowed to work in the United States.

Proposed Section 576(b): Travel advances issued to Special Agents of the Department of Justice engaged in undercover activities shall be deemed to be government funds within the meaning of 31 U.S.C. 3527.

This provision would relieve the agents of liability for loss of travel advances when there is no fault or negligence of the agents in consonance with the standards set forth in 31 U.S.C. 3527.

The inherently dangerous nature of law enforcement should entitle DOJ agents (and their estates) to be afforded some protection from the potential liability for nonnegligent loss of travel advance funds.

Proposed Section 576(c): This section addresses authorization for those organizations within the General Legal Activities area and the Antitrust Division. The General Legal Activities area includes the Office of the Solicitor General, the Tax Division, the Criminal Division, the Civil Division, the Land and Natural Resources Division, the Office of Legal Counsel, the Civil Rights Division and U.S. National Central Bureau—INTERPOL.

Proposed Section 576(c): The Offices, Divisions, and subdivisions included in the Salaries and Expenses, General Legal Activities appropriation of the Department of Justice, and the Salaries and Expenses, Antitrust Division appropriation are authorized to make payments from their appropriations for.

Proposed Section 576(c)(1): the hire of passenger motor vehicles.

The Department of Justice leases automobiles and general purpose vehicles for the purpose of providing necessary transportation for high level staff in the Washington, D.C. area.

Proposed Section 576(c)(2): miscellaneous and emergency expenses authorized or approved by the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General for Administration.

The language authorizes the use of funds in unforeseen circumstances, such as expenses related to appointment of an independent counsel under the Ethics in Government Act.

Proposed Section 576(c)(3): expenses for collecting evidence, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General and accounted for on the certificate of the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General.

Funds authorized by this provision are used primarily by the Criminal Division to collect information.

Proposed Section 576(c)(4): advance of public moneys under 31 U.S.C. 3324.

Occasional advances have been made to State and local governments when they cannot legally begin performance on a contract until it receives partial payment in advance. Section 3324 of title 31, United States Code, prohibits the advance of public moneys unless authorized by the appropriation or other law.

Proposed Section 576(c)(5): necessary accommodations in the District of Columbia for conferences and training activities; and

This language provides the authority to pay for accommodations and training facilities for Department attorneys. Proposed Section 576(c)(6) expenses necessary under section 501(c) of the Refugee Education Assistance Act of 1980 (P.L. 96-422).

Executive Order 12341 dated January 29, 1982 transferred this program to the Department of Justice. The Criminal Division executes the duties and administration of the Attorney General's Review Panel which screens Cuban entrants, currently housed in the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary, for possible parole.

Proposed Section 576(d): This section addresses certain authorizations for the Fees and Expenses of Witnesses area.

Proposed Section 576(d): The Fees and Expenses of Witnesses activity of the annual appropriation act of the Department of Justice is authorized to make payment from its appropriation for.

Proposed Section 576(d)(1): expenses, mileage, compensation, and per diem of witnesses in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by law.

The protection of witnesses activity provides financial security for government witnesses and potential government witnesses and their families in legal proceedings against persons alleged to be involved in organized criminal activity. Subsistence and relocation costs are paid from this appropriation.

Proposed Section 576(d)(2): contracting for expert witnesses according to the procedure similar to that authorized by section 904 of the Federal Property and Adminstrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 544).

This proposal will permit the Justice Department to award contracts for expert witnesses on the basis of demonstrated competence and qualifications at fair and reasonable prices but not based entirely on price competition. Current statute provides that expert witness services may be procured without regard to the bid advertising statutes. However, current law does not permit the selection of an expert witness purely on the basis of experience and qualifications. Under existing regulations expert witnesses generally must be procured through the traditional competitive negotiations. This requires that an incremental value analysis be done in order to justify the payment of a premium (the difference in price between the low acceptable and superior witness) before awarding a contract to the superior witness. Selection of expert witnesses must be made primarily on a basis of technical merit; that is, qualification, experience, and professional reputation. The court opponent of the Department is not required to select witnesses based on price and other factors. The Department can thus be put at a decided disadvantage if not permitted to procure witnesses on the same basis as its opponent. A selection process not based entirely on the lowest cost is a small price to pay when considering the economic consequences of losing important cases. Accordingly this language will provide authority to negotiate contracts for expert witness services on the basis of demonstrated competence and qualifications at fair and reasonable prices but not at prices based entirely on price competition.

Proposed Section 576(d)(3): advance of public moneys under 31 U.S.C. 3324.

Advances of fees and expenses are often necessary to ensure appearance of those witnesses who could not otherwise afford to appear. Section 3324 of title 31 United States Code prohibits the advance of public moneys unless authorized by an appropriation or other law.

Proposed Section 576(d)(4): expenses incurred for the use of facilities required as command posts in the protection of witnesses, including official phone calls made from command posts; and

Proposed Section 576(d)(4): is intended to limit expenses for command posts to rental or lease payments for facilities (including payments made under reimbursable agreements with other government agencies) and official phone calls only.

Proposed Section 576(d)(5): planning, construction, renovation, maintenance, remodeling, and repair of buildings and the purchase of equipment incident thereto for protected witness safesites.

These proposed language changes would clarify the Department's authority to use this appropriation to fund specific expenses incident to the operation of the Witness Security Program. Specifically, these changes pertain to the operation of command posts and the renovation and construction expenses associated with the establishment of "safesite" facilities for the protection of individuals admitted to the Witness Security Program and the processing and protection of individuals admitted to the Witness Security Program and the processing and protection of individuals considered to be protected entrants into the Witness Security Program. The language change clarifies (1) the extent of the authority given to the Attorney General by Title V, Section 502, of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970, (P.L. 91-452), as it relates to "renovation" and "construction" in light of 41 U.S.C. 12 and 31 U.S.C. 1301, 1307 and (2) the source of funding to exercise the authority contained in Section 502. Authorizing the use of this appropriation to fund all command post costs will enhance witness security and facilitate improved administrative accountability for these expenses. Currently, command post costs are split between this appropriation and the U.S. Attorneys and Marshals appropriation.

Proposed Section 576(d)(6): No sums authorized to be appropriated shall be used to pay any witness more than one attendance fee for any one calendar day.

The limitation of one attendance fee reduces the possibility of excess payments to witnesses who testify more than once on any given calendar day.

Proposed Section 576(e): The Community Relations Service of the Department of Justice is authorized to make payments from its appropriation to pay for.

Proposed Section 576(e)(1): the hire of passenger motor vehicles; and Automobiles are leased from the General Services Administration for the purpose of providing necessary transportation for key personnel in carrying out their proper assignments.

Proposed Section 576(e)(2): payments in advance for grants, contracts, and reimbursable agreements and other expenses necessary under section 501(c) of the Refugee Education Assistance Act of 1980 (P.L. 96-422) for the processing, care, maintenance, security, transportation and reception and placement in the United States of Cuban and Haitian entrants.

On January 21, 1982, the President, by Executive Order 12341, transferred from the Department of Health and Human Services (HH) to the Department of Justice the responsibility and funding for the Cuban/Haitian entrant processing and care activities mandated by Section 501(c), Title V of the Refugee Education Assistance Act of 1980. This transfer of responsibility has been ratified by the Congress in past appropriation actions. The Department of Justice, with the concurrence of the Office of Management and Budget, has decided to consolidate the major activities related to the 501(c) program within the Community Relations Service (CRS). It was decided that since the President had vested the responsibility and the funding for this program in the Department of Justice, the personnel carrying out the program's principal activities would also be vested in the Department of Justice.

The consolidation of these activities required the transfer of personnel associated with the 501(c) Cuban/Haitian entrant related activities formerly situated in the Office of Refugee Resettlement, HHS to CRS. Since a considerable portion of the activities within this program is conducted through funding of grants or entering into contracts with qualified voluntary agencies or other qualified individuals to resettle or place Cuban/Haitian entrants, appropriate statutory language is required for CRS.

§ 577. Evaluations

This section includes a generic authority to conduct evaluations of Department programs.

Proposed Section 577(a): The Attorney General shall perform periodic evaluations of the overall efficiency and effectiveness of the Department of Justice programs and any supporting activities funded by appropriations authorized and annual specific program evaluations of selected subordinate organizations' programs, as determined by priorities set by the Attorney General.

Proposed Section 576(b): Subordinate Department of Justice organizations and their officials shall provide all the necessary assistance and cooperation in the conduct of evaluations, including full access to all information, documentation, and cognizant personnel, as required.

A similar provision was included in most of the past Department of Justice Appropriation Authorization Acts. It was again proposed by the Department for fiscal year 1984 and is being reinitiated by the Department in an effort to continue to improve its management capabilities and to work with Congress to increase the overall efficiency and effectiveness of the Department's programs.

PROPOSED SECTION 5

Section 263a of title 22, United States Code, is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

The Attorney General is authorized to make payments from the Salaries and Expenses, General Legal Activities appropriation of the Department of Justice for expenses necessary to host, on an alternating basis, the annual meeting of General Assembly of INTERPOL, and to periodically sponsor INTERPOL conferences on emerging topics of international crime.

The additional legislative authority being proposed is extremely important to INTERPOL-USNCB, and to the United States in general. Currently, the United States, through the INTERPOL-USNCB, is exerting a greater leadership role in the international organization. In this regard, the INTERPOL-USNCB, with substantial member country support, has successfully initiated an ongoing fiscal audit and review of the INTERPOL General Secretariat and plans are currently being made to implement a similar management review of the General Secretariat.

Additionally, during the recent meeting of the General Assembly, the United States achieved the support of the majority of the INTERPOL member countries in passing specific resolutions relating to international crime. The increasing leadership role of the United States in the international organization also is reflected by this country's continuing efforts to seek and win the Presidency of INTERPOL in 1984. As United States involvement continues to expand, it is important that a hightly credible United States image is maintained and that INTERPOL member countries perceive that the United States is assuming a greater participatory role in the organization. One way to accomplish this objective is for the INTERPOL-USNCB to host the annual meeting of the INTERPOL General Assembly and to sponsor an annual meeting of the INTERPOL General Assembly since 1960. The proposed legislative language, if approved, would enable the INTERPOL-USNCB to pursue its plans to host the annual meeting of the General Assembly in 1985. These plans have the full support of the Department's policy level officials.

PROPOSED SECTION 6

This section would establish general statutory authority for the Department of Justice to accept gifts.

SEC. 6(a). Chapter 31 of title 28, United States Code, is amended to include the following section:

§ 530a. Department of Justice gift fund

SEC. 530a. (a) The Attorney General is authorized to accept and utilize, on hehalf of the United States, any gift, donation, or bequest of real or personal property for the purpose of aiding or facilitating the work of the Department of Justice. No gift may be accepted:

(1) that attaches conditions inconsistent with applicable laws or regulations, or

(2) that is conditioned upon or will require the expenditure of appropriated funds unless such expenditure has been authorized by Act of Congress. Gifts from foreign governments may be accepted only pursuant to the Foreign Gifts Act, 5 U.S.C. 7342.

(b) The Attorney General shall promulgate rules for accepting gifts pursuant to this provision, to ensure, among other things, that no gifts are accepted under circumstances that will create a conflict of interest for the Department of Justice.

(c) Gifts of property no longer required for the Department of Justice for its needs in the discharge of its responsibilities shall be reported to the Administrator of General Services for disposition in accordance with the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act, of 1949, as amended.

(d) Gifts and bequests of money and the proceeds from sales of other property received as gifts or bequests shall be deposited in the Treasury in a separate fund and shall be disbursed upon order of the Attorney General.

(e) For the purpose of Federal income, estate, and gift taxes, property accepted under subsection (a) of this section shall be considered as a gift or bequest to or for the use of the United States.".

The proposed legislation would authorize the Attorney General to accept gifts, donations, or bequests of real or personal property to aid the Department in carrying out its functions. Gifts that attach conditions inconsistent with applicable laws or that are conditioned upon or require the expenditure of appropriated funds (unless the expenditure had been authorized by Congress) may not be accepted. The Attorney General is required to establish rules to insure that no gifts are accepted that will create a conflict of interest for the Department.

The Department of Justice currently has no general statutory authority to accept gifts, although similar authority exists for the Treasury Department (31 U.S.C. 3113), and the Administrative Conference of the United States (5 U.S.C. 575). Without specific authorizing legislation, no federal official may properly accept gifts or contributions for particular agencies to augment Congressional appropriations.

The Department has received a variety of gift offers, including an offer of eight Morgan Horses to the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and an offer to the FBI of a piece of real property that was to be used in a foreign counterintelligence operation.

Proposed Section 6(b) Subsection 871(c) of title 21, United States Code, is hereby repealed.

21 U.S.C. 871—(c) The Attorney General may accept in the name of the Department of Justice any form of devise, bequest, gift, or donation where the donor intends to donate property for the purpose of preventing or controlling the abuse of controlled substances. He may take all appropriate steps to secure possession of such property and may sell, assign, or transfer, or convey any such property other than moneys.

The Department is proposing that this subsection be deleted so that all organizational units within the Department will be subject to a standard gift provision. The provisions of this subsection will be fully subsumed by proposed section 530a of title 28.

PROPOSED SECTION 7

This language amends Section 104 of the Act of March 14, 1980, 94 Stat. 97, and provides certain authorizations for the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission.

Proposed Section 7 Section 104 of the Act of March 14, 1980, [P.L. 96-209, 22 U.S.C. 1622d] is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

The Commission is authorized to make payments from its appropriation for the hire of passenger motor vehicles (for field use only);

Motor vehicles are used from time to time for the field work of the Commission.

Advances of funds abroad.

There have been instances in previous programs where the Commission was required to advance funds to foreign governments as part of leasing arrangements or contracts abroad. Federal law prohibits the advance of funds unless authorized by the appropriation or other law.

Rental or lease, for such periods as may be necessary of office space and living quarters of personnel assigned abroad; and

This provision authorizes the Commission to use funds to maintain necessary facilities in foreign countries. During previous programs the Commission has maintained field offices abroad. The Secretary of State has similar authority under 22 U.S.C. 2670(h).

Maintenance, improvement, and repair of properties rented or leased abroad, and furnishing fuel, water, and utilities for such properties.

This provision authorizes the Commission to use funds to maintain necessary facilities in foreign countries. During previous programs the Commission has maintained field offices abroad. The Secretary of State has similar authority under 22 U.S.C. 2670(i).

PROPOSED SECTION 8

Subsection 8(a) Part II of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 35 the following new chapter:

Chapter 36—General authorizations—United States attorneys and Marshals Service

§ 555. General authorizations—United States Attorneys and Marshals Service

This section amends part II of title 28, United States Code, to provide certain authorizations for United States Attorneys and the United States Marshals Service.

Proposed Section 555 Appropriations for the United States Attorneys and Marshals are available for.

Proposed Section 555(a) the purchase of firearms and ammunition and attendance at firearms matches.

The marshals and their deputies perform hazardous law enforcement duties which require expertise in handling weapons. These duties range from providing personal protection to judges and witnesses to arresting and transporting felons. Attendance at firearms matches increases the expertise in the use of firearms and is a significant factor in boosting agent morale. This authority is identical to the authority requested and previously enacted for other organizations in the Department.

Proposed Section 555(b) lease and acquisition of law enforcement and passenger motor vehicles without regard to the general purchase price limitation for the current fiscal year including the acquisition of vehicles seized and forfeited to the United States Government for official use.

Personnel require passenger motor vehicles to perform their routine duties such as service of government process, movement of prisoners, and the transportation of protected witnesses. In addition, this language would allow the retention of seized vehicles for official use on a limited basis, primarily for undercover work in the warrants program where an unknown vehicle is required for surveillance. This authorization would mitigate the need for short term leases for such surveillance work.

Proposed Section 555(c) supervision of United States prisoners in non-federal institutions.

This clause provides for the safekeeping of United States prisoners in non-federal institutions. Minimum standards for health and general welfare for the United States prisoners are required when contracting with non-federal institutions for housing such prisoners.

Proposed Section 555(d) bringing to the United States from foreign countries persons charged with crime.

Extradition involves the return of fugitives ordered surrendered by a foreign government pursuant to a request by the United States.

Proposed Section 555(e) acquisition, lease, maintenance, and operation of aircraft; and Aircraft is used to transport United States prisoners in the custody of the U.S. Marshals Service. This authority will be utilized only if it will result in a cost savings. The U.S. Marshals Service does not intend to acquire a large number of aircraft.

Proposed Section 555(f) payments of rewards and the purchase of evidence and payments for information.

This language provides for payments to informants or other persons aiding the Government in the arrest of suspects, federal law violators and their prosecution.

Proposed Section 8(b) Section 1921 of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows.

§ 1921. United States Marshal's fees

This subsection would amend section 1921 of title 28, United States Code, as follows:

"(a)(1) The United States marshals or deputies shall routinely collect, and a court may tax as costs, the fees for the following:

"(A) serving a writ of possession, partition, execution, attachment in rem, or libel in admiralty, warrant, attachments, summons, capias, or any other writ, order or process in any case or proceeding;

"(B) serving a subpoena or summons for a witness or appraiser;

"(C) forwarding any writ, order, or process to another judicial district for service;

"(D) the preparation of any notice of sale, proclamation in admiralty, or other public notice or bill of sale;

"(E) the keeping of attached property (including boats, vessels, or other property attached or libeled), actual expenses incurred, such as storage, moving, boat hire, or other special transportation, watchmen's or keepers' fees, insurance, and an hourly rate including overtime for each deputy marshal required for special services, such as guarding, inventorying, and moving;

"(F) copies of writs or other papers furnished at the request of any party;

"(G) necessary travel in serving or endeavoring to serve any process, writ, or order, except in the District of Columbia, with mileage to be computed from the place where service is returnable to the place of service or endeavor; and

"(H) overtime expenses incurred by deputy marshals in the course of serving or executing civil process.

"(2) The marshals shall collect, in advance, a deposit to cover the initial expenses for special services required under subparagraph (E), and periodically thereafter such amounts as may be necessary to pay such expenses until the litigation is concluded. This paragraph applies to all private litigants, including seamen proceeding pursuant to section 1916 of this title.

"(3) For purposes of subparagraph (G), if two or more services or endeavors, or if an endeavor and a service, are made in behalf of the same party in the same case on the same trip, mileage shall be computed to the place of service or endeavor which is most remote from the place where service is returnable, adding any additional mileage traveled in serving or endeavoring to serve in behalf of that party. If two or more writs of any kind, required to be served in behalf of the same party on the same person in the same case or proceeding, may be served at the same time, mileage on only one such writ shall be collected.

"(b) The Attorney General shall prescribe from time to time regulations for the fees to be collected and taxed under subsection (a).

"(c)(1) The United States Marshals Service shall collect a commission of 3 per centum of the first $1,000 collected and 1½ per centum on the excess of any sum over $1,000 for seizing or levying on property (including seizures in admiralty), disposing of such property by sale, setoff, or otherwise, and receiving and paying over money, except that the amount of the commission shall be within the range set by the Attorney General. If the property is not disposed of by marshal's sale, the commission shall be in such amount, within the range set by the Attorney General, as may be allowed by the court. In any case in which the vessel or other property is sold by a public auctioneer, or by some party other than the marshal or his deputy, the commission authorized under this subsection shall be reduced by the amount paid to such auctioneer or other party. This subsection applies to judicially ordered sales and execution sales, without regard to whether the judicial order of sale constitutes a seizure or levy within the meaning of State law.

"(2) The Attorney General shall prescribe from time to time regulations which establish a minimum and maximum amount for the commissions collected under paragraph (1).

"(d) The United States marshals may require a deposit to cover any of the fees and expenses prescribed under this section.

"(e) Without regard to the provisions of 31 U.S.C. 3302(b), the United States Marshals Service is authorized to credit amounts from fees and expenses collected (including amounts for overtime expenses) for the service of civil process, including complaints, summonses, subpoenas, and similar process performed by the Marshals to its current appropriation account (Salaries and Expenses, United States Attorneys and Marshals) for the purpose only of carrying out those activities."

The language would permit the Attorney General to set fees for the service of process commensurate with the costs incurred to serve such process. The receipts from such fees are to be credited to the U.S. Marshals Service's appropriation.

Proposed Section 8(c), pertaining to United States Attorney and related salaries, would amend section 548 of title 28 to read as follows:

Proposed Section 8(c) Section 548 of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 548. Salaries

"Subject to sections 5315-5317 of title 5, United States Code, the Attorney General shall fix the annual salaries of United States attorney, assistant United States attorneys, and attorneys appointed under section 543 of this title at rates of compensation not in excess of the rate of basic compensation provided for Executive Level IV of the Executive Schedule set forth in section 5315 of title 5, United States Code."

Subsection (c) would amend 28 U.S.C. 548 to adjust the salaries for United States Attorneys, Assistant United States Attorneys (AUSAs) and attorneys appointed under 28 U.S.C. 543, to rates which are comparable to salary levels for members of the Senior Executive Service (SES). At the present time, approximately 68 supervisory AUSA positions in 30 United States Attorney's offices are "equivalent positions" within the definition of the SES. However, these positions have been indefinitely administratively exempted from the SES. Subsection (c) would provide pay comparability for the United States Attorneys with non-career SES members. Section 548 of Title 28 U.S.C. presently limits United States Attorneys and AUSAs' salaries to the maximum rate allowable for a GS-18 of the General Schedule, as set forth in 5 U.S.C. 5332. Since the salary ceiling for SES members was recently lifted, United States attorneys and senior AUSAs have been more adversely effected monetarily.

The current maximum salary for a GS-18 of the General Schedule is $66,000. The current salary for an employee at Executive Level IV is $69,600 per year. Consequently, this change would provide a maximum increase of $3,600 per year for these employees. The annual salary for an employee at Executive Level IV is the same for a member of the SES at ES-6 ($69,600).

PROPOSED SECTION 9

This section would amend chapter 301 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new section after section 4011 providing certain authorizations for the Support of United States Prisoners appropriation.

Chapter 301 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 4011 the following new section:

§ 4012. Support for United States prisoners in non-Federal institutions

The Attorney General or his designee is authorized to make payments from the support for United States Prisoners in Non-Federal Institutions appropriation for:

Proposed Section 4012(a) the necessary clothing, medical aid.

The contracts with non-Federal institutions provide funds to these institutions to confine, clothe and provide medical care for certain unsentenced Federal inmates, for certain sentenced Federal prisoners awaiting transportation to permanent incarceration facilities, and for certain Federal prisoners called to non-Federal facilities for judicial purposes.

Proposed Section 4012(a) (continued) and payment of rewards; and

This authority is required to allow the U.S. Marshals Service to pay rewards for the capture of escaped Federal prisoners who were in the custody of the U.S. Marshals Service at the time of escape.

Proposed Section 4012(b) entering into contracts or cooperative agreements provided that, amounts made available for this purpose shall not exceed the cost of constructing space for the average Federal prison population for a facility as projected by the Attorney General, to assist the government of any State, territory or political subdivision thereof, for the necessary construction, physical renovation, and the acquisition of equipment, supplies, or materials required to improve conditions of confinement and services of any facility which confines Federal detainees, in accordance with regulations issued by the Attorney General, and which are comparable to regulations issued under 18 U.S.C. 4006: Provided further, that following agreement on or completion of any federally assisted jail construction, the availability of such space shall be assured and the per diem rate charged for housing prisoners at that facility shall not exceed operating costs for the period of time specified in the cooperative agreement.

This language would provide the Department with statutory authority to use the "Support of United States Prisoners" appropriation for the purpose of improving local jail facilities and conditions.

PROPOSED SECTION 10

Chapter 33 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 537 the following new sections:

§ 538. General authorizations—Federal Bureau of Investigation

Proposed Section 538(a) The Federal Bureau of Investigation is authorized to make payments from its appropriation for.

Proposed Section 538(a)(1) expenses necessary for the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States.

Authorization for appropriations for the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States includes the expenses necessary for the FBI to conduct investigations of those violations of Federal law for which the FBI has responsibility. In addition to national priority areas of organized crime, foreign counterintelligence, terrorism, and white-collar crime, the FBI has primary jurisdiction over numerous other Federal statutes concentrating on such areas as interstate crimes, forcible crimes against banking institutions, civil rights, and fugitive investigations. Typical expenses include personnel compensation and benefits, travel and transportation of persons and property, rent, communications and utilities, capital and noncapital equipment, and supplies.

Proposed Section 538(a)(2) protection of the person of the President of the United States and the person of the Attorney General.

Appropriations are utilized for the purposes of assuring the security of the President, and of the Attorney General, when so requested by the Department of Justice. Typical expenses include personnel compensation and travel costs.

Proposed Section 538(a)(3) acquisition, collection, classification and preservation of identification and other records and their exchange with, and for the official use of, the duly authorized officials of the Federal Government, of States, cities, and other institutions, such exchange to be subject to cancellation if dissemination is made outside the receiving departments or related agencies.

Authorization for appropriations for the collection and preservation of identification and other records and their exchange with authorized officials includes expenses for the maintenance at FBI Headquarters of the Central Records System, consisting of over six million investigative, personnel, applicant, administrative, and general case files, and for the maintenance of fingerprint identification records submitted by over 20,000 authorized agencies. In addition, this authorization for appropriations includes expenses of providing information contained in FBI records to other Federal agencies in compliance with Executive Order 10450 and to authorized officials of States, cities, and other institutions.

Proposed Section 538(a)(4) such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice and the Department of State as may be directed by the Attorney General.

This language would permit the expenditure of funds at the direction of the Attorney General for other investigations regarding official matters as determined by the Attorney General.

Proposed Section 538(a)(5) purchase for police-type use without regard to the general purchase price limitation for the current fiscal year and hire of passenger motor vehicles.

Authorization for appropriations for motor vehicles includes the expenses associated with the purchase and hire of motor vehicles utilized by investigative and support personnel in the performance of their official duties.

Proposed Section 538(a)(6) acquisition, lease, maintenance and operation of aircraft.

Authorization for appropriations for aircraft includes the expenses of acquisition, lease, maintenance and operation of aircraft strategically located in various field offices of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Proposed Section 538(a)(7) purchase of firearms and ammunition and attendance at firearms matches.

Authorization for appropriations for firearms and ammunition includes the expenses of acquisition and maintenance of firearms and implementation of FBI firearm training programs utilized by employees in the performance of their official duties.

A provision has been added to allow FBI agents to attend certain organized firearms matches. Participation in competitive matches with other law enforcement agencies improves firearms proficiency and improves the morale of the agents. Other entities in the Justice Department have authority to permit their agents to attend firearm matches.

Proposed Section 538(a)(8) payment of rewards.

Authorization for appropriations for payment of rewards is utilized on a selective basis for information which results in the identification and apprehension of individuals being sought by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Proposed Section 538(a)(9) expenses to meet unforeseen emergencies of a confidential character, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General and to be accounted for on the certificate of the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General.

The word "solely" has been dropped from the phrase "solely on the certification of the Attorney General." The word "solely" restricts the certification process by providing that only the Attorney General is permitted to approve the use of funds for such purposes. Removing the word "solely" and adding the Deputy Attorney General permits expeditious certification by either the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General.

Proposed Section 538(a)(10) payment of travel and related expenses for immediate family members of employees, including expenses incurred for specialized training and orientation in connection with a transfer to Puerto Rico, other territories and possessions of the United States, and assignment in a legal attache post outside the territory of the United States; and

This provision would allow family members of agents under transfer to Puerto Rico, other territories and possessions of the United States and legal attache posts outside U.S. territories, travel and per diem allowances. These expenses would be incurred when receiving orientation training prior to the agent's departure to a new assignment. Family success in adjusting to life in a new environment depends largely upon language ability, attitude and cultural awareness prior to arrival. Training and orientation will be coordinated by the FBI Academy and the State Department's Foreign Service Institute.

Proposed Section 538(a)(11) research related to investigative activities.

The Technical Services Division of the FBI is involved in several long-term, high-technology research projects. These projects relate to audio and technical collection systems, surveillance aids, and radio engineering. Due to the high degree of sophistication some of these projects involve, some aspects of them are contracted out to private industry. Because funding for these projects is available only on a fiscal year basis, the FBI has experienced some reluctance on the part of private companies to sign contracts to assist in our research. No year authority for research activities will be requested in the appropriation act to permit the FBI to enter into long-term contracts and enhance its ability to conduct scientific research.

Proposed Section 538(b) None of the sums authorized to be appropriated for the Federal Bureau of Investigation shall be used to pay the compensation of any employee in the competitive service.

All positions in the Federal Bureau of Investigation are excepted from the competitive service and the incumbents of such positions occupy positions in the excepted service.

§ 539. Fees for furnishing identification services

Proposed Section 539 The Federal Bureau of Investigation may establish and collect fees for the processing of noncriminal employment and licensing fingerprint cards. Such fee is to represent the cost of furnishing the service. The funds collected shall be credited to the Salaries and Expenses, Federal Bureau of Investigation appropriation without regard to 31 U.S.C. 3302(b), and may be used to pay for salaries and other expenses incurred in operating the FBI Identification Division, and such funds may be carried over from fiscal year to fiscal year for such purposes. There will be no fee assessed in connection with the processing of requests for criminal history records by criminal justice agencies for criminal justice purposes or for employment in criminal justice agencies. 'Criminal justice agency' is defined in 28 CFR 20.3.

This language allows the FBI to set fees for services rendered by the Identification Division and permits the receipts from these fees to be utilized in paying for the operation of the FBI's Identification Division.

PROPOSED SECTION 11

This section would amend section 6 of the Act of July 28, 1950, 64 Stat. 380 (8 U.S.C. 1555) to provide authorization for certain activities for the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Proposed Section 11 "Section 6 of the Act of July 28, 1950, (c. 503) (8 U.S.C. 1555) is amended to read as follows:

§ 6. General authorizations—Immigration and Naturalization Service

Proposed Section 6 "The Immigration and Naturalization Service is authorized to make payments from its appropriation for.

Proposed Section 6(a) interpreters and translators who are not citizens of the United States and distribution of citizenship textbooks to aliens without cost to such aliens.

Translators and interpreters are necessary to facilitate communication between Service personnel and persons not speaking or writing English. While protecting the interests of the non-English speaking people, translators and interpreters are primarily used during deportation proceedings and other legal hearings. The textbooks provide clear instruction in citizenship responsibilities to applicants for naturalization. Similar authority exists at 8 U.S.C. 1555.

Proposed Section 6(b) allowances (at such rate as may be specified from time to time in the appropriation act), to aliens while held in custody under the immigration laws, for work performed.

Payment of allowances to aliens held in custody is for work such as serving meals and cleaning. Such expenses are incurred by the Detention and Deportation function. This authority is contained in existing law (8 U.S.C. 1555).

Proposed Section 6(c) expenses to meet unforseen emergencies of a confidential character, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General and accounted for on the certificate of the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General.

These expenses are often necessary to protect the identity of informants. This proposal would amend existing authority (8 U.S.C. 1555) by deleting the word "solely" from the phrase "solely on the certificate of the Attorney General. The provision permits the expenditure of funds for the collection of evidence and information of a confidential nature. The word "solely" restricts the certification process by providing that only the Attorney General is permitted to approve the use of funds for such purposes. Removing the word "solely" and adding the Deputy Attorney General permits expeditious certification by either the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General.

Proposed Section 6(d) expenses related to the purchase and/or lease of privately owned horses.

This language would allow INS to use horses in its routine activities under the Border Patrol program. Remote areas not accessible by motor vehicle require the use of such horses to accomplish routine patrol. Similar authority currently exists in 8 U.S.C. 1555.

Proposed Section 6(e) advance of cash of aliens for meals and lodging while en route.

Section 3324 of title 31, United States Code, prohibits the advance of public money unless authorized by appropriation or other law.

Proposed Section 6(f) expenses and allowances incurred in tracking lost persons as required by public exigencies in aid of State or local law enforcement agencies.

Local law enforcement agencies often request Border Patrol agents to participate in searches for lost persons. Without the proposed language, there is no authority to pay officers while on a regular tour of duty or on an overtime basis. This authorization is also necessary to clarify employee rights to benefits if injured or killed while conducting searches.

Proposed Section 6(g) payment of rewards and purchases of evidence and payments for information.

Such expenses are incurred by the border and interior enforcement program activities of the Service. Payment of rewards is used for purposes of a confidential nature such as informant development, infiltration, and information or evidence in civil or criminal prosecution.

Authority is also included for the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) to use funds for the purchase of evidence and to make payments for information. The nature of investigative operations carried out by INS requires the use of certain amounts of money for the purchase of evidence and for the payment for information. This provision would permit the use of appropriated funds for these purposes. The use of these funds is particularly critical to the anti-smuggling program.

Proposed Section 6(h) purchase for police-type use without regard to the general purchase price limitation for the current fiscal year and hire of passenger motor vehicle.

Motor vehicles are a necessary enforcement tool of the Service for pursuit of individuals in violation of the immigration laws, transportation of aliens in custody, travel status situations, and case investigation.

Proposed Section 6(i) acquisition, lease, maintenance, and operation of aircraft.

Aircraft are used in the Service by the Border and Interior Enforcement Program Activities. These aircraft are an effective method of detecting the presence of persons attempting or completing unlawful entry into the United States, while providing further assistance in the containment and apprehension of these individuals.

Proposed Section 6(j) purchase of firearms and ammunition and attendance at firearms matches.

Firearms and ammunition are provided primarily to Border Patrol and Investigative Agents of the Service for use in emergency situations only. Firearms matches are conducted to develop the expertise and safe use of these weapons.

Proposed Section 6(k) planning, acquisition of sites and construction of new facilities and construction, operation maintenance, remodeling, and repair of buildings and the purchase of equipment incident thereto, subject to the provisions of 8 U.S.C. 1252(c) and 18 U.S.C. 4003.

These buildings and associated equipment are used primarily for purposes of alien detention, inspections and border patrol facilities and in some cases, living quarters for officers assigned to remote locations. Language has been added to refine the authority INS has to construct facilities. INS believes that additional language for planning site acquisition and construction is required to clarify its authority to construct facilities. It is anticipated that no year authority will be requested for this provision in order to facilitate construction.

Proposed Section 6(l) refunds of maintenance bills, immigration fines, and other items properly returnable except deposits of aliens who become public charges and deposits to secure payments of fines and passage money.

Occasionally it is necessary to refund immigration fines collected from a carrier when it is determined, through adjudication, that such fines were improperly imposed and other items properly refundable.

Proposed Section 6(m) acquisition of land as sites for enforcement fences, and construction incidental to such fences.

Enforcement fences are utilized by the Service in certain border areas as part of its prevention strategy, and are useful for the purpose of controlling the flow of unlawful entrants into areas where apprehension is most assured.

Proposed Section 6(n) research related to immigration enforcement.

This research includes the evaluation of new technology for its applicability to Service programs, such as communications systems and detection services. Research and development projects have, for example, been directed toward new capabilities in wide area surveillance through infrared and radar devices, in automatic inspections of large vehicles and rooms through heartbeat detector techniques, and in selected enforcement and public service activities through satellite and digital communications techniques. No year authority for research activities will be requested in the appropriation act.

Proposed Section 6(o) the emergency replacement of aircraft upon the certificate of the Attorney General.

This language authorizes the Immigration and Naturalization Service to quickly replace aircraft, on an emergency basis, in order to avoid an undue interruption of the enforcement function.

Proposed Section 6(p) contracting with individuals for personal services abroad, provided that such individuals shall not be regarded as employees of the United States Government for the purpose of any law administered by the Office of Personal Management; and

The INS currently has the authority to hire aliens, by contract, abroad. This authority continues to be necessary to hire investigative assistants, translators and other aliens for a variety of purposes in its foreign offices. Recruitment actions for clerical positions in many overseas offices meet with negative results because few qualified people apply due to the remote locations and adverse living conditions. Even when recruitment is successful, the time between selection and actual arrival at post often leaves the INS foreign offices without the assistance of necessary support personnel for extended periods of time. There are dependents of U.S. Foreign Service Offices, U.S. military personnel and other U.S. citizens at all posts where INS has an office who are available for temporary employment.

Proposed Section 6(q) a uniform purchase allowance not to exceed $400 per annum, in accordance with procedures established by the Attorney General for members of the Border Patrol of the Immigration and Naturalization Service who are required by regulations or statute to wear a prescribed uniform in the performance of official duties.

There are slightly over 5,000 uniformed personnel within the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Border Patrol agents presently constitute the largest group of these personnel, approximately 2,474.

The Border Patrol uniform is a part of a 60 year tradition of pride and professionalism. Throughout that time, the respect accorded to Border Patrol agents has stemmed in part from the image presented by their uniforms. Careful attention to uniforms is demanded, since appearance contributes to the officer's own sense of responsibility as well as the public's perception of his or her authority. Dress uniforms are required for any activity requiring contact with the public and rough duty uniforms are required for operations in rural or industrial settings. Different weights of clothing and different articles of outerwear are required for different weather conditions.

The price of one complete Border Patrol uniform, including shoulder straps, holster, handcuff case and cartridge case is approximately $1,018. Each agent must purchase the complete rough duty and dress uniform by the end of his or her first year of employment. This amounts to 9% of the current entry level salary for these agents and creates an undue burden on them, since most have no savings to draw upon, and many have families to support. The cost of maintaining the Border Patrol uniform in an acceptable condition is high, about $400 per year, because of the unusual wear and tear associated with Border Patrol operations. Agents must work in locations such as railroad yards, slaughterhouses, industrial work areas or fields containing cactus plants or barbed wire fences. When it becomes necessary to chase illegal aliens found in these locations, uniforms are frequently stained or torn, which renders them unacceptable.

This section would provide authority for the Immigration and Naturalization Service to accept voluntary services.

Notwithstanding the provisions of 31 U.S.C. 1342, the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service is authorized to accept voluntary and uncompensated services to assist the Service in information services to the public. Persons providing voluntary services shall not be used to displace any federal employee and shall not be considered a federal employee for any purpose except for the purpose of chapter 81 of title 5, United States Code (relating to the compensation for injury) and 28 U.S.C. §§ 2671-2680 Code (relating to tort claims).

The authority to use voluntary services without compensation in the information service function of INS would remove the restriction in 31 U.S.C. 1342 for the acceptance of such services. This provision will enable voluntary agencies to operate "ask immigration" tape libraries in conjunction with INS and maintain roving information representatives in INS' waiting rooms.

PROPOSED SECTION 13

This section would provide authority for certain activities of the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Proposed Section 13 Chapter 13 of title 21, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 904 the following new chapter:

§ 905. General authorizations—Drug Enforcement Administration

Proposed Section 905(a) the hire and acquisition of law enforcement and passenger motor vehicles without regard to the general purchase price limitation for the current fiscal year.

This provision authorizes the hire of passenger motor vehicles to give special agents the capability to operate in a clandestine mode to carry out surveillance and other enforcement techniques in enforcing the drug abuse laws. The vehicles must appear to be the same as those found in the environment in which the agents carry out their mission, with no identification to indicate that the vehicles are government owned. Vehicles purchased for law enforcement use typically cost more than fleet-type vehicles. DEA's operations, such as special investigative matters and regulatory and training activities, are most effectively and efficiently carried out through use of passenger motor vehicles hired or leased from private organizations and from GSA.

Proposed Section 905(b) payment in advance for special tests and studies by contract.

This section provides for payment in advance for research contracts and projects. Advance payment is the most efficient financing mechanism. These projects maximize the effectiveness of DEA's operations by development of new or improved techniques and procedures and increase the quantity and quality of investigative evidence. Section 3323 of title 31, U.S.C., prohibits advance payments unless specifically authorized by the appropriation or other law.

Proposed Section 905(c) payment in advance for expenses arising out of contractual and reimbursable agreements with State and local law enforcement and regulatory agencies while engaged in cooperative enforcement and regulatory activities in accordance with section 503a(2) of the Controlled Substances Act [P.L. 91-513 (1970)].

This section provides for the funding of contracts, cooperative or reimbursable agreements, executed for the purpose of supporting cooperative law enforcement activities with State and local law enforcement, and with controlled substance regulatory agencies. These agreements aid in suppressing the abuse of controlled substances through the institution and prosecution of cases in courts and before licensing boards. It is often necessary to advance funds to accomplish this activity.

Section 905(d) expenses to meet unforeseen emergencies of a confidential character to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, and to be accounted for on the certificate of the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General.

These expenses are necessary for the purchase or procurement of information or evidence from individuals whose identity must be protected and remain confidential, to meet emergency situations threatening the personal safety of Government agents, informants, or their families, and for emergency situations in which disclosure of the expenditures would jeopardize investigative operations. The above language has been included in DEA's appropriation since 1974. It has also been included in the appropriation of predecessor agencies from 1966.

The word "solely" has been dropped from the phrase "solely on the certificate of the Attorney General." The provision permits the expenditure of funds for the collection of evidence and information of a confidential nature. The word "solely" restricts the certification process by providing that only the Attorney General is permitted to approve the use of funds for such purposes. Removing the word "solely" and adding the Deputy Attorney General permits expeditious certification by either the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General.

Proposed Section 905(e) payment of rewards.

This language provides for payments to informants or other persons aiding the Government in the arrest of suspects, seizure of drugs, or prosecution of violators.

Proposed Section 905(f) publication of technical and informational material in professional and trade journals, and purchase of chemicals, apparatus, and scientific equipment.

This section provides for the publication of materials which help to develop an awareness of Federal drug enforcement and drug industry regulatory activities. The DEA laboratories perform analyses of drug evidence and provide expert scientific testimony for prosecutorial purposes. In-depth ballistics examinations are performed to help determine sources of drugs. Research capability is maintained in the areas of forensic science and advanced technological development.

Proposed Section 905(g) necessary accommodations in the District of Columbia for conferences and training activities.

This language provides authority to house specialized and advanced trainees in quarters close to the Specialized Training Unit in Washington, D.C. Although the Office of Training is now located in Glynco, Georgia, the Specialized Training Unit has remained in Washington, D.C. The Specialized Training Unit provides the Office of Training with the capability and flexibility to conduct conferences and training sessions pertaining to enforcement, regulatory and technical programs in the Washington, D.C. area.

Proposed Section 905(h) acquisition, lease, maintenance, and operation of aircraft.

This provision authorizes aviation support for DEA operations. Aircraft is needed by DEA to detect and interdict narcotics traffic primarily through air to ground surveillance, overwater surveillance, and undercover operations. The use of aircraft by drug traffickers is well documented. The use of aircraft for surveillance activities can often replace complex or impossible ground surveillance.

Proposed Section 905(i) contracting with individuals for personal services abroad, provided that such individuals shall not be regarded as employees of the United States Government for the purpose of any law administered by the Office of Personnel Management.

The authority to employ aliens and U.S. Citizens, by contract, abroad, is necessary to hire investigative assistants, translators, clerical and other personnel in foreign offices. Staffing clerical positions with personnel hired in the U.S. is difficult in many foreign offices and impossible in others due to remote locations and adverse living conditions. Recruitment of personnel from the U.S., even if successful, is generally met with extended delays in the selectee's actual arrival at post. Hence, without this authority, the office will be without clerical assistance for extended periods of time. There are dependents of State Department Foreign Service Officers, U.S. Military personnel and other U.S. citizens at all posts where DEA has an office who are available for temporary employment.

Proposed Section 905(j) purchase of firearms and ammunition and attendance at firearms matches.

This section provides authorization for appropriations for firearms and ammunition including the expense of acquisition and maintenance of firearms utilized by employees in the performance of their official duties. These duties include participating in firearms matches to develop the expertise and safe use of weapons.

Proposed Section 905(k) payment for tort claims when such claims arise in foreign countries in connection with Drug Enforcement Administration operations abroad. This authority provides for payment by the United States Government to persons injured in a foreign country as a result of actions of DEA employees acting within the scope of their employment.

Proposed Section 905(l) research related to enforcement and drug control; and

This language provides for a research and engineering program covering the following elements: search and surveillance; communications; command and control; regulatory support; forensic sciences; operational support; and special studies. No year authority for research activities is being sought in the Department's appropriation request.

Proposed Section 905(m)—payment of travel and related expenses for immediate family members of employees, including expenses incurred for specialized training and orientation in connection with a transfer to Puerto Rico, other territories and possessions of the United States, and assignment in a post outside the territory of the United States.

This provision would allow family members of agents under transfer to Puerto Rico, other territories and possessions of the United States and posts outside U.S. territories, travel, and per diem allowances. These expenses would be incurred when receiving orientation training prior to the agent's departure to a new assignment. Family success in adjusting to life in a new environment depends largely upon language ability, attitude, and cultural awareness prior to arrival. Training and orientation will be coordinated by the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, Glynco, Georgia.

PROPOSED SECTION 14

Proposed Section 14 Chapter 13 of title 21, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 886 the following new section:

§ 887. Awards resulting from forfeiture of assets

This section would provide discretionary authority to the Drug Enforcement Administration to make certain award payments.

Proposed Section 887(a) Without regard to the provisions of 31 U.S.C. 3302(b) and 21 U.S.C. 881(e), the Drug Enforcement Administration is authorized to set aside 25 per centum of the net amount of money realized from the forfeiture of assets seized by it under any provision of the Controlled Substances Act [P.L. 91-513 (1970)], to be available in amounts as specified in appropriation acts for obligation and expenditure only for the purpose of paying awards of compensation with respect to such forfeiture; and to pay, totally within its discretion, such awards to any entity not an agency or instrumentality of the United States, or to any person not an officer or employee of the United States or of any State or local government, that provides information or assistance which leads to such a forfeiture. Such awards can be made in any amount up to 25 per centum of the amount realized from the forfeiture, or $150,000, whichever is lesser, in any case, except that no awards shall be made based on the value of the contraband. The authority of the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration to pay an award of $10,000 or more shall not be delegated.

(b) The amounts credited under this section shall be made available for obligations until September 30, 1986.

(c) The remaining 75 per centum of the net amount of money realized from such forfeitures shall be paid to the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury.

Provided, That the authority furnished by this section shall remain available until September 30, 1986, or upon the creation of a Department of Justice asset forfeiture fund, whichever is sooner at which time any amount of the unobligated balances remaining in this account, accumulated before September 30, 1986, shall be paid to the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury: And provided further, That the Drug Enforcement Administration shall conduct detailed financial audits, semi-annually, of the expenditure of funds from this account and—

(1) Report the results of each audit, in writing, to the Department of Justice; and

(2) Report annually to Congress concerning these audits.

The proposed authority provides discretionary authority to make award payments of up to 25 percent of the net value of seized assets. Section 9 of the Proposed of 1982 Authorization Act (S-951) contained a request for authority to make moiety payments to informants in narcotic cases. Section 9 of S-2567, the Proposed 1983 DOJ Authorization Act, contained language similar to this proposed revision as a refinement of that authority and reflects the need for a more flexible and effective enforcement mechanism than would be provided by the moiety authority. In addition this language is a necessary and logical reaction to the recent trend of drug traffickers to utilize large amounts of currency and assets, expensive aircraft, vessels, and vehicles to facilitate their drug trafficking. In November of 1978, Congress saw fit to make assets of drug traffickers used in exchange for drugs or to facilitate drug activities forfeitable. The proposed provisions give DEA the practical tool of being able to pay informants meaningful rewards from the assets and property of the drug traffickers.

PROPOSED SECTION 15

This section would amend chapter 303 of title 18 United States Code by inserting a new section 4044 authorizing certain activities by the Bureau of Prisons.

Proposed Section 15 Chapter 303 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 4043 the following new section:

§ 4044. General authorizations—Bureau of Prisons

The Bureau of Prisons is authorized to make payments from its appropriation for:

Proposed Section 4044(a) the administration, operation, and maintenance of Federal penal and correctional institutions, including supervision and support of United States Prisoners in non-Federal institutions, and for inmate legal services within the system.

The Bureau contracts with appropriate non-Federal agencies for facilities to board certain types of Federal offenders and detainees. These facilities are used for the following reasons:

(1) To relieve overcrowding in Federal institutions,

(2) To offer protection to Federal offenders who would be in danger in Federal institutions,

(3) To help keep inmates near to their home communities,

(4) To provide programs not generally available in Federal institutions, and

(5) To place juvenile offenders in residential facilities.

Provision is also made to make available certain funds for inmate legal services, such as assistance programs where law students represent inmates on selected matters.

Proposed Section 4044(b) purchase and hire of law enforcement and passenger motor vehicles. Hire of passenger motor vehicles is often necessary for personnel in travel status. Law enforcement and passenger vehicles are used to transport offenders and for routine functions in the operation of Bureau of Prison facilities.

Proposed Section 4044(c) compilation of statistics relating to prisoners in Federal penal and correctional institutions.

Administrative services performs up-to-the-minute locator and status information on all individuals in the custody of the Attorney General; population counts and statistics; and inter-agency, inter-facility and intra-institution population movement schedules, notices, statistics, and computation and update of sentences; this language provides the authority to gather such information.

Proposed Section 4044(d) purchase of firearms and ammunition and medals and other awards. Expenses are incurred for the purchase of firearms and ammunition necessary to ensure the security of Bureau facilities and to respond to emergency situations. Correctional officers must undergo weapons familiarization as a routine part of their training activities. Medals and other awards are offered to staff personnel for recognition of superior performance.

Proposed Section 4044(e) payment of rewards. Rewards are offered for information leading to the capture of those who escape from Federal penal or correctional institutions.

Proposed Section 4044(f) purchase and exchange of farm products and livestock. The farm program uses available land resources to produce food products that will be used by federal correctional institutions. Farm productivity provides a primary hedge against inflation and spiraling food costs. The effective use of equipment, supplies, and manpower is used to achieve maximum use of the available land resources.

Proposed Section 4044(g) construction of buildings at prison camps. Projects of $100,000 or less may be charged to the Salaries and Expenses appropriation of the Bureau of Prisons. Projects in excess of $100,000 are funded from the Buildings and Facilities appropriation with the specific line items being approved by Congress. The nature of construction at prison camps involves housing and administrative facilities for staff and inmates at the prison camp.

Proposed Section 4044(g) (continued) and acquisition of land as authorized by 18 U.S.C. 4010. Acquisition of land relates primarily to perimeter security and camp expansions. As correctional programs expand, the necessity for renovation or expansion of existing facilities often requires the acquisition of additional acreage. Section 4010 of title 18, U.S.C., indicates the Attorney General may acquire land, if authorized by law.

Proposed Section 4044(h) entering into contracts with governmental or private organizations or entities for the safekeeping, care and subsistence of persons held under any legal authority; and

The Bureau of Prisons has general authority (18 U.S.C. 4042) to "provide for the safekeeping, care, and subsistence of all persons charged with or convicted of offenses against the United States, or held as witnesses or otherwise." A place of confinement may be "any available, suitable, and appropriate institution, whether maintained by the Federal government or otherwise" (18 U.S.C. 4082). With expanding prison populations, and special needs for some offenders, this authorization recognizes the necessity of looking to a variety of agencies, public and private, for the custody and care of federal offenders and others who are in lawful federal custody. It provides specific authority to enter contracts, wherever the appropriate contract source may be found, for the care of such persons. This concept of contractual placement of offenders in the facilities of another jurisdiction or agency is recognized in 18 U.S.C. 4002 (placing federal offenders in state institutions), and in 18 U.S.C. 5003 (contracting to receive state offenders in federal institutions).

Proposed Section 4044(i) planning, acquisition of sites and construction of new facilities and constructing, remodeling, and equipping necessary buildings and facilities at existing penal and correctional institutions, including all necessary expenses incident thereto, by contract or force account,

This section provides authority for the Buildings and Facilities of the Bureau of Prisons. This language authorizes appropriations for planning, acquisition of sites, constructing, remodeling, and equipping of penal and correctional institutions. The purposes of the site aquisition and planning process are to identify and locate suitable sites for construction of new correctional facilities, and to design these facilities in a manner consistent with security, program requirements, and architectural innovation. Construction is completed within a specific timetable, within budgeted costs, and with the highest degree of quality. Rehabilitation and renovation of buildings is made to effect repairs at existing facilities and make modifications to accommodate new correctional programs.

Proposed Section 4044(i) (continued) to remain available until expended,

A no-year appropriation allows for the efficient and effective implementation of construction funds. Construction schedules are approximately two years for the warmer climates and two and a half years for the colder climates.

Proposed Section 4044(i) (continued) and the labor of United States prisoners may be used for work performed with sums authorized to be appropriated by this subsection.

The use of inmate labor contributes to lower construction costs and provides inmates with vocational training opportunities.

PROPOSED SECTION 16

Chapter 307 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 4128, the following new section:

§ 4129. General authorizations—Federal Prison Industries, Inc.

Proposed Section 4129 Federal Prison Industries, Incorporated, is authorized to make such expenditures, within the limits of funds and borrowing authority and in accord with the law, and to make such contracts and commitments without regard to fiscal year limitations as provided by section 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act, as may be necessary in carrying out the program set forth in the budget for the current fiscal year for such corporation.

This section will provide authorization for Federal Prison Industries (FPI) Inc. FPI was created by Congress in 1934 and is a wholly-owned Government corporation. Its mission is to employ and train Federal inmates through a diversified program providing products with a minimum of competition to private industry and labor. Employment provides inmates work, develops occupational knowledge and skills and earns money for personal expenses and family assistance.

Proposed Section 4129 (continued) including purchase and hire of passenger vehicles.

Passenger motor vehicles are often necessary for personnel in travel status. Purchase of passenger motor vehicles is required for routine functions in the day-to-day operations of the factories at Bureau facilities.

PROPOSED SECTION 17

This section would amend 18 U.S.C 4204(b) by adding a new paragraph at the end for the United States Parole Commission.

Proposed Section 17 Section 4204(b) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection.

Proposed Section 4204(b)(9) hire passenger motor vehicles.

Passenger motor vehicles are necessary for transporting hearing examiners to hearing locations. This language would authorize the hire of such vehicles.

PROPOSED SECTION 18

This section would amend Title II of part 28, United States Code by inserting a new Chapter 40 which would provide authorization for certain undercover investigative operations of the FBI and the DEA.

Proposed Section 18 Part II of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 37 the following new chapter:

Chapter 40—Undercover investigative operations

§ 599 Federal Bureau of Investigation undercover operations

Proposed Section 599(a) With respect to any undercover investigative operation of the Federal Bureau of Investigation which is necessary for the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States or for the collection of foreign intelligence or counterintelligence—

(1) Sums authorized to be appropriated for the Federal Bureau of Investigation may be used for purchasing property, buildings, and other facilities, and for leasing space, within the United States, District of Columbia, and the territories and possessions of the United States, without regard to 31 U.S.C. 1341, section 3732(a) of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 11(a)), section 305 of the Act of June 30, 1949 (63 Stat. 396; 41 U.S.C. 255), the third undesignated paragraph under the heading "Miscellaneous" of the Act of March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. 370; 40 U.S.C. 34), 31 U.S.C. 3324, section 3741 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 22), and subsections (a) and (c) of section 304 of the Federal Property and Adminstrative Services Act of 1949 (63 Stat. 395; 41 U.S.C. 254 (a) and (c)),

(2) Sums authorized to be appropriated for the Federal Bureau of Investigation may be used to establish or to acquire proprietary corporations or business entities as part of an undercover investigative operation, and to operate such corporations or business entities on a commercial basis, without regard to 31 U.S.C. 9102.

(3) Sums authorized to be appropriated for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the proceeds from such undercover operation, may be deposited in banks or other financial institutions, without regard to 18 U.S.C. 648 and 31 U.S.C. 3302; and

(4) The proceeds from such undercover operation may be used to offset necessary and reasonable expenses incurred in such operation, without regard to 31 U.S.C. 3302, in operations designed to detect and prosecute crimes against the United States, upon the written certification of the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (or, if designated by the Director, a member of the Undercover Operations Review Committee established by the Attorney General in the Attorney General's Guidelines of FBI Undercover Operations, as in effect on July 1, 1983) and the Attorney General (or, if designated by the Attorney General, a member of such Review Committee), that any action authorized by subparagraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) of this paragraph is necessary for the conduct of such undercover operation. If the undercover operation is designed to collect foreign intelligence or counterintelligence, the certification that any action authorized by subparagraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) of this paragraph is necessary for the conduct of such undercover operation shall be by the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (or, if designated by the Director, the Assistant Director, Intelligence Division) and the Attorney General (or, if designated by the Attorney General, the Counsel for Intelligence Policy). Such certification shall continue in effect for the duration of such undercover operation, without regard to fiscal years.

(b) As soon as the proceeds from an undercover investigative operation with respect to which an action is authorized and carried out under subparagraphs (3) and (4) of paragraph (a) are no longer necessary for the conduct of such operation, such proceeds or the balance of such proceeds remaining at the time shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

(c) If a corporation or business entity established or acquired as part of an undercover operation under subparagraph (2) of paragraph (a) with a net value of over $150,000 is to be liquidated, sold, or otherwise disposed of, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, as much in advance as the Director or his designee determines is practicable, shall report the circumstances to the Attorney General and the Comptroller General. The proceeds of the liquidation, sale, or other disposition, after obligations are met, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

(d)(1) The Federal Bureau of Investigation shall conduct a detailed financial audit of each undercover investigative operation which is closed in fiscal year 1985, and each fiscal year thereafter.

(A) Submit the results of such audit in writing to the Attorney General; and

(B) Not later than 180 days after such undercover operation is closed, submit a report to the Congress concerning such audit.

(2) The Federal Bureau of Investigation shall also submit a report annually to the Congress specifying—

(A) The number, by programs, of undercover investigative operations pending as of the end of the one-year period for which such report is submitted,

(B) The number, by programs, of undercover investigative operations commenced in the one-year period preceding the period for which such report is submitted, and

(C) The number, by programs, of undercover investigative operations closed in the one-year period preceding the period for which such report is submitted and, with respect to each such closed undercover operation, the results obtained. With respect to each such closed undercover operation which involves any of the sensitive circumstances specified in the Attorney General's Guidelines on FBI Undercover Operations, such report shall contain a detailed description of the operation and related matters, including information pertaining to—

(i) The results;

(ii) Any civil claims; and

(iii) Identification of such sensitive circumstances involved, that arose at any time during the course of such undercover operation.

(e) For purposes of paragraph (d)(1)—

(1) The term "closed" refers to the earliest point in time at which—

(a) All criminal proceedings (other than appeals) are concluded, or

(b) Covert activities are concluded, whichever occurs later,

(2) The term "employees" means employees, as defined in 5 U.S.C. 2105, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and

(3) The terms "undercover investigative operation" and "undercover operation" mean any undercover investigative operation of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (other than a foreign counterintelligence undercover investigative operation)—

(A) In which—

(i) The gross receipts (excluding interest earned) exceed $150,000, or

(ii) Expenditures (other than expenditures for salaries of employees) exceed $150,000, and

(B) Which is exempt from 31 U.S.C. 3302 or 31 U.S.C. 9102, except that clauses (A) and (B) shall not apply with respect to the report required under subparagraph (2) of such paragraph.

This language is virtually identical to the language contained in the Justice Department's FY 1984 Appropriations Act (P.L. 98-166, § 205(b)), with two exceptions. First, the proposed language provides permanent authority for the FBI to conduct undercover operations in the section rather than limiting authority to one year. Secondly, section (a)(4) has been amended in order to permit the FBI Director to delegate his authority to certify the use of exemptions in foreign intelligence or counterintelligence undercover operations to the Assistant Director of the FBI's Intelligence Division, and to permit the Attorney General to delegate his authority to certify the use of these exemptions to the Counsel for Intelligence Policy.

Proposed Section 600(a) with respect to any undercover investigative operation of the Drug Enforcement Administration which is necessary to carry out its function—

(1) Sums authorized to be appropriated to the Drug Enforcement Administration may be used for purchasing property, buildings, or other facilities and leasing space within the United States, the District of Columbia, and the territories and possessions of the United States without regard to 31 U.S.C. 1341, 3732(a) of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 11(a)), section 305 of the Act of June 30, 1949 (63 Stat. 396; 41 U.S.C. 255), the third undesignated paragraph under the heading "Miscellaneous" of the Act of March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. 370; 40 U.S.C. 34), 31 U.S.C. 3324, section 3741 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 22), and subsections (a) and (c) of section 304 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (63 Stat. 395; 41 U.S.C. 254 (a) and (c));

(2) Sums authorized to be appropriated to the Drug Enforcement Administration may be used to establish or acquire proprietary corporations or business entities as part of an undercover operation and to operate such corporations or business entities on a commercial basis, without regard to the provisions of 31 U.S.C. 9102;

(3) Sums authorized to be appropriated to the Drug Enforcement Administration and deposit appropriated funds and the proceeds from such undercover operations may be deposited in banks or other financial institutions without regard to the provisions of 18 U.S.C. 648 and 31 U.S.C. 3302; and

(4) The proceeds from such undercover operations may be used to offset necessary and reasonable expenses incurred in such operation without regard to 31 U.S.C. 3302; only upon the written certification of the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration (or by a person designated to act for the Administrator in his absence) with prompt notification of the Attorney General or his designee thereafter, that any action authorized by this section is necessary for the conduct of such investigative operation. Such certification shall continue for the duration of the undercover operation without regard to the fiscal years.

(b) As soon as the proceeds from an undercover investigative operation authorized under this section are no longer necessary for the conduct of such operation, such proceeds shall be deposited into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

(c) If a corporation or business entity established or acquired as part of an undercover operation under paragraph (2) of subsection (a) with a net value over $150,000 is to be liquidated, sold or otherwise disposed of, the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, as much in advance as the Administrator or his designee determines is practicable, shall report the circumstances to the Attorney General and the Comptroller General. The proceeds of the liquidation, sale, or other disposition, after obligations are met, shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

(d) (1) Upon completion of an undercover investigative operation authorized by this section, the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration shall conduct detailed financial audits of these operations, and—

(A) Report the results of each audit in writing to the Attorney General; and

(B) Report annually to the Congress concerning these audits.

(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1), "undercover investigative operation" and "undercover operation" mean any undercover operation of the Drug Enforcement Administration—

(A) In which the gross receipts exceed $150,000; and

(B) Which is exempt from 31 U.S.C. 3302 and 31 U.S.C. 9102.

The purpose of this proposed authorization language is to provide narrow exceptions to certain provisions of law which relate to government procurement and public moneys and which currently present problems with respect to the continued effective performance of DEA undercover operations.

The DEA has traditionally used undercover operations in the performance of its drug law enforcement and intelligence function. Undercover operations are often the only effective means to detect and prosecute drug related criminal activity, particularly if the DEA cannot secure the cooperation of one of the participants in a criminal enterprise.

The DEA recognizes, of course, that these activities must be conducted in accordance with the requirements of all applicable laws.

In the course of studying the legality of these operations, several legal questions have been raised which could present substantial obstacles to the continued effective performance of undercover operations. These problems include:

1. Use of income to offset expenses. Section 3302 of title 31 U.S.C. requires the gross amount of all funds received, from whatever source, for the use of the United States be paid into the Treasury without any deduction for expenses. This statute could pose serious problems with regard to the scale on which the DEA can conduct its undercover operations. If these operations must return all gross receipts to the Treasury, and thereby meet expenses only with appropriated funds, the funds appropriated for these operations will quickly be exhausted, and the administrative complexity of the fund transfers would jeopardize the operations. We thus seek legislative authority to use the income derived by these operations in order to meet expenses; any profits generated in the operations will, of course, be returned to the Treasury.

2. Deposit of funds in banks. Federal officials are prohibited from depositing government funds in banks by 18 U.S.C. 648 and 31 U.S.C. 3302. The Department of Justice has advised the DEA that, under certain circumstances, a deposit of government funds in banks would not violate these provisions. Legal problems still remain in some situations necessary to the successful conduct of undercover operations, and the Department of Justice thus believes that explicit legislative authority should be obtained in this area.

3. Leases. Various problems arise in situations where the DEA, either in its law enforcement or intelligence responsibilities, needs to enter into a lease of property. Questions arise whether the DEA has authority to do so; whether provisions usually required in government leases, see 41 U.S.C. 22, 254 (a) and (c), must be included in contracts which necessarily cannot disclose government involvement; whether the DEA may, under 31 U.S.C. 1341, 41 U.S.C. 11(a), enter into leases extending beyond the current fiscal year; whether the DEA might, under 41 U.S.C. 255, make rental payments in advance as most landlords require; and whether the DEA might enter into rental contracts in Washington, D.C., under 40 U.S.C. 34. While the Department of Justice has satisfactorily resolved many of these issues, some legal questions still remain. We thus believe it is necessary that the DEA be granted explicit legislative authority to act in this regard.

It should be emphasized here that the DEA seeks legislative authority in the areas set forth above only insofar as that authority is necessary to the successful performance of its undercover operations. This authority would not be available to the DEA where other methods of law enforcement would sufficiently meet its needs, or where areas other than undercover operations are involved.

PROPOSED SECTION 19

Section 535 of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(a) In subsection (b) by striking out the phrase "violations of title 18 involving Government officers and employees" and adding in its place "any violation or suspected violation of federal criminal law," and by inserting after the word "agency," and before the word "unless" the following:

"Provided the violation or suspected violation was committed by a person while engaged in any activity which relates to the operations of the department or agency, or the violation or suspected violation resulting from such activity,";

(b) In subsection (c)(2) by striking out "Postmaster General" and adding in lieu thereof "United States Postal Service"; and

(c) By adding a new subsection (d) as follows:

"(d) Any person who reports any information, allegation, or complaint described in subsection (b) relating to any violation of federal criminal law to his or her department or agency, to an Inspector General, or to any other person authorized to receive the information, allegation, or complaint shall possess a complete defense to any civil liability under any law unless the report was made with knowledge that it was false or with willful disregard for its truth or falsity."

This provision amends susbsection (b) of 28 U.S.C. 535 by broadening the duty imposed on heads of departments and agencies to report to the Attorney General information, allegations, and complaints received in the department or agency regarding criminal violations. The bill requires such reporting for any violation or suspected violation of federal criminal law if the violation or suspected violation was committed by a person while engaged in any activity which relates to the operations of the department or agency or if the violation or suspected violation resulted from such activity which relates to the operations of the department or agency or if the violation or suspected violation resulted from such activity. Offenses committed by federal officers or employees, State or local government employees, private contractors, grantees, or any other person are subject to the reporting requirement of the bill. By requiring the reporting of information regarding suspected violations of federal criminal law, the will assures that doubts regarding the duty to report will be resolved in favor of reporting.

In order for evidence of an offense to be subject to the reporting requirement, the activities surrounding the violation must relate to the operations of the department or agency. Thus, if an agency learns that a person under contract with it violates a federal criminal law, such as the law prohibiting extortion, whle carrying out activities under the contract, the agency head must report this information to the Attorney General. However, an agency would not be bound by 28 U.S.C. 535 to report evidence of a street crime observed by an agency employee in the course of his or her official duties if the crime was not committed in connection with any activity relevant to the agency's operations.

The provision would also add a new subsection (d) to 28 U.S.C. 535 protecting any person who reports information regarding criminal activity from civil liability by a department or agency, unless the report was made with knowledge that it was false or with willfull disregard for its truth or falsity. This provision will encourage federal officers and employees to report to their agencies evidence of crime they encounter in the course of their official duties.

PROPOSED SECTION 20

Title 18 United States Code, is amended as follows:

(a) The first paragraph of subsection 2516 is amended by inserting the words "Deputy Attorney General, Associate Attorney General," after the words "Attorney General."

(b) Subsection 2518(7) is amended by inserting, "the Deputy General, the Associate Attorney General," after the words "Attorney General".

This provision makes a minor change in the wiretap statutes, 18 U.S.C. 2516 and 2518(7) to permit Department of Justice authorization of a wiretap to be made by the Deputy Attorney General and the Associate Attorney General as well as by the other high ranking officials currently authorized to approve interceptions of communications.

Section one simply adds the Deputy Attorney General and the Associate Attorney General to subsection (1) of section 2516 which lists the officials who may authorize an application to a Federal judge for an order authorizing the interception of communications. Presently such applications may be authorized by the Attorney General or a designated Assistant Attorney General.

Section two makes an indentical change in subsection 2518(7) to allow the Deputy Attorney General and Associate Attorney General to designate law enforcement officers who may make interceptions without a court order in certain narrowly limited emergency situations related to national security and organized crime. Presently, the law enforcement officials who make interceptions in these emergency situations may only be designated by the Attorney General or by the principal prosecuting attorney of a State or political subdivision thereof.

Neither section alters the principle that wiretap authorizations should be approved only by high-level Departmental officials. When the wiretap statutes were first enacted in 1968, the omission of the Deputy Attorney General was probably an oversight since the deputy was then, as now, the superior of an Assistant Attorney General. The Office of the Associate Attorney General did not exist in 1968 although now that official exercises general supervisory authority over criminal investigations and prosecutions.

PROPOSED SECTION 21

Subsection (b) of section 6003 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding "the Associate Attorney General" after the words "the Deputy Attorney General,".

This amendment adds the Associate Attorney General to the short list of Departmental officials who may approve applications for a court order granting immunity to witnesses testifying before courts or grand juries. Presently the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, and designated Assistant Attorneys General may approve such applications. The addition of the Associate Attorney General preserves the principle that such applications must be approved by high level officials. The Office of the Associate Attorney General did not exist when the immunity statutes were enacted in 1970 although presently the Associate Attorney General is superior in rank to the Assistant Attorneys General who have been designated to approve immunity applications.

By Mr. BYRD (for Mr. HUDDLESTON):

S. 2607. A bill to provide for improvements in the school lunch and other child nutrition programs and the food stamp program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

ANTI-HUNGER ACT OF 1984

● Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that addresses the nutritional needs of our Nation's citizens.

A number of reports have been made recently indicating that hunger and malnutrition exist in various urban and rural areas across the Nation.

This resurgence of hunger and malnutrition in the United States is, I believe, primarily the result of the recession in the economy that still plagues many parts of our Nation.

Over the last 3 years, we have seen the national unemployment rate reach its highest level in several decades. In some areas of the country, including my State of Kentucky, the unemployment rate still exceeds 10 percent.

Fortunately, the economy appears to be slowly recovering from the recession. And, with the development of sound economic and fiscal policies, we could expect the unemployment rate to eventually drop to acceptable levels.

However, the nutrition problems now facing unemployed workers and their families, elderly people living on fixed incomes, and the children of the working poor cannot be ignored in the hopes that the economy will eventually get better.

Particularly at risk are young children and the elderly. They are the most susceptible persons to medical problems caused by deficient diets. Poor nutrition can cause stunted growth and learning disabilities for children, anemia, and severe health problems that can lead to death.

With that in mind, I have developed this legislation to make the existing Federal food assistance programs more effective. My bill will increase the availability of food assistance to low-income persons, particularly those who are most vulnerable—the elderly, the homeless, and the very young. The legislation would also make changes in the operations of the school lunch, WIC, and other child nutrition programs, and the food stamp program, designed to make the programs work better.

In developing this legislation, I have been mindful of the need to control deficit spending and have attempted to provide for the needed improvements in these programs with only a very modest increase in their costs, or at no cost where possible.

CHILD NUTRITION PROGRAMS

Title I of the bill addresses deficiencies in the school lunch and other child nutrition programs, including the special supplemental food program for women, infants, and children (WIC). Title I also reauthorizes, for 4 years, appropriations for those programs due to expire on September 30, 1984.

On September 30, 1983, I introduced S. 1913, a bill to provide for improvement in the school lunch and certain other child nutrition programs. To date, 52 Senators have cosponsored S. 1913. Title I of the bill incorporates many of the provisions of S. 1913.

The Agriculture Committee will consider child nutrition legislation in markup sessions on Wednesday and Thursday of this week. Because of the imperative need for changes in the child nutrition programs, I am also submitting a substitute amendment to S. 1913 that embodies title I of the bill I am introducing today.

The need for the enactment of title I of the bill I am introducing today arises from action Congress took in 1980 and 1981. In 1980 and 1981 budget cuts were made in the Federal school lunch and child nutrition programs that totaled $1.5 billion. Unfortunately, a portion of those savings were realized by penalizing the children of the working poor who have no other safety net available to them.

This has led to what I believe is a deplorable situation: That is, the high dropout rate in the reduced-price categories of the Federal school lunch and breakfast programs. Approximately 400,000 children who once were receiving reduced-price meals are no longer participating in the school lunch and breakfast programs.

Other children were forced from the free category to the reduced-price category because the income eligiblity levels were changed for free meals. Moving from free to reduced-price meals was particularly devastating for these children because their cost of a meal went from free to 40 cents. For a family on a tight budget and with several children, additional annual expenses of hundreds of dollars are a severe burden.

My bill will help remedy this situation and make other needed improvements in these programs by adding back less than one-sixth of the total $1.5 billion cut from the programs.

Many of the beneficiaries of the legislation will be children from families that may not be eligible for food stamps or other welfare programs but whose annual income may be as low as $12,871 for a family of four. I know that families of four with incomes of $12,871, before taxes, are not having an easy time trying to make ends meet.

I would note that proposals have been made to cut the budget in these programs even further. The status quo for these programs is preferable to the additional budget cuts, but that is not much of a choice. It already appears that the 1980 and 1981 budget cuts were penny-wise and pound-foolish. My bill correcting the inequities caused by prior budget cuts is clearly needed.

Also, I would point out that the House of Representatives passed H.R. 4091, which contains many of the provisions of title I of my bill, 6 months ago. That legislation continues to await the Senate's consideration. In addition, the House Education and Labor Committee has reported H.R. 7, which also makes changes in the food programs comparable to those made by title I of my bill. The House of Representatives has begun floor debate on H.R. 7.

My legislative proposal, then is timely and I urge the Senate to give it prompt consideration.

FOOD STAMP PROGRAM

Title II of the bill would enact many of the recommendations for improvements in the food stamp program made by the President's Task Force on Food Assistance earlier this year. Included among these are restoring the cost of the thrifty food plan to 100 percent of its cost; increasing the value of resources that an eligible household may own to more fairly represent current values of ordinary possessions; restoring the earned income deduction to 20 percent of such income; and insuring that the homeless are able to participate in the program.

Other provisions of title II are specifically directed at improving the food stamp program for the elderly and the disabled. These include: authorizing the elderly and disabled to use coupons to purchase low-cost meals from restaurants; authorizing the additional expenses that result from physician-prescribed special diets to be deducted from income as a medical expense; and authorizing funds appropriated for the program to be used for outreach activities directed at households containing such persons, as well as young children.

In addition, title II of the bill would reauthorize an option for State food stamp agencies to use either prospective or retrospective accounting methods for calculating the monthly benefits of food stamp recipients and require monthly reporting of income only for certain categories of food stamp recipients whose benefits are calculated on a retrospective basis. The current mandatory retrospective budgeting and monthly reporting requirements in the food stamp program have proven to be a costly burden on the States, and there is no sound evidence that these procedures are effective in reducing error rates under the program.

Mandatory retrospective budgeting and monthly reporting have resulted in hardship to eligibile recipients by delaying needed benefits for as much as 2 months. It is, therefore, very important that the States have the option to use whichever method best fits the needs of a particular situation.

The bill also addresses a problem which exists for low-income persons living in high-unemployment areas. In such areas, the newly unemployed persons whose unemployment benefits have expired often do not qualify for food stamps because they own personal properly valued in excess of the resource limitations under the programs.

These assets that, under ordinary circumstances, could be sold by the household to provide for their food needs cannot be quickly sold for a reasonable cash price in high-unemployment areas because of the depressed market conditions. My bill would address this problem by excluding such excess personal property from the resource limitation requirements in high-unemployment areas for a period of no more than 4 months to allow food stamp applicants adequate time to dispose of their property at a reasonable price.

Title II would also maintain the level at which sanctions are imposed on States for errors made in the administration of the food stamp program at the current level of 7 percent for fiscal year 1985. The reduction to 5 percent scheduled to take effect in fiscal year 1985 would be postponed until fiscal year 1986. There is much evidence that one of the reasons for high error rates in the food stamp program is the numerous statutory and regulatory changes made in the program over the years.

My legislation recognizes this problem and would not impose additional sanctions on the States during the period in which the needed changes in the program are being implemented.

CONCLUSION

The hunger and nutrition problems that have been documented throughout the country and that I have seen firsthand in Kentucky cannot be ignored in the hopes that things will eventually get better. I have attempted to address these problems while being mindful of the need to control deficit spending. The improvements made in these programs under my bill will be achieved with only a very modest increase in their costs, or at no cost in many instances.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a list of organizations that are supporting my bill, a summary of the bill, and the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. BENTSEN:

S. 2608. A bill to establish the farm and crop acreage base and program yield system to provide more efficient, equitable, flexible, and predictable programs for farmers; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

AGRICULTURAL EFFICIENCY AND EQUITY ACT

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am today introducing legislation to provide farmers with a dependable, rational system of determining their base acreages for participation in our farm programs. Identical legislation, H.R. 4565, has been introduced in the House by Congressman CHARLES STENHOLM of Texas.

Congressman STENHOLM comes from a farm background also, and his firsthand knowledge of the day-to-day problems of farmers seeking to participate in government has made him an effective spokesman for the farmers of Texas and the Nation. This legislation is the result of an extensive survey conducted last year by Congressman STENHOLM of problems that farmers have with our farm programs.

This bill will write into permanent law a standard method of determining farm base acreages for the various crops covered by Federal farm programs. If a farmer does not have an acreage base for a crop, then he generally cannot participate in the farm price support program for that crop. Under our current system, farmers are continually but needlessly subjected to erratic changes in the method of determining farm base acreages. This makes it impossible to plan with any certainty even 1 year ahead for a crop rotation, even though farmers need to be able to plan ahead for several years in many cases to develop the most efficient farm plan.

All programs to reduce production must start from an established base of some kind. Almost all farmers have had problems at one time or another with the Government in determining their crop base. A major part of the problem is that the method of computation of this base can and does change with each farm bill and even with individual years' farm programs during the 4 years of a farm bill. Some individuals are invariably trapped and caused hardship whenever a change is made.

For example, the farm bases for 1982, the first under the current farm bill, were established on the basis of the farmers' plantings in 1980 and 1981. Texas farmers who happened to plant cotton in 1980 and 1981 were thus assigned a cotton base for 1982. Many of these farmers then felt forced to plant that acreage in cotton in 1982, even though they might have wanted to plant wheat or some other crop. They did so simply to keep from losing their cotton base.

Other farmers switched to wheat in 1982, often planting large acreages to average in with previous years in order to get a significant acreage base established for 1983. However, instead of averaging in the 1982 plantings to set the 1983 bases, the 1983 bases were frozen at the 1982 levels. Farmers who wanted to change their crop base for 1983 found that they could not do so. And on top of that they were stuck with a lot of very cheap wheat in 1982 without any protection from the Federal wheat price support program.

They and their neighbors learned from that bitter experience, and now they often plant whatever crop base they have just to avoid losing it. A farmer who accidentally got a cotton base may keep planting cotton instead of switching to wheat, simply because a switch to wheat might leave him with no wheat base and no cotton base.

This bill would remedy that problem by establishing a new system for setting these bases and writing it into permanent law. The new system would establish a total cropland acreage figure for each farm based on a 5-year moving average of acres planted in farm program crops. Using a moving average allows new land to be added, but over a 5-year period.

An acreage base for each crop would also be set. Flexibility is allowed by permitting the farmer to switch up to 25 percent of his total farm from one crop to another each year, with a limitation that acreage in any one crop can increase by no more than 100 percent in any 1 year.

Farm program yields would be set by a 5-year moving average of actual yields. Needed protection against catastrophic failures, such as last year's drought, would be provided by limiting changes in the farm program yield to no more than 10 percent per year.

This legislation will provide farmers with the certainty that they can plan ahead for changes in their cropping patterns without risking the loss of their eligibility to participate in Federal farm programs. Farmers do not have to participate in these farm programs, and they do not have to use the methods established in this legislation to change their cropping patterns. However, this bill will, for the first time, guarantee farmers that they can change crops and still retain farm program eligibility by following a simple and unchanging set of guidelines.

The details of a new base acreage system are important and deserve careful consideration. I expect that this bill will be revised and improved. However, even more important is the hope for improved stability which this concept holds for American farmers. Some version of this bill needs to be enacted into law so that our farmers can plan ahead.

I think it is high time that the Federal Government stopped playing silly games with an issue as serious as eligibility for our farm programs. The vagaries of the weather and marketplace are more than enough for farmers to contend with already. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation to bring needed consistency and dependability to our farm programs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follow:

SHORT SUMMARY OF BILL

1. Writes into permanent law a system of determining acreage bases, rather than having those changed in each farm bill.

2. A Farm Acreage Base (FAB) would be established for each farm growing a farm program crop. The Farm Acreage Base would be the total acreage planted to program crops and would be set equal to the average acreage planted over the last 5 years. The Farm Acreage Base will be a 5-year moving average and will be updated each year.

3. A Crop Acreage Base (CAB) would be established for each program crop. It will be a 5-year moving average of acreage planted to each crop, but can be easily changed by the farmer if he wants to switch crops. The Farm Acreage Base cannot exceed the sum of the Crop Acreage Bases (unlike current programs.)

4. Flexibility will be allowed by permitting farmers to switch up to 25 percent of their Farm Acreage Base from one Crop Acreage Base to another each year. This will be limited by providing that no individual Crop Acreage Base can be increased by more than 100 percent in one year.

5. The Program Yield for each crop will be the five year moving average of previous yields, dropping the high and low years and disregarding any year in which the crop was not planted, except that the Program Yield cannot be raised or lowered by more than 10 percent in any one year.

6. County ASCS committees, which are elected by and from local farmers, are authorized to make adjustments in bases and yields for individual circumstances.

7. This would not go into effect until the 1986 crop year.●

S. 2609. A bill to amend the Clean Air Act with regard to mobile source emissions control; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

AIRBORNE LEAD REDUCTION ACT OF 1984

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill which would place a ban on the sale of leaded gasoline by 1988. I offer this because I have become convinced that lead in our environment is a significant health problem, particularly for children in urban areas.

The dangers of exposure to lead have long been recognized. Our past efforts in controlling lead exposure have been largely centered on leaded paints. But numerous reports have indicated that airborne lead is the most serious source of exposure, and 95 percent of airborne lead can be attributed to automobile emissions.

Congress first addressed the need to control harmful automobile emissions in the Clear Air Act of 1963. Subsequent amendments require modifications in automobile engineering to reduce a variety of pollutants. The industry responded by developing catalytic converters to remove or convert toxic emissions. However, the use of lead as a gasoline additive interferes with the catalysts and as a result, 1975 and later models are designed to run on unleaded gasoline.

The Environmental Protection Agency has developed a regulatory program to reduce the amount of lead in unleaded gasoline. The oil industry developed new refining techniques to meet these standards and to achieve the octane levels formerly met with lead. New industries were created to produce the additives that replace lead as an octane enhancer.

It was generally estimated that with these regulations and the new automobile technology, leaded gasoline would largely disappear from the market by 1990. But today leaded gasoline is still 45 percent of the gasoline market.

There are two principal reasons for this. The first are the two recessions which we experienced in the late 1970's and early 1980's. Individuals and families did not buy or trade their pre-1975 cars as quickly as expected. Pre-1975 cars make up 35 percent of today's highway fleet.

The other factor is called putting leaded gasoline in cars designed for unleaded fuels. Misfueling, by EPA estimates, occurs at an average rate of 13 to 16 percent.

Although the problem of misfueling and a ban on leaded gasoline have been connected in recent press accounts and several EPA studies, they are in fact, separate issues. Misfueling disables catalytic converters that are designed to prevent carbon monoxide, hydrocarbon, and nitrogen oxide emissions. The purpose of a ban on leaded gasoline is not to prevent misfueling—although it has that effect—but primarily to reduce lead emissions.

The misfueling problem has already been addressed by the Committee on Environment and Public Works during markup of the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1984. But the problem of airborne lead has yet to be considered by Congress.

It has always been known that lead at high blood levels is toxic. But numerous studies released this winter, by private organizations as well as EPA, reveal startling statistics indicating that lead is also more dangerous at lower levels than previously estimated.

In today's urban areas, airborne lead exceeds 4,000 to 5,000 times its natural concentrations. Estimates indicate that auto emissions account for 35 percent to 45 percent of the blood lead found in children, especially those between the ages of 1 and 6.

Children with high lead blood levels can suffer irrepairable brain damage, mental retardation, and even death. Children with low blood lead levels do more poorly on intelligence tests, have higher incidence of speech impairment, fail more frequently academically, and require more psychiatric referrals.

In adults, lead is known to damage the kidney, the liver, the reproductive system, blood creation, basic cellular processes, and brain functions.

For these reasons the Environmental Protection Agency has been considering a ban on leaded gasoline. Last week EPA released its study on the costs and benefits of reducing lead in gasoline. This report overwhelmingly supports existing data on the health hazards of lead and further outlines other significant benefits that would result from the use of unleaded gasoline. A lead ban appears technologically feasible and more than justified from a cost-benefit perspective. By EPA's estimates we will save more in auto repairs alone than the costs of retrofitting refineries to produce unleaded gasoline.

As lead is reduced or eliminated as an additive, nontoxic substances must be used to replace it as an octane enhancer. The most environmentally sound replacement for lead is fuel ethanol. Refineries will not have to upgrade much if they replace the lead additive with ethanol to achieve the same octane rating. Further, fuel ethanol's proven performance record is accepted by the major automobile manufacturers who extend their warranty to cover vehicles fueled with a 10-percent ethanol/gasoline blend.

The bill I am introducing today would assist EPA in their efforts to reduce the amount of lead in the air. It amends section 211 of the Clean Air Act to make it unlawful for anyone to sell, offer for sale, or introduce into commerce, leaded gasoline for highway vehicle use. It further provides for EPA to allow limited sales of leaded gasoline. This provision will address the concerns of those who own vehicles with engines which require lead as a lubricant.

Mr. President, I urge early Senate action on this legislation and ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be inserted in the RECORD. Thank you.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2609

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Airborne Lead Reduction Act of 1984."

SEC. 2. (a) Findings. The Congress finds that—

(1) Ambient air concentrations of lead exceed 4,000 to 5,000 times its natural conditions;

(2) Automobile emissions account for 35% to 45% of the blood lead found in children, especially those between the ages of one and six;

(3) Lead is known to damage the kidney, liver, the reproductive system, blood creation, basic cellular process and brain functions.

(4) Children with high lead blood levels suffer irrepairable brain damage, mental retardation and even death, while children with low lead blood levels do more poorly on intelligence tests, have a higher incidence of speech impairment, fail more frequently academically and require more psychiatric referrals;

(5) The Environmental Protection Agency, under section 211 of the Clean Air Act has made great strides in reducing the amount of lead used in gasoline;

(6) Because a significant correlation exists between the reduction of lead in gasoline and lower lead blood levels, a ban on the sale of leaded gasoline is the most cost effective way to further reduce levels of airborne lead and further reduce the health hazards of lead.

(b) The purpose of this Act is to ban the sale of leaded gasoline except for limited quantities as determined by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.

SEC. 3. Section 211 of the Clean Air Act is amended adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h)(a) Not later than January 1, 1988, it shall be unlawful for any person to sell, offer for sale, or introduce into commerce, leaded gasoline for general use as a fuel for any highway motor vehicle. Under regulations promulgated by the Environmental Protection Agency leaded gasoline may be offered for limited sales."●

S.J. Res. 285. Joint resolution to designate June 13, 1984, as "Harmon Killebrew Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HARMON KILLEBREW DAY

● Mr. MCCLURE. Mr. President, it is my distinct pleasure to rise today to introduce a Senate joint resolution to designate June 13 as "Harmon Killebrew Day."

As most of my colleagues know, Harmon Killebrew got his first start in professional baseball in Washington DC, with the old Washington Senators. He was discovered by former U.S. Senator Herman Welker of Idaho, who convinced Clark Griffith, then president of the Washington Senators, to sign the slugging youngster before his 18th birthday. At the same time, in 1954, the University of Oregon was heavily recruiting Harmon to play quarterback on their football team.

What most of my colleagues do not know, is that Harmon and I both grew up in Payette, ID. Unfortunately, this is about where the similarities between us stop.

I have never been compared to Babe Ruth, but Harmon has on many occasions. In his heyday, Harmon's home run ability was frequently compared to the Bambino's. Harmon could hit a baseball as far as anybody and his legendary ability is marked with x's in Bloomington's Municipal Stadium so fans can gaze and wonder how any human being can hit a baseball so hard, so far, and so often.

During his 17 full seasons and parts of several others, Harmon led the league in home runs in 7 seasons and amassed an amazing 573 home runs, fifth among baseball's all-time home run leaders. Had he not been robbed of long stretches of playing time due to injury, there is no telling what this total would have been. Harmon's best season was 1969 when he batted .276, hit 49 home runs, had 140 runs batted in, had a fielding average of .975, and was the American League's most valuable player.

Harmon hit a home run every 14.2 times at bat. Only Babe Ruth hit more home runs more frequently, connecting every 11.76 times at bat. Baseball purists insist that the true test of a home run hitter is the ratio of homers hit to the number of times at bat, or homer percentage. As it is listed in the Baseball Encyclopedia, Babe's homer percentage was 8.5, meaning that he hit 8½ homers for every 100 official times up. In comparison, the great Hank Aaron and Willie Mays are tied for 10th at 6.1. Harmon Killebrew ranks third with a percentage of 7 homers per 100 at bats.

Not only was Harmon a great home run hitter, but he was an extremely versatile player, willing and able to play almost any position on the field. When the Senators moved from Washington to Minneapolis, Harmon arrived as a second baseman. He was soon switched to third base, then became the team's regular left fielder. Later, he was moved back to first base and then again back to third.

Harmon certainly was not being shuffled around in an effort to shuffle him out the door. Because of his immense talent the team was able to move him around to whatever position they needed him the most. His versatility was so great that he is honored by being the first major leaguer to have been selected to the All Star team at three positions—first base, third base, and left field. Harmon was also a member of 13 All Star teams.

Earlier this year, Harmon Killebrew was bestowed the highest honor in baseball; he was elected to baseball's Hall of Fame and will stand prominently among baseball's greats in Cooperstown. During his career in Washington, some knew him as "the Senator's Senator".

Since his retirement, Harmon has been very active in several worthy causes, the most prominent has been the Danny Thompson Leukemia Foundation. Danny Thompson was a second baseman for the Minnesota Twins who died of leukemia at the age of 26. In the few years since Harmon Killebrew and former Congressman Ralph Harding started the foundation it has raised over $400,000 for leukemia research. The money is raised primarily through the Danny Thompson Memorial golf tournament held annually in Sun Valley, Idaho.

While I enjoy the game of baseball as much as anybody, I do not have an eye for baseball talent like my former colleague, Senator Welker. However, I do have an eye for a truly fine human being and that is Harmon Killebrew. I am proud to offer this resolution honoring my good friend Harmon Killebrew, and ask that all of my colleagues join me in cosponsoring this joint resolution designating June 13, 1984 as "Harmon Killebrew Day."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 285

Whereas Harmon Killebrew was named to Major League Baseball's Hall of Fame on January 10, 1984;

Whereas Harmon Killebrew was a member of 11 American League All-Star squads and was the first American League player elected at three positions—first and third bases and the outfield;

Whereas next to Babe Ruth, Harmon Killebrew is the most prolific home run hitter in American League history;

Whereas Harmon Killebrew had eight seasons of at least 40 home runs and eight years of 110 runs batted in;

Whereas Harmon Killebrew was the American League's Most Valuable Player in 1969, when he hit 49 home runs, had 140 runs batted in, and had a fielding average of .975;

Whereas Harmon Killebrew hit four home runs in one double header;

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That June 13, 1984, is designated "Harmon Killebrew Day", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe that day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.●

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator McCLURE in introducing this resolution declaring June 13, 1984, Harmon Killebrew Day.

The history of American baseball and baseball in Minnesota would not be complete without including the renowned name of Harmon Clayton Killebrew. His professional baseball career, spanning 2½ decades, proved him to be one of America's outstanding athletes of the century. Playing for the Minnesota Twins from 1961 to 1975, he led the team to win the American League pennant in 1965 and on to the World Series against the Los Angeles Dodgers. Playing in more than a half dozen All Star games the twins' star hitter was the 10th major legaue batter to pass the 500 home run mark in August 1971. Nicknamed "Killer" by his fans, Harmon earned the distinction of "most valuable player" for the American League in 1969. I am very pleased that Harmon recently received an honor he so richly deserves, that is, being voted into the baseball Hall of Fame.

Summers in Minnesota were not complete without a trip on a sunny day to Met Stadium to watch the Twins play baseball. Inevitably, the point would come in the game when Harmon Killebrew would step up to the plate. The excitement swept through the crowd like a prairie fire. The anticipation that Killebrew would hit yet another home run brought the fans back again and again and made them devoted fans of both Harmon Killebrew and the Minnesota Twins. Harmon was a team player, his loyalty and determination were an example for his teammates.

Today, Harmon Killebrew remains one of baseball's legendary superstars whose name will always be equated with excellence in the world of American sports.●

Mr. COHEN (for himself, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. LEVIN, and Mr. ROTH) proposed an amendment to amendment No. 3027 proposed by Mr. BAKER to the bill H.R. 2163, supra; as follows:

At the end of the amendment, add the following new title:

TITLE —COMPETITION IN CONTRACTING

SHORT TITLE

SEC. . 01. This title may be cited as the "Competition in Contracting Act of 1984".

Subtitle A—Amendments to the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949

COMPETITIVE AND NONCOMPETITIVE PROCEDURES

SEC. 11. (a) Title III of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 251 et seq.) is amended—

(1) by striking out section 303 (41 U.S.C. 253) and the heading of such section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (e) or otherwise authorized by law, executive agencies shall use competitive procedures in making contracts for property or services. Executive agencies shall use advance procurement planning and market research and shall prepare specifications in such a manner as is necessary to obtain effective competition with due regard to the nature of the property or services to be acquired. Executive agencies shall use the competitive procedure or combination of competitive procedures that is best suited under the circumstances of the procurement action and shall specify its needs and solicit bids or proposals in a manner designed to achieve effective competition for the contract.

"(b) An executive agency may provide for the procurement of property or services in order to establish or maintain any alternative source or sources of supply under this title using competitive procedures but excluding a particular source for that property or services if the executive agency determines that to do so would (1) increase or maintain competition and would likely result in reduced overall costs for such procurement, or for any anticipated procurement, of such property or services, (2) be in the interest of industrial mobilization in case of a national emergency, or (3) be in the interest of national defense in establishing or maintaining an essential research capability to be provided by an educational or other nonprofit institution or a research and development center funded by the United States.

"(c) Procurement regulations shall include special simplified procedures and forms for small purchases to facilitate making small purchases efficiently and economically.

"(d) For other than small purchases, an executive agency, when using competitive procedures—

"(1) shall solicit sealed bids when—

"(A) time permits the solicitation, submission, and evaluation of sealed bids;

"(B) the award will be made on the basis of price and other price-related factors;

"(C) it is not necessary to conduct discussions with the responding sources about their bids; and

"(D) there is a reasonable expectation of receiving more than one sealed bid;

"(2) shall request competitive proposals when sealed bids are not required under clause (1) of this subsection.

"(e) An executive agency may use noncompetitive procedures only when—

"(1) the property or services needed by the Government are available from only one source and no other type of property or services will satisfy the needs of the executive agency;

"(2) the executive agency's need for the property or services is of such unusual and compelling urgency that the Government would be seriously injured by the delay associated with using competitive procedures;

"(3) it is necessary to award the contract to a particular source or sources in order to (A) maintain a facility, producer, manufacturer, or other supplier available for furnishing property or services in case of a national emergency, (B) achieve industrial mobilization in the case of such an emergency, or (C) establish or maintain an essential research capability to be provided by an educational or other nonprofit institution or a research and development center funded by the United States;

"(4) the terms of any international agreement or treaty between the United States Government and a foreign government or international organization, or the directions of any foreign government reimbursing the executive agency for the cost of the procurement of the property or services for such government, have the effect of requiring the use of noncompetitive procedures;

"(5) a statute authorizes or requires that the procurement be made through another executive agency or from a specified source or the agency's need is for a brand-name commercial item for authorized resale; or

"(6) the disclosure of the executive agency's needs to more than one source would compromise the national security.

"(f) For the purposes of applying subsection (e)(1)—

"(1) property or services shall be considered to be available from a source if such source has the capability to produce the property or deliver the service in accordance with the Government's specifications and delivery schedule; and

"(2) in the case of the procurement of technical or special property which has required a substantial initial investment or an extended period of preparation for manufacture, and where it is likely that production by a source other than the original source would result in additional cost to the Government by reason of duplication of investment or would result in duplication of necessary preparation which would unduly delay the procurement of the property, the property may be deemed to be available only from the initial source and may be procured through noncompetitive procedures.

"(g) An executive agency may not award a contract using noncompetitive procedures unless—

"(1) the use of such procedures has been justified in writing; and

"(2) a notice has been published with respect to such contract pursuant to section 313 and all bids or proposals received in response to such notice have been considered by such executive agency.

"(h) For the purposes of the following laws, purchases or contracts made under this title using other than sealed bid procedures shall be treated as if they were made with sealed bid procedures:

"(1) The Act entitled 'An Act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes', approved June 30, 1936 (commonly referred to as the 'Walsh-Healey Act') (41 U.S.C. 35-45).

"(2) The Act entitled 'An Act relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed on public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by contractors and subcontractors, and for other purposes', approved March 3, 1931 (commonly referred to as the 'Davis-Bacon Act') (40 U.S.C. 276a—276a-5).".

(2) by adding at the end of section 309 (41 U.S.C. 259) the following new subsections:

"(b) The term 'executive agency' has the same meaning as provided in section 4(a) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403(a)), except that such term does not include the departments or establishments specified in section 2303(a) of title 10, United States Code.

"(c) The term 'competitive procedures' means procedures under which an executive agency enters into a contract after soliciting sealed bids or competitive proposals from more than one source that is capable of satisfying the needs of the executive agency.

"(d) The term 'noncompetitive procedures' means procedures other than competitive procedures.

"(e) The term 'small purchase' means any purchase or contract which does not exceed $25,000. A proposed procurement shall not be divided into several procurements primarily for the purpose of using the small purchase procedures."; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SOLICITATION REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 311. (a)(1) Each solicitation under this title shall include specifications which—

"(A) consistent with the needs of the executive agency, permit effective competition; and

"(B) include restrictive provisions or conditions only to the extent necessary to satisfy such needs or as authorized by law.

"(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1), the type of specification included in any solicitation shall depend on the nature of the needs of the executive agency and the market available to satisfy such needs. Subject to such needs, specifications may be stated in terms of—

"(A) function so that a variety of products or services may qualify;

"(B) performance, including specifications of the range of acceptable characteristics or of the minimum acceptable standards; or

"(C) design requirements.

"(b) Each solicitation for sealed bids or competitive proposals other than for small purchases shall at a minimum include, in addition to the specifications described in subsection (a)—

"(1) a statement of—

"(A) all significant factors, including price, which the executive agency reasonably expects to consider in evaluating sealed bids or competitive proposals; and

"(B) the relative importance assigned to each of those factors;

"(2) in the case of sealed bids—

"(A) a statement that sealed bids will be evaluated without discussions with the bidders; and

"(B) the time and place for the opening of the sealed bids; and

"(3) in the case of competitive proposals—

"(A) a statement that the proposals are intended to be evaluated with, and awards made after discussions with the offerors but might be evaluated and awarded without discussions with the offerors; and

"(B) the time and place for submission of proposals.

"EVALUATION AND AWARD

"SEC. 312. (a) An executive agency shall evaluate sealed bids and competitive proposals based solely on the factors specified in the solicitation.

"(b) All sealed bids or competitive proposals received in response to a solicitation may be rejected if the head of the executive agency determines that such action is in the public interest.

"(c) Sealed bids shall be opened publicly at the time and place stated in the solicitation. The executive agency shall evaluate the bids without discussions with the bidders and shall, except as provided in subsection (b), award a contract with reasonable promptness to the responsible bidder whose bid conforms to the solicitation and is most advantageous to the United States, solely considering the price and the other factors included in the solicitation under section 311(b)(1). The award of a contract shall be made by transmitting written notice of the award to the successful bidder.

"(d)(1) The executive agency shall evaluate competitive proposals and may award a contract—

"(A) after discussions conducted with the offerors at any time after receipt of the proposals and prior to the award of the contract; or

"(B) without discussions with the offerors beyond discussions conducted for the purpose of minor clarification where it can be clearly demonstrated from the existence of effective competition or accurate prior cost experience with the product or service that acceptance of an initial proposal without discussions would result in fair and reasonable prices.

"(2) In the case of award of a contract under paragraph (1)(A), the executive agency shall conduct, before such award, written or oral discussions with all responsible offerors who submit proposals within a competitive range, price and other evaluation factors considered.

"(3) In the case of award of a contract under paragraph (1)(B), the executive agency shall award the contract based on the proposals as received (and as clarified, if necessary, in discussions conducted for the purpose of minor clarification).

"(4) The executive agency shall, except as otherwise provided in subsection (b), award a contract with reasonable promptness to the responsible offeror whose proposal is most advantageous to the United States, considering price and the other factors included in the solicitation under section 311(b)(1). The executive agency shall award the contract by transmitting written notice of the award to such offeror and shall promptly notify all other offerors of the rejection of their proposals.

"(e) If the head of an executive agency considers that any bid or proposal evidences a violation of the antitrust laws, he shall refer the bid or proposal to the Attorney General for appropriate action.

"PROCUREMENT NOTICE

"SEC. 313. (a)(1) Except as provided in subsection (c)—

"(A) an executive agency intending to solicit bids or proposals for a contract for property or services at a price expected to exceed $10,000 shall furnish for publication by the Secretary of Commerce a notice described in subsection (b); and

"(B) an executive agency awarding a contract for property or services at a price exceeding $10,000 shall furnish for publication by the Secretary of Commerce a notice announcing such award if there is likely to be any subcontract under such contract.

"(2) The Secretary of Commerce shall publish promptly in the Commerce Business Daily each notice required by paragraph (1).

"(3) Whenever an executive agency is required by paragraph (1)(A) to furnish a notice of a solicitation to the Secretary of Commerce, such executive agency may not—

"(A) issue such solicitation earlier than fifteen days after the date on which such notice is published by the Secretary of Commerce; or

"(B) establish a deadline for the submission of all bids or proposals in response to such solicitation that is earlier than thirty days after the date on which such solicitation is issued.

"(b) Each notice required by subsection (a)(1)(A) shall include—

"(1) an accurate description of the property or services to be contracted for, which description is not unnecessarily restrictive of competition;

"(2) the name and address of the officer or employee of the executive agency who may be contracted for the purpose of obtaining a copy of the solicitation;

"(3) a statement that any person may submit a bid, proposal, or quotation which shall be considered by the executive agency; and

"(4) in the case of a procurement using noncompetitive procedures, a statement of the reason justifying the use of noncompetitive procedures and the identity of the intended source.

"(c)(1) A notice is not required under subsection (a)(1) if—

"(A) the notice would disclose the executive agency's needs and the disclosure of such needs would compromise the national security; or

"(B) the proposed noncompetitive procurement would result from acceptance of an unsolicited research proposal that demonstrates a unique or innovative research concept and the publication of any notice of such unsolicited research proposal would disclose the originality of thought or innovativeness of the proposed research or proprietary data associated with the proposal.

"(2) The requirements of subsection (a)(1)(A) do not apply—

"(A) to any procurement under conditions described in clause (2), (3), (4), or (5) of section 303(e); and

"(B) in the case of any procurement for which the head of the executive agency carrying out such procurement makes a determination in writing, with the concurrence of the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, that it is not appropriate or reasonable to publish a notice before issuing a solicitation.

"RECORD REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 314. (a) Each executive agency shall establish and maintain for a period of five years a record, by fiscal year, of the procurements, other than small purchases, in such fiscal year in which—

"(3) For the purpose of evaluating the accuracy, completeness, and currency of cost or pricing data required to be submitted by this subsection, any authorized representative of the head of the agency who is an employee of the United States Government shall have the right, until the expiration of three years after final payment under the contract or subcontract, to examine all books, records, documents, and other data of the contractor or subcontractor related to the proposal for the contract, the discussions conducted on the proposal under this chapter, pricing, or performance of the contract or subcontract.

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am today introducing three amendments on behalf of myself and Senators MATHIAS, STAFFORD, and WEICKER, all relating to the caps on defense and nondefense spending provided in the leadership amendment which is pending.

Each of these three amendments has the effect of combining or unifying the two caps contained in the pending amendment. The first of these amendments simply combines the amounts provided in the pending amendment, thus setting an overall cap for all appropriated budget authority, both defense and nondefense, for the 3 coming fiscal years.

The second and third amendments also provide for unifying the cap on aggregate total budget authority, but they each use different numbers for defense and for nondefense budget authority.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table illustrating the components and effects of these three amendments be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF AMENDMENTS TO LEADERSHIP PLAN APPROPRIATIONS CAPS

[Budget authority, billions of dollars]

	Fiscal year—			3-yr. total
	1985	1986	1987
Amendment 1:
Defense (5.6 percent CBO; 7.2 percent Administrative)	299.0	333.7	372.0
Non-Defense	137.8	144.2	151.4
Total	436.8	477.9	523.4	1,438.1
Amendment 2:
Defense (3.0 percent CBO; 4.5 percent Administrative)	288.0	315.4	345.3

	Fiscal year—			3-yr. total
	1985	1986	1987
Non-Defense (CBO baseline)	143.7	150.8	159.2
Total	431.7	466.2	504.5	1,402.4
Amendment 3:
Defense (4.0 percent CBO; 5.5 percent Administrative)	290.8	321.5	355.4
Non-Defense (CBO baseline)	143.7	150.8	159.2
Total	434.5	472.3	514.6	1,421.4
Savings from amendment 2 versus leadership plan	5.1	11.7	18.9	35.7
Savings from amendment 3 versus leadership plan	2.3	5.6	8.8	16.7

Note: All dates relating to budget authority are supplied by CBO. All percentage growth rates are estimated by CBO.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, our purpose in offering these amendments is to demonstrate our concern that spending authority included for nondefense discretionary programs is insufficient. Human and natural resource programs have been reduced enough to actions we have taken in previous years. Further reductions are unwise and unnecessary. Each of these amendments, by unification of the so-called "cap," would allow the Congress to determine spending priorities by the normal method.

The table presents the three defense and nondefense components of the three amendments and totals the spending for each. I should note that a certain amount of confusion surrounds the question of defense spending. For example, the leadership plan has been presented as providing 7.2 percent real growth over 3 years. But this growth rate is based on administration inflation assumptions, with which the CBO does not agree. CBO's calculation of the growth rate for the defense budget authority in the leadership plan is 5.6 percent, and this rate of growth is also used to describe the plan's defense growth path.

Similarly, for each amount of defense budget authority chosen, the CBO's and the administration's estimation of the real growth path differs. Thus, one learns with surprise that the defense budget authority provided by the House is 3.5 percent if calculated according to the administration's economic assumptions, but 2 percent if calculated according to the CBO's assumptions.

As for nondefense spending, amendments two and three use baseline budget authority as calculated by CBO. This has the effect of raising BA for these accounts by $20.3 billion above the amount in subsection (b) of the leadership amendment. This reflects what the baseline would be in the absence of the 1-year freeze provided in the leadership plan. Again, these data have been provided by CBO.

The effects of the amendments are interesting to note. The second amendment uses 3-percent growth and the baseline for nondefense, and saves $35 billion. The fourth amendment uses 4-percent defense growth and the baseline for nondefense, and it saves $16 billion.

Mr. President, I hope this explanation helps rather than confuses my colleagues.●

(2) inserting, after subsection (h), a new subsection (i) as follows:

"(i)(1) A private nonprofit organization shall be eligible to participate in programs under this section during any year as a service provider only if the organization—

"(A) operates in an area where a school food authority or the local, municipal, or county government has not indicated by March 1 of such year that such authority or such unit of government will operate a program under this section in such year;

"(B) exercises full control and authority over the operation of the food service programs under this section at all sites under its sponsorship;

"(C) provides ongoing year-round activities for children;

"(D) demonstrates adequate management and fiscal capacity to operate programs under this section; and

"(E) meets applicable State and local health, safety, and sanitation standards.

"(2) The Secretary may waive the limitation to 15 sites under subsection (a)(1)(E) of this section and permit a private nonprofit organization under this section to operate at up to 20 sites if such organization demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that a need for such additional sites exists and that such organization has the capability to serve such additional sites.".

● Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I am submitting an amendment in the form of a substitute to S. 1913, a bill to provide for improvements in the school lunch and certain other child nutrition programs.

The substitute amendment adds provisions reauthorizing appropriations over the next 4 years for those programs with authorizations due to expire at the end of this fiscal year. The authorizations expiring this year are those relating to the summer food service program, the commodity distribution program, the nutrition education and training program, the funding for State administrative expenses, and the special supplemental food program for women, infants, and children (WIC). A 4-year reauthorization is important because it provides stability to these programs. The administration of these programs would become increasingly difficult if, each year, local administrators faced the possibility of program termination.

In addition, the amendment adds provisions for program changes to meet emerging needs and improve program administration. The amendment incorporates many of the provisions of S. 1913, a bill that would make needed restorations in several of the child nutrition programs. I introduced S. 1913 last September. To date, 52 Senators have cosponsored S. 1913.

The House Education and Labor Committee has reported, and the House of Representatives has begun floor debate on, H.R. 7, which is legislation comparable to my substitute amendment. The House expects to complete action on H.R. 7 this week. Many of the provisions of H.R. 7 are from H.R. 4091—the House companion measure to S. 1913—which passed the House last October and is awaiting the Senate's action. I believe it is imperative that the Senate also act immediately to address the problems that have occurred as a result of the 1980 and 1981 budget cuts in the school lunch and child nutrition programs. S. 1913, with this substitute amendment, is a reasonable and balanced approach to solving those problems, and I urge the Senate to approve it as soon as possible.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a list of organizations that are supporting my substitute amendment, and a summary of the amendment, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF SUBSTITUTE AMENDMENT TO S. 1913

The major provisions of the amendment would—

(1) Reauthorize, for fiscal years 1985 through 1988, funding for the Summer Food Service Program for Children, the Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC), certain State administrative expenses, and the Commodity Distribution Program;

(2) Provide a permanent authorization of $8 million annually to carry out the nutrition education and training program;

(3) Lower the cost to the student of a reduced-price lunch from 40 cents to 25 cents;

(4) Lower the cost to the student of a reduced-price breakfast from 30 cents to 15 cents;

(5) Improve the nutritional quality of breakfasts served by providing an additional reimbursement of 6 cents for each breakfast served;

(6) Provide funds to the States for the storage and distribution of USDA entitlement commodities in an amount equal to 3 percent of the value of the commodities donated;

(7) Allow private schools with an average yearly tuition in excess of $1,500 again to participate in the child nutrition programs;

(8) Restore the reimbursement made to institutions and day care organizations under the child care food program to three meals and two supplements served per day per child;

(9) In determining eligibility for free and reduced-price school meals, provide a special hardship deduction for students from families with unusually high medical payments that cannot be reasonably anticipated or controlled;

(10) Provide that any requirement by the Secretary that local school districts verify the income information on applications for free and reduced-price meals be conditioned on funds being appropriated to assist such districts in carrying out such verification;

(11) Allow children in certain kindergarten programs to participate in the special milk program;

(12) Provide food service equipment assistance to those schools and child care centers in which 60 percent or more of the meals served in the second preceding year were served free or at a reduced price;

(13) Clarify that school feeding facilities, equipment, and personnel participating in federally-assisted school meal programs may be used to support nonprofit nutrition programs for the elderly;

(14) If by March 1, a school food authority or a local government agency does not intend to operate a summer feeding program in an eligible area, permit certain nonprofit private organizations to operate such a program in an eligible area if the organization has facilities for the preparation of meals or obtains meals from a public facility;

(15) For purposes of carrying out the WIC program, authorize appropriation levels at $1.52 billion, $1.63 billion, $1.77 billion, and $1.92 billion for fiscal years 1985 through 1988, respectively; and

(16) Require the Secretary of Agriculture to fill vacancies on the National Advisory Council on Maternal, Infant, and Fetal Nutrition within 90 days and to hold Council meetings at least once every twelve months.●

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I am cosponsoring an amendment in the form of a substitute to S. 1913. This legislation will reauthorize for 4 years a number of nutrition programs including the summer food service program for children; the special supplemental food program for women, infants and children; certain State administrative expenses; and the commodity distribution program.

These programs are crucial to the proper nutrition of school children, infants, mothers, and the elderly. Reauthorizing these programs for 4 years will provide both administrators and recipients with much needed program stability.

This amendment would provide funds for nutritional education and outreach programs. These funds should encourage better nutrition for everyone and help to insure that those in need receive nutritional assistance.

Studies show the educational benefits of nutrition are that improved nutrition is linked to a more alert student and thus one more capable of learning. Likewise, better nutrition for all ages provides health benefits by lowering health care costs. Both of these are vital to the future of this country.

Although some refinements may be needed in this amendment, I would like to compliment Senator HUDDLESTON and my colleagues on the Senate Agriculture Committee for taking a vital step toward assuring the continuation of nutrition assistance programs.●

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE SITUATION IN KOREA

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in these days of heightened tension in Central America; days of apprehension for the situation in the Middle East; days of quarrels and misunderstandings over the issue of arms control, we cannot forget those areas of the world which have long been of primary importance for American foreign policy. Today, I am thinking specifically of a region to which the United States committed itself in the years 1950-53: the Korean peninsula.

In those years, we fought alongside citizens of many other countries to defend Korea and "make the world safe for democracy." I ask you Mr. President, where is that democracy today?

U.S. rhetoric has not been matched with deeds. The Koreans welcome our friendship and our support. But we must lend that support responsibly; we must insure that our support helps strengthen the ties between the people and their government, and not support repressive policies which only serve to alienate the people and erect barriers between society and official leadership.

Mr. Kim Dae Jung, founder of the Korean Institute for Human Rights and respected leader of the South Korean opposition who came to the United States last year, recently shared with me his optimistic analysis of the present situation in South Korea. According to Mr. Kim:

For peace, in Korea, the most important thing is: establishing a sound government which enjoys the voluntary support of the people. Support from the people will prevent any subversive force from gaining hold in the South and will prevent any possibility of the North's communizing the South. Furthermore, from a position of strength, the South can lead North Korea to dialog and peaceful resolution of problems. The future for peace on the Korean peninsula will be decided on the question of whether the people in the South can restore democratic government and on whether the United States supports such efforts and terminates its present policy of support for military dictatorship.

Mr. President, I ask that the full text of Mr. Kim's most recent addresses on the Korean situation be printed in the RECORD.

The addresses follow:

THE KOREAN PENINSULA—PEACE AND REUNIFICATION

(By Kim Dae Jung)

It is a privilege for me to speak before you at this church—a church which is so closely identified with one of the themes in my talk—that of peace. This church must take pride in the role it has had and in its minister, Rev. Coffin, who has been a leader in the peace movement for a long, long time. He is widely recognized as having been an outstanding figure in the Vietnam peace movement. I believe we may safely call him a prophet of our time as he continues to press for a resolution of the conflict in Central America.

I am touched by and deeply grateful for the role Rev. Coffin and this church took in my personal plight in 1980. I know that on very short notice Rev. Coffin opened this church to a gathering of some 600 people who expressed concern and anger when news of my arrest in May of that year reached here at the time of the Kwangju incident.

It is my hope that Rev. Coffin and this church will continue to play a significant role in the resolution of problems facing my country, Korea.

I. THE CONDITIONS OF PEACE

Technically speaking, the Korean peninsula has continued on in a state of war ever since the truce of July, 1953 because there has been no progress toward a peace treaty. Intense hostility has remained. The number of soldiers and the amount of weaponry has actually increased. The possibility of another conflict has been evident for over thirty years. The United States has maintained tens of thousands of troops in South Korea throughout this period in order to prevent another conflict. However, there has been peace on the peninsula—though it has been tenuous.

I see two major reasons that this peace has been maintained in spite of the poor conditions. First, there has been a balance of power factor not only between the South and the North but also with their respective supporters, the United States and Japan on one side and China and the Soviet Union on the other. As in Europe, the balance of power on the Korean peninsula has helped to keep the peace. The situation in Korea is thus not like that in the Middle East where there is no effective balance of power. Second, neither side has felt that it could gain any advantage by provoking war and thus upset this balance of power. Each side has felt it would only sustain serious damage should war break out. The damage would destroy the works of great labor which went into building up out of the ashes of war. War has been avoided because there has existed a balance of power and there has been no temptation to gain advantage on either side. These conditions will last long into the future. Thus, I don't see much possibility of another conflict. In addition, China has recently expressed a strong desire to promote peaceful conditions on the peninsula in cooperation with the United States and Japan. The Soviet Union is also unwilling to see any conflict on the Korean peninsula because it can see no advantage in such a conflict.

Last month, North Korea proposed a three-way dialogue revealing a drastic change in attitude. It had strongly opposed any dialogue with South Korea before then and had persistently insisted on having negotiations only with the United States to bring about a peace treaty. There is a great possibility that dialogue involving both South and North Korea will take place this year in spite of present delays. President Reagan's visit to China this April may bring about significant progress toward the start of dialogue. Though I am not sure that a permanent peace treaty can be achieved, I believe that dialogue can ease the tensions and hostility on the peninsula. I know that South Korea on the one hand and China and the Soviet Union on the other have hopes of establishing trade ties. It is known that North Korea also has a desire to develop economic relations with western countries. There is talk that North Korea is preparing a free port for this purpose on its west coast. Such economic relations could greatly help to maintain peace on the Korean peninsula.

However, there is a serious factor which if uncorrected can certainly damage the balance of power on the peninsula and the national security of South Korea. Since South Korea is under dictatorial rule, there is no guarantee of freedom of speech, academic freedom, freedom to organize and participate in trade unions, and elections of true value. There is a rubber stamp opposition party, National Assembly, and judicial branch. The more the economy grows, the greater is the gap between the haves and the have-nots, between urban and rural areas, between big enterprises and small enterprises, and between regions. Ten tycoon businessmen alone control 50% of the GNP. Therefore, the people's dissatisfaction has seriously increased. Consequently the present military regime can not enjoy the people's support and the United States is being criticized as the main support of this evil government. North Korea is eager to take advantage of the situation, but I don't see much chance that North Korea will stage an invasion across the DMZ. As Congressman Stephen Solarz has said North Korea will become ever bolder in seeking to promote turmoil by agitating dissatisfied people. Without improvement toward democracy there is no doubt that turmoil will become common and continue. Thus, North Korea may have a chance to create another Vietnam-like situation.

The clearest danger to peace is within South Korea. For peace, the most important thing is not good negotiations with the North but establishing a sound government which enjoys the voluntary support of the people. Only democratic government can gain the people's full support and ask for the people's dedication in maintaining stability and security. This is so because democratic government can guarantee the freedom, justice, and human dignity to which the Korean people have so long aspired.

Support from the people will prevent any subversive force from gaining hold in the South and will prevent any possibility of the North's communizing the South. Furthermore, from a position of strength, the South can lead North Korea to dialogue and peaceful resolution of problems. The future for peace on the Korean peninsula will be decided on the question of whether the people in the South can restore democratic government and on whether the United States supports such efforts and terminates its present policy of support for military dictatorship.

Another important factor is on an international level. Support for peace must come from the four big powers, the United States, the Soviet Union, Japan and China, which have geographical and traditional interests in the region. So, a three-way dialogue alone will not be sufficient. It must develop toward a six-way dialogue.

In a word, restoration of democracy and four-power cooperation are essential for peace on the Korean peninsula.

II. PROSPECTS FOR REUNIFICATION

Unlike the two Germanys, both Koreas have taken unification as their main goal. Unification has been persistently supported internationally. The four powers, the United States, the Soviet Union, Japan and China, which have strong interests in and influence on the peninsula now also support unification officially. In spite of the lack of opposition to unification, we have failed to achieve it in forty years time and there is no strong hope that we may achieve this goal in the near future.

There are two reasons for failure to achieve unification. First, even though the four powers support unification, they have not been truly interested in the realization of unification due to the nature of the cold war. They have not wanted to see any change in the balance of power in the peninsula and unification might upset it. The strategic importance of the peninsula is perceived as critical. The four powers have preferred to maintain the status quo with the peninsula divided in two. There is no real possibility of establishing a unified and neutral government such as that in Austria. Second, the persistent ambition of North Korea to communize South Korea and South Korea's continuing fear of North Korea have prevented moves toward peaceful unification. There has been no mutual trust, no progress toward reduction of hostilities between the two sides, no progress toward the restoration of a national consensus. There is a significant difference in the two systems' political, economic, and social development over the last forty years, and so we can see little possibility of early peaceful reunification as one country under the present circumstances.

To achieve peaceful unification we must succeed in addressing two areas of concern—a local one and an international one.

First, in South Korea, we must establish a strong and truly stable government with the people's cooperation and full support via the implementation of democracy. Such a government may have meaningful dialogue with North Korea in working toward the realization of peaceful coexistence and move toward a loose federal system as a first step. The existence of the communist government in the North could be recognized on one hand while South Korea would have to be guaranteed its right to exist as a democratic government on the other. The greater the increase of mutual trust and negotiation, the farther along we may proceed toward establishing one country under a loose federal system.

Second, on an international level, though we think of unification as something to be solved by the 60 million Koreans in the South and North, we can not deny that there is a strong influence coming from the four powers affecting the goal of unification. Each of the big powers has serious misgivings about a unified Korea. Each fears that a unified Korea might damage its security or other interests. The four powers may maneuver to thwart our efforts for the realization of unification thus augmenting the anti-unification factors within the South and the North. Whether we like it or not, we can not, therefore, ignore international attitudes though we should maintain a strong national determination to work toward one Korea.

Fundamentally speaking, peace and unification should be gained with the aid of the Korean people's strength. When there is a government in the South which is strong, North Korea will be cooperative in working toward the realization of peace and unification. When there is such a strong government in the South, the four powers will not be able to disregard the Korean people's desire for peace and reunification. Such strength must come from democratic government which can enjoy the people's full support. But, unfortunately, there is now no such democratic government in the South. This is mainly because of United States support for the present military dictatorship. It is well-known that while enjoying little support from the Korean people, General Chun can maintain his power only with United States support. United States support has led to Japanese support. Such international support for dictatorship has seriously discouraged democratic elements in the military and among our people. Though the United States has justified its support of military dictatorship using maintenance of peace as an excuse, this stand has backfired and peace is now actually threatened because dictatorship has greatly destroyed our people's loyalty. There is also a growing anti-American feeling among our people because of United States failure to support the cause of democracy in the South. If the present situation continues, we can not avoid meeting a fate similar to that seen in Vietnam: The present feeble peace may not be maintained and South Korea may be communized by the North.

I am not asking the United States to restore democracy in our stead; we only ask the United States not support military dictatorship but lend moral support to our democratic cause. With such moral support, we can achieve democratic government and work toward peace and eventually toward reunification.

As I said at the beginning of this talk, this church under the guidance of Rev. Coffin is a world-renowned force for peace. You base your belief and work for peace in God's love. I sincerely ask you to impress your government and the American people to support the Korean people's efforts. We can succeed with your help.

I thank you.

THE PRESENT SITUATION IN KOREA

(By Kim Dae Jung)

You are all knowledgeable in Asian affairs and particularly well-versed in Korean issues. As a Korean who has long been imprisoned and thus separated from Korean society and now one who has been away from Korea for more than one year, I should be the one receiving information from you on the present Korean situation. In Korean, we say this is like preaching Buddhism to Buddha. Recognizing my shortcomings in this regard, I will tell you briefly what I know of the present situation in South Korea to set the stage for the question and answer period which is to follow.

I want to address five areas. They are: 1) the issue of talks between North and South Korea as proposed by North Korea; 2) the necessity of systematic reform for human rights; 3) the possibility of another Yushin System; 4) the possibility of conflict between students and the government; and 5) the present role of the Korean churches.

I. THE ISSUE OF TALKS BETWEEN NORTH AND SOUTH KOREA

Last month North Korea made an unexpected proposal for three-way dialogue involving both Koreas and the United States. A similar proposal for a three-way dialogue was put forward by the late Park Chung Hee and President Carter in 1979 when President Carter visited Seoul. In spite of this, the attitudes of South Korea and the United States toward the present North Korean proposal are not very positive. The United States prefers to have a four-way dialogue which would include China. South Korea insists on a bilateral dialogue between the South and the North while leaving open the possibility of a four-way or six-way dialogue which would include the Soviet Union and Japan. South Korea is firmly resisting participation in a three-way dialogue even at the risk of contradicting its stand of 1979 when a proposal for such talks was issued from South Korea. South Korea worries about being excluded if North Korea should concentrate its efforts on dealing with the United States alone. North Korea might justify such an attitude on the grounds that it was North Korea and the United States which signed a truce agreement to end the Korean War in 1953.

On the other hand, North Korea is strongly opposed to a four-way dialogue. Two reasons can be cited. One is to avoid the dissatisfaction of the Soviet Union by participating in talks which would only involve China and not the Soviets. The other reason is to prevent South Korea's long-held desire of establishing contacts with China. The North Koreans are not likely to support a six-way dialogue at present either. The North Korean proposal for a three-way dialogue is supported by the Soviet Union.

The coming visit of President Reagan to China may result in decisive progress on this issue.

I see a strong possibility of opening some type of dialogue this year. However, I think that if there is a firm guarantee of equal status for South Korea at a three-way conference, that the three-way dialogue would be most likely.

My position is not in opposition to any type of dialogue as a first step to easing tensions on the Korean peninsula, but I firmly believe that only a six-way dialogue can produce any progress toward peace on the Korean peninsula because all four powers, the United States, Japan, China, and the Soviet Union, have vital interests and strong influence in Korea. Without their combined cooperation, we can never expect real peace on the Korean peninsula. This has been my persistent position since the 1971 Korean presidential election when I proposed four-power cooperation on the Korean peninsula.

II. THE NECESSITY OF SYSTEMATIC REFORM FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

The State Department has pointed out improvement in the Korean human rights situation in 1983 as compared with previous years. This came in its annual report on human rights. It mentioned the release of political prisoners—mainly students—and the granting of permission for students to return to their respective campuses. Of course, I also welcomed these moves, but this does not constitute a fundamental improvement in the human rights situation because many times in Korea we have seen the repeated release and imprisonment and the repeated expulsion and re-entry of students to college campuses. Without systematic reform toward a guarantee of human rights, we can never say that there is improvement in human rights. What we see is rather the cosmetic tactics of dictatorial rule in cheating public opinion both domestically and internationally. We need legal guarantees for the democratic rights of assembly, academic freedom, freedom for labor to organize, and freedom for farmers to form cooperatives. Of all freedoms, the freedom of speech and the freedom to have fair elections are the most essential core elements in guaranteeing human rights. When there is freedom of speech, any violation of human rights can be publicly criticized. When there is a fair system of elections, any government which can not guarantee human rights or which violates human rights will be voted out of office. The South Korean regime of Chun Doo Hwan strongly opposes any systematic reform—especially anything moving toward freedom of speech and free elections. The regime strongly opposes abolition of the notorious basic law governing the mass media, and government dominated elections laws. Further, it refuses to lift the ban imposed on 300 political figures. This ban prohibits these figures from making any public speeches or participating in any election activities.

III. THE POSSIBILITY OF ANOTHER YUSHIN SYSTEM

As you may remember, Park Chung Hee abused the South/North dialogue coming out of the July 4, 1972 joint communique. He proclaimed the Yushin System—justifying it as necessary to promote reunification, but from the time of the proclamation of the Yushin System until his death in 1979—a period of seven years—the Yushin System only served to shore up his dictatorial regime.

In spite of General Chun's repeated pledges to step down from office in March of 1988 after serving one term, there is a strong possibility that he seeks to continue his rule after 1988. There is a possibility of political maneuvering this year. Something which indicates that this is so is a move by the rubber stamp opposition parties for direct election of the president. The rubber stamp mass media has given full coverage to this idea. In South Korea without government approval, no opposition party or press organization can put forward such an idea. Chun was elected indirectly. A direct election after a constitutional amendment could be justified by Chun as a necessity in facing North Korea in talks. That is, Chun could say he needed to prove his popular support in order to face the North. Such a direct election under present conditions without freedom of speech and fair elections could easily be orchestrated by the government.

I predicted that Park Chung Hee would abuse the unification issue as a means to have himself elected for life. I made this prediction in 1970 and 1972. In 1972, the Yushin System was put in place and confirmed my prediction. I now see a similar possibility under the Chun regime.

IV. THE POSSIBILITY OF CONFLICT BETWEEN STUDENTS AND THE GOVERNMENT

Student power has grown tremendously through years of bitter experience and ordeal. Students are firmly determined to fight against dictatorship. Most of our people are different than they were in 1980. They now support the students' cause.

Expelled students are being forced to sign pledges of repentance before they may return to the campuses. However, the majority of these students refuse to do this, saying that they have nothing to repent for and that what they have stood for is an open advocacy of democracy which is not wrong. At the same time, there are signs that the government seeks to stir up trouble among students so that it may have an excuse to strongly repress them this coming spring. The government has been letting statements out from unidentified sources which accuse students of being leftist or pro-communist. The government has always used the charge of communism to crack down on its rivals. You know that in Korea this is a very serious charge which may easily turn some people against the students. I believe we must exercise caution at this critical time to avoid playing into the government's hands. We should be on our guard against such plots by the government and not be abused by such things.

V. THE PRESENT ROLE OF THE KOREAN CHURCHES

Korean churches have played a central role in the restoration of democracy and human rights movement since Park Chung Hee proclaimed the Yushin System in October, 1972. The role of churches has been significant and decisive in maintaining our movement. Recently, there have been signs of a lessening of the churches' role and there has been criticism—especially among students—of the role played by the churches because of the churches' pro-American attitude and the reluctance of the churches to continue their courageous role as they, as individuals, did before with prayer meetings and in rising imprisonment because of their stands. I don't think these criticisms are necessarily correct, but there is some indication of weakness in the church movement for democracy and human rights. On the other hand, some young men are showing signs of impatience. Patience is very necessary in enduring such periods of trial and in dealing with the short-tempered military regime.

Even though there are some arguments between church and non-church groups, we still have the same strong goal of realizing democracy. All recognize this as most important. Democracy is necessary in order to realize national security without the presence of American troops and to have a dialogue with North Korea with full confidence that a peaceful solution may be realized. To promote mutual understanding, joint activities involving church and non-church groups are essential in order to achieve our goal and not give any room for abuse by the shrewd maneuvering of the government.

I came here in December of 1982. During this last year I have devoted myself totally to persuading the United States government and friends not to support the military dictatorship in Korea. I believe it is harmful to the United States to support the dictatorship. For stability and security in Korea and for friendly relations between the people of Korea and the United States such support is also harmful. In spite of the Chun Doo Hwan government's lack of support from the people as reported in the American press, the Chun regime is maintained mainly because of United States support. As the United States supports the regime so does Japan. Because the United States and Japan support the Chun regime, democratic elements in the military and among our people have been greatly discouraged. Now, the United States has become a target of criticism and even hatred among our people. I really worry about this phenomenon for both Korea and the United States. My main purpose in being here in the United States is to persuade the United States to change its policy. I seek American public support. We must avoid another debacle such as seen in Vietnam. As I first mentioned, you are well informed about the Korean situation and I believe you will share my worries about the present situation. Let's focus our attention and energies to impress your government to change its policies.●

NEW YORK DISTRICT COUNCIL

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to a statement made by the New York District Export Council on behalf of American exporters located in New York. This organization has diligently worked to express the views of its members in regards to the Export Administration Act, especially in reference to the issue of contract sanctity.

Contract sanctity, according to the New York District Council, is vital to American competitiveness abroad. Without it, U.S. firms will be considered unreliable suppliers and will consequently be unable to sell products and commodities with long lead times in manufacturing and delivery. The council urges, therefore, that retroactive controls never be imposed for foreign policy reasons and that only the strongest justification lead to the imposition of national security controls on a retroactive basis.

Because of the relevance of these remarks to the congressional debate on the Export Administration Act, I request that the full statement of the New York District Export Council be printed in the RECORD.

The statement follows:

ARMCO CORP. OFFICES,
New York, NY, March 28, 1984.

Hon. JOHN HEINZ,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HEINZ: The Executive Committee of the New York DEC adopted and sent to the Secretary of Commerce the attached statement of position on the renewal of the Export Administration Act. I thought the statement might be of interest to you.

I would like to point out that no provision of the bill is as important to many of us in the business community as the provision dealing with "contract sanctity". The position of the New York DEC (see paragraph 5D on the attachment) is identical to many other organizations such as the National Foreign Trade Council. There should be no retroactive application of export controls except in times of war or national emergency!

Many people do not understand that without an effective contract sanctity provision, there simply will be no trade with countries such as the Soviet Union except in commodities or products which do not require long lead times to manufacture and deliver. Armco, for one, will not seek export opportunities unless it can be assured that once it receives an export license, it will not be suspended or revoked except under conditions equivalent to force majeure. We know many other companies feel the same way.

I respectfully urge you to consider this question carefully and to adopt an Export Administration Act that will both encourage an expansion of U.S. exports and protect true U.S. national security interests.

Sincerely,

JAMES H. GIFFEN.

AUGUST 3, 1983.

NEW YORK DISTRICT EXPORT COUNCIL

STATEMENT OF EXPORT ADMINISTRATION ACT POSITION

The Executive Committee of the New York District Export Council has unanimously adopted the following position on the proposed renewal of the Export Administration Act:

1. The ability of American exporters to compete effectively in international markets has been seriously hampered by U.S. export policy and administration of the Export Administration Act.

2. Exports are essential to the health of the U.S. economy. Both the Legislative and Executive branches must make a strong commitment to facilitating exports which do not make a direct and substantial contribution to our adversaries' military capability. The Congress and the Executive branch must remove the serious disadvantages faced by U.S. exports in Free World markets as a result of an export controls policy which is distinctly less favourable to U.S. exports than are the policies of our trading partners to their own exports.

3. The New York District Export Council recognizes the need for export controls over exports which make a direct and substantial contribution to our adversaries' military capabilities. However, this Administration and past administrations have confused and mixed foreign policy objectives with national security objectives. Despite the clear direction of Congress, export controls, and validated license requirements, cover a range of products and technology which is broader than necessary, and possibly counterproductive, to concentrating on the most strategically important items.

4. To enable American business to compete effectively, export controls must be clear, comprehensive and certain. Presently the Export Administration Act gives essentially no guidance on which exports will be prohibited for either national security or foreign policy reasons. Export controls have been applied retroactively and unpredictably, such that American exporters have come to be viewed as unreliable suppliers.

5. To deal with these problems, the New York District Export Council recommends:

(a) the United States should adopt a comprehensive clear policy on when U.S. exports will be restricted or prohibited.

(b) exports should not be restricted unless they would make a direct and substantial contribution to the military capabilities of our adversaries. It is implicit in this principle that export controls for foreign policy reasons should be eliminated. Our allies do not control exports for such reasons and foreign policy controls have uniformly failed to achieve any meaningful foreign policy goal except where supported by all foreign countries capable of supplying similar exports.

(c) except for national security reasons, exports should never be prohibited or restricted where equivalent goods or technology is available from non-U.S. sources. The lack of foreign availability should be raised from a matter simply to be considered (among others) in determining to apply export control to an affirmative determination to be made before imposing controls.

(d) there should be no retroactive application of export controls except in times of war or national emergencies. Once export contracts have been executed under valid licenses, exports under these contracts should not be subject to prohibitions. Retroactive controls should never be imposed for foreign policy reasons and the strongest justification (such as mistake) should be required for national security controls to be imposed retroactively.

(e) the Executive branch must have a generalized commitment to exports. Distortion of Congressional intent through the misapplication of foreign policy controls and unnecessarily broad interpretations of the contribution which exports may make to an adversaries' military capability, must be eliminated.●

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, there have been persistent reports in the press that President Reagan has decided to condition aid to Mexico on Mexican support for his Central American policies. Relations between the United States and Mexico have always been difficult and need careful, sensitive handling. Such a big stick approach, if indeed it has been adopted, is bound to prove counterproductive.

Carlos Fuentes has written a recent analysis on the likely Mexican reaction if President Reagan makes such an approach to President de la Madrid when he visits Washington next month. Mr. Fuentes argues that U.S. foreign policy has suffered its greatest defeats not at the hands of Marxism-Leninism but of Third-World nationalism. He asserts that pressure on Mexico would cause the Reagan administration's rudderless Central American policies to hit a mine more explosive than any planted by the Central Intelligence Agency in Nicaraguan waters if it provoked in Mexico a nationwide anti-U.S. reaction: Mexico would not shift to Marxism but to stronger nationalism.

Mr. Fuentes does not pull his punches, but the points he makes are important for us all to hear. I urge my colleagues to read this important analysis that appeared in the April 24 New York Times. I ask that the full text of Mr. Fuentes' analysis appear at this point in the RECORD.

DON'T PUSH MEXICO

(By Carlos Fuentes)

ST. LOUIS.—President Reagan, we are told, has signed National Security Decision Directive 124, which is designed to convince Mexico's President, Miguel de la Madrid, and his principal aides that their interest lies in supporting United States policies in Central America.

According to Newsweek, when Mr. de la Madrid visits Washington in May, Mr. Reagan will argue that "the price for continued economic aid to Mexico is support for Washington's policies in Central America." The Administration has neither confirmed nor denied the report. I hope it is denied. Confirmation would add to the mess Washington's policies are churning up in Central America.

A keystone of United States foreign policy has been a secure southern border. This security arises not from Washington's imposing its will on Mexico but from a long, painful experience that involved war and other military intervention, territorial annexation, revolution and pressures and harassments resembling those heaped on Nicaragua today. In the late 1930's, Mexico and the United States reached a modus vivendi based on mutual respect and diplomatic, not military, solutions.

It is appalling that these lessons are forgotten in dealing with Central America simply because Washington wants to treat the small republics as satellites. But it would be disastrous if the model for correct relationships with Latin America—the Mexico-United States relationship—should wantonly revert to "big stick" and gunboat-diplomacy policies.

Mexico proves its friendship through its diplomatic independence. Would the United States be better off with a Latin Poland on its border? It also proves its friendship by keeping historical memory alive when the United States suffers amnesia. Mistakes should not be repeated out of ignorance or arrogance. When they are, it discourages all in the Southern Hemisphere who do not want to fall into the Soviet Union's arms but also do not want to be manipulated by the United States. Yet many Latin Americans, thanks to the Administration's actions, have stopped perceiving a Soviet danger and see only a United States danger in the hemisphere.

Any action designed to put pressure on Mexico will feed this perception. United States foreign policy has suffered its greatest defeats not at the hands of Marxism-Leninism but of third-world nationalism. Some politicians in this country may fool some of the people about their anti-Communist crusades in Central America, but it would be hard to characterize Mexico as a Communist pawn. Such pressures would be glaringly seen here and in Mexico as an encroachment on its national independence.

The Administration can be certain that using muscle on Mexico will serve only to strengthen Mexico's independent foreign policy and unify the country behind President de la Madrid. He is not only a man of strong character and strong nationalist sentiment but also a canny politician acutely aware that national unity rests considerably on a policy of defense against North American pressures.

The Reagan Administration's rudderless Central American policies would hit a mine more explosive than any planted by the Central Intelligence Agency in Nicaraguan waters if it provoked in Mexico a nationwide anti-United States reaction: Mexico would not shift to Marxism but to stronger nationalism. A hostile Mexico is the last thing Washington needs.

This would add to the accumulated disasters we are now witnessing. A policy designed to enhance United States credibility abroad is openly opposed by Latin America's principal governments and by your European allies. Washington's international machismo flounders in the incompetence of its covert armies, covert air forces, covert mining operations, a Salvadoran Army that supplies half the guerrillas' military needs and a Nicaraguan Government that grows stronger the more it is assailed from without.

This results from putting the chariots of war before the steeds of diplomacy. Mexico wants to put the horse before the cart. The pragmatic Contadora process has reached the stage of preparing a Draft Treaty on the Maintenance of Peace, Security, Economic Cooperation and the Strengthening of Democratic Institutions in Central America, to be signed by the five Central American republics, plus protocols dealing with particular problems between Nicaragua and Honduras, El Salvador and Costa Rica. These instruments deal with all the United States' legitimate security interests in the region.

After thumbing its nose at international law on the steps on the court at The Hague and in Nicaraguan waters, the Administration, to heal its damaged reputation, should abandon its dangerous, unproductive policies and support peaceful diplomacy with more than lip service. It could start by shelving National Security Decision Directive 124.●

The Government of Italy has requested the purchase of a quantity of 5,390 I-TOW missiles and 1,239 TOW practice missiles with applicable publications at an estimated cost of $57 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy and national security objectives of the United States by improving the military capabilities of Italy; furthering NATO rationalization, standardization, and interoperability; and enhancing the defenses of the Western Alliance.

The Government of Italy requires the I-TOW missile system to improve its antitank defense posture. Italian military forces are currently equipped with the basic TOW missile system.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The prime contractor will be the Hughes Aircraft Corporation of Tucson, Arizona.

Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additional U.S. Government or contractor personnel to Italy.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.●

ENZO DE CHIARA

(By request of Mr. BAKER the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:)

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, there is one thing upon which Americans pride ourselves above all: the opportunity that our Nation affords to the industrious individual. We do well to remember this distinctly American phenomenon, particularly as it relates to those who make their way to our shores from other nations. Right here, in Washington, DC, there is a classic example of the limitless possibilities presented to those who come to America with a dream of success and the determination to make this American dream come true.

Many of us in this Chamber have had the pleasure of knowing Enzo de Chiara. After many a late night session of the Senate, we have made our way to his family-owned-and-operated restaurant, Romeo & Juliet, for a fine Italian dinner. Along with the fine food, Enzo de Chiara dispenses his keen observations on current affairs. He is an eternal optimist who came to America with the will to succeed.

Recently, he was spotlighted in the Courier Diplomatique. I ask, therefore, that this article be printed in the RECORD in its entirety at the conclusion of my remarks.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The article follows:

ANOTHER AMERICAN OF ITALIAN ANCESTRY MAKES HIS MARK

Enzo de Chiara is a man who thrives on challenge; a man who creates for himself opportunities which might not otherwise exist.

Today, after only 16 years in the United States, Enzo is a successful, independent businessman who exercises an increasingly effective presence in the Italian-American community.

His professional stature has not always been so assured, however. Enzo is a graduate of the University of Naval Sciences and spent the earliest years of his career as a Merchant Marine officer. As a young bachelor in his native Italy, Enzo forsook a financially comfortable and professionally promising career in the blossoming Italian fashion industry to make a life for himself in the United States. He arrived in New York in September 1968 with $150 and seven pieces of luggage, most of which contained books and records.

Enzo seized every opportunity that came his way. His first job paid $45 a week and occupied (but hardly satisfied) him for exactly 45 days. Subsequent positions, including one with Italian master tailor Lino Lentini, were more rewarding.

But it was not until Enzo decided he would work only in Gucci's Fifth Avenue shop that he first began to forge his own career. After careful cultivation, Dr. Aldo Gucci offered Enzo the position of manager of his shoe boutique. At this point, Enzo's talent and tact for business asserted itself. He refused the manager's position because he believed himself unqualified for it. But he accepted the manager's salary to work as a Gucci salesman so that he could learn every aspect of the business. It was a decision Enzo and Dr. Gucci have never regretted.

Within one month, Enzo had become Gucci's best salesman, and shortly thereafter he assumed the management of the shoe boutique. At the time, Gucci sold 25 pairs of shoes a day. Nine months later, the shoe boutique, under Enzo's suave and efficient management, was selling 350 pairs of shoes a day. His position eventually encompassed responsibility for sales, styling, and purchasing for all Gucci shops in the United States.

Enzo's success at Gucci was the foundation for his association with Mario Valentino, Italy's premier couturier, and in 1970 he moved to Washington, D.C. where, at The Watergate, he opened his own boutique with the Valentino franchise.

Enzo discovered, however, that success as an arbiter of taste and fashion entrepreneur was not as satisfying as he had thought it would be. In an abrupt career change, he sold his five-year-old boutique and, in the tradition of his family, he opened, in partnership with his two brothers, Romeo and Juliet restaurant, indisputably one of the best Italian restaurants in Washington.

Today, from his office at Romeo and Juliet's, Enzo acts as an international business consultant, advising Italian industries on sales to U.S. clients.

Enzo's activities are not limited solely to the business community, however. He is consistently and increasingly involved in Italian-American political affairs and is highly respected as an effective liaison between American and Italian politicians. He attributes his interest and participation in politics not only to his business success which, he says, "makes me realize I have the talent to address myself to larger issues," but also to the close bond he has with his relative Giovanni Leone, former President of the Republic of Italy. "It is he who taught me the Italian machinery of politics, and it is from him I learned that personal contributions in the political arena help to improve the quality of our lives".

Enzo's political contributions to Italian-American friendship have not gone unnoticed. In 1977, he was decorated with the Cross of Merit by the Sovereign Military Order of Malta. The following year, he was decorated by the Secretary of State of the Republic of San Marino. He serves as special assistant to the Chairman of the Italian-American Foundation for International Affairs, and in a departure from his inherent Italian-American interests, he has been appointed Honorary Consul of the Republic of Panama in Washington, D.C.

How does he view his life in the United States? Enzo replies simply, "This is the most wonderful land in the world. I love this country with the same feelings and strength that I love the country of my birth." ●

CHURCHILL AND REAGAN

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, yesterday, the New York Times opposite-editorial page carried a very thought-provoking article deserving of the attention of the Senate. I ask that the article of Pamela C. Harriman, entitled "Churchill and Reagan," be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

CHURCHILL AND REAGAN

(By Pamela C. Harriman)

In 1945, Winston Churchill was more than a British hero; he was the personification of the free world. Yet in political terms, this counted for far less than Churchill—and virtually everyone else—assumed. In the midst of the Potsdam Conference, while he was plotting the future of the globe with Truman and Stalin, Churchill was suddenly and unceremoniously deposed in a British general election he was supposed to win handily.

The news came like a thunderclap; but after the reverberations faded, the results seemed almost foreordained. And the reasons why a British Prime Minister lost that long ago election suggest that the same unexpected fate could befall an American President forty years later.

Churchill, like Reagan, was certainly personally popular; indeed the Prime Minister was universally regarded as the savior of the nation. Churchill was a dominant presence. By contrast, the leader of the opposition, Clement Attlee seemed so drab that Churchill once described him as "a sheep's clothing." More eloquently and more powerfully than Reagan, Churchill was the great communicator, the man had mobilized the English language and sent it into battle. Attle's voice was high-pitched and staccato; he was a poor speaker. By comparison, every Democratic candidate for President in 1984 is an able speaker.

In short, Churchill had more of Reagan's strengths and fewer of his weaknesses. Although he was the oldest Prime Minister of the century, he was two years younger in 1945 than Reagan is today. No one questioned what Churchill had achieved or the importance of it. His war policy was not at issue in an election that followed the German surrender by only a matter of months. No one suspected that he was a part-time leader, not fully in command, or not quite up to the job intellectually.

So what happened? Churchill, who saw the election as a judgment on his past success, lost power to Attlee because he lost control of the political dialogue. Instead of voting for Churchill's leadership, his character, or his record, the British acknowledged these factors and then all but ignored them. They responded to the issue of housing starts at home, not zones of occupation. Attlee spoke of social justice, not international arrangements; he pledged a Britian "with cake for none until all had bread." The election was about the future, not the past—and the candidate who had been preeminently first in war was not seen as the right man to be first in peace.

This did not mean that Churchill had lost his place in the hearts of his countrymen. Rather, with rough democratic dispatch, they decided that he had finished the job he had been selected to do. As for the future, his vision was not theirs.

As Churchill went, so could Reagan in 1984. The signs of the similarity between the two political situations are interesting and impressive. While the President's personal popularity is high, his Gallup ratings are markedly lower when the question concerns the job he is doing in specific areas—the economy, his policies in Lebanon and Central America, the overall conduct of foreign policy. He offers no program for the American future beyond the continuation of his present course.

Many who voted for him in 1980 may very well decide that he, like Churchill, has completed the task and can be thankfully retired—that he is no longer a man for the times.

Indeed, Mr. Reagan was elected when Americans worried that our national defense was weak. Now, they wonder if we are spending too much, moving too fast into another round of the nuclear arms race, and edging too near the brink of war in Central America.

This President was elected to cut the waste in government; now people are thinking again about fairness, compassion and the poor. The realization is setting in that the Reagan tax cut must be modified to reduce the Reagan deficit. The social issues—abortion, school prayer, censorship—mobilized new voting blocs for the new right in 1980; this year, the gender gap and civil rights are likely to do as much or more for the Democrats.

The causes closest to Mr. Reagan's heart have become yesterday's concerns. If Americans look to the future, if they treat 1984 as a chance for change instead of a referendum on the past four years, even those who like this President, even some who approve of what he has done, may vote their hopes for what the Democrats will do. Obviously the opposition must at least echo this mood, and this year's Democratic candidates can surely do so far more skillfully than Attlee did in 1945. If the Democratic nominee does it with any effectiveness at all, Ronald Reagan could be popular, genial, likable—and defeated.

In breadth of talent, sense of history, and real achievement, there can be no comparison between Churchill and Reagan. The parallels relate only to the political situation now and in 1945, when a British election demonstrated that the most charismatic leader—even a Churchill at the height of an undisputed success unparalleled by any of the controversial Reagan policies—can be beaten.

While Churchill, Truman, and Stalin were negotiating at Potsdam in the days before the British election, a number of us were visiting British army encampments in Germany. We shared the confidence in a Churchill victory, but we were also feeling—and I must confess, discounting—a persistent undercurrent among the soldiers. "Old Winnie was great for the war, but we want something different," they were saying to each other and writing home to England. It was a signal of the upset to come. I thought of it again as I watched the President on a recent visit to an auto factory; he was smiling and the workers were applauding. Many of them were also wearing Mondale hats. I wondered how many of them were saying to themselves: "I like old Ronnie, but I want something different."●

SMOKEY BEAR WEEK

(By request of Mr. BAKER the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.)

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I recently cosponsored Senate Joint Resolution 273, legislation introduced by my distinguished colleague from Alabama, Senator HEFLIN. This resolution would designate the week of May 13 as "Smokey Bear Week."

Mr. President, in my State of New York, we have one of this Nation's most beautiful forests in the Adirondack Park. The people of my State feel very strongly about preserving this area in its natural state. Indeed, an amendment to the State constitution mandates that the area be kept forever wild. In light of this deep concern by the people of my State for conservation, I felt it was most appropriate to honor the symbolic leader of the fight to conserve our forests—Smokey the Bear.

Smokey has been a symbol of the fight to maintain our forests for many years. It is indeed appropriate that we honor him on this, the 40th, anniversary of his adoption by the American public. I urge my colleagues to adopt this resolution without delay.●

ROBERT N. CLEMENT

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise to recognize the elevation of a friend and distinguished public servant, Mr. Robert N. Clement, to the presidency of Cumberland College in Lebanon, TN.

Mr. Clement's career, although not lengthy, has been characterized by high achievement. He has served with great distinction on the Tennessee Public Service Commission, to which he was elected by the people of our State, and as a Director of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Interspersed in this career of public service has been a successful history of ventures in private business, indicating the enormous energy and devotion Mr. Clement brings to his work.

Mr. Clement represents the third generation of his family to have attended or been associated with Cumberland College. Both his father, the late Tennessee Gov. Frank G. Clement, and his grandfather were alumni of the institution.

Cumberland College has a rich heritage and once had more graduates in the U.S. Congress than any other college or university. Its alumni include such prominent figures as the late U.S. Secretary of State Cordell Hull, justices of both United States and State Supreme Court, Governors, college presidents, and other local and national leaders.

I am confident that Mr. Clement will uphold and strengthen the tradition of this fine institution. Even though Mr. Clement is now only 40 years old, he has demonstrated wisdom and insights far beyond his years, and these qualities will help establish him as an honored and distinguished leader of Cumberland College.

Mr. President, I wish to extend my hearty congratulations to President Robert N. Clement of Cumberland College on the occasion of his inauguration to that position, May 4, 1984.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Lebanon Democrat written by that newspaper's editor, Mr. Sam Hatcher, commemorating Mr. Clement's inauguration.

The editorial follows:

EDITORIAL

(By Sam Hatcher)

Today marks the beginning of a new era for Cumberland College as this institution dressed and redressed in gowns of historical prominence inaugurates Robert N. Clements as its 16th president.

The college, returning to a full four-year academic degree program last year after a 27 year stint as a standard two-year junior college, turns the pages of its history to yet another chapter in its long and glorious 142 year life.

President Clement, who comes to Cumberland with a distinguished record of public service, is today coronated with the challenges of Cumberland's future.

There is much to be done and far more than can be expected of one person.

With President Clement's leadership and our community's unified force this school, which once graduated a U.S. Secretary of State, more than 100 Congessmen and Senators, 50 college and university presidents, two U.S. Supreme Court Justices and literally hundreds of justices of state supreme courts, judges, attorneys, public officials and religious leaders, will continue to be a strong, viable and influential institution.

As President Clement, his wife Mary and their two children embark on page one of this new era in Cumberland's history, we wish them well.

Their mission is not a simple one but surely one that can be filled with an abundance of satisfaction knowing that their hands have played a significant role in the continuing existence and enrichment of this college that has meant to much to so many.

With these editorial comments we extend our congratulations to President Clement and Cumberland College's first family.●

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 246—URGING THE PRESIDENT TO SECURE A FULL ACCOUNTING OF OUR MILITARY AND CIVILIAN PERSONNEL CAPTURED OR MISSING IN ACTION IN SOUTHEAST ASIA

(By request of Mr. BAKER, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:)

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 246, a joint resolution to secure a full accounting of our military and civilian personnel captured or missing in action in Southeast Asia.

This resolution calls upon the President to secure from the governments of Southeast Asia a full accounting of the 2,490 Americans captured or missing as a result of the Vietnam conflict. It calls upon the President to work for both the immediate release of each living American listed by the Department of Defense as a prisoner or as missing in action and for the immediate return of the remains of all American POW's and MIA's who have died in Southeast Asia.

Finally, this resolution calls for two reports by the President describing the Government's efforts to achieve a full and complete accounting of our POW's and MIA's. The first report is due within 30 days of the passage of this joint resolution and will describe the actions taken by the Federal Government before the enactment of this resolution to achieve a full accounting. The second report is due not earlier than 90 days and not later than 180 days after the enactment of this resolution and will describe the actions taken by the Government to implement the first section of the resolution.

This resolution is a necessary means to keep the attention of the public, of the executive branch, and the international community focused on the urgent humanitarian need to achieve a full accounting of the 2,490 Americans listed as POW's or MIA's in Southeast Asia. There are 2,490 families who have lived for more than a decade in cruel uncertainty regarding the fate of their loved ones. This uncertainty can only be resolved through the vigorous efforts of the U.S. Government and the cooperation of the nations who control the territory in which our citizens were lost or taken prisoner.

We must have a full accounting. New York has 160 citizens listed as unaccounted for in the latest Department of Defense tally. Only California and Texas have more unaccounted for and more families living in protracted anguish. I know, because I attended the 1981 National Convention of the National League of Families of Prisoners and Missing in Action in Southeast Asia. I listened to their stories of the devastating impact this intolerable situation has had on them.

Nothing speaks more eloquently of the need to achieve this accounting than the experience of our distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from Alabama. He was one of the lucky ones—he came home. He was shot down on July 18, 1965, and was held prisoner for 7½ years. He personally experienced the savage brutality of the Communist Vietnamese regime.

Now, it has been more than 12 years since the last American forces were withdrawn from South Vietnam. This means that some early POW's are approaching 20 years of harsh captivity. Even the last Americans captured are nearing twice the period of captivity our distinguished colleague endured. The courage and resolve required to withstand this experience can be judged from the distinguished Senator from Alabama's testimony. We must keep faith with these men and their families.

There has been recent movement on this issue. The Socialist Republic of Vietnam and the Governments of Laos and Kampuchea have shown signs of cooperation in recent months. Now is the time to increase public awareness of the seriousness of this issue which has remained an open wound in our national psyche for far too long. As the administration presses ahead to explore these opportunities, this resolution will serve as a unified expression of congressional support for a full accounting. With an aroused public and a united government, we can convince the governments in Southeast Asia of our seriousness and our unyielding resolve. Only in this way can we ever hope to achieve the full accounting we must have.

In closing, I call upon my colleagues to lend their support to this important measure. The families of those listed as POW's or MIA's, and, most of all, the men our efforts are attempting to save, will remember. I want them to remember that we kept the faith and did not let them down.●

THE PRESIDENT'S INAUGURATION, FORT VALLEY STATE COLLEGE

● Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues that on May 5, 1984, the first president's inauguration will take place at Fort Valley State College in Fort Valley, GA. This 89-year-old institution received its charter in 1885 and is one of the three historically black institutions operating under the auspices of the State University System of Georgia. Fort Valley State College, located in middle Georgia, has over its years of existence made significant contributions to the betterment of the Fort Valley community, the State, and Nation. It is worthwhile to note that the diligent efforts made in agricultural research has and continues to have a positive impact on technological advancement in the field of agribusiness. I especially want to note that this institution has, in fact, established a most prestigious and recognized school of business and economics.

On May 5, 1984, at 1:30 p.m. the Fort Valley State College family, its many friends and well wishers will witness the first president's inauguration. At this moment in history, Dr. Luther Burse will receive the mace in acceptance of the role as president of this prestigious institution. I can say with all candor that Dr. Burse comes to this institution with impeccable credentials, enormous management talents, and dedication to progressive education. He earned a bachelor's degree from Kentucky State University in 1958, a masters degree from Indiana University in 1960, and a doctoral degree from the University of Maryland in 1969. Dr. Burse joined the faculty of Cheyney State College as a full professor in 1969, coordinated the graduate studies program in the division of behavorial and applied science, became acting dean of the division of technical and applied sciences in 1974, and in 1981, served as interim president of Cheyney State College. In 1983, the board of regents of the University System of Georgia elected Dr. Burse to serve as president of Fort Valley State College.

Dr. Burse is married to the former Mammie Melbor and they have an 18-year-old son, Luther, Jr., a sophomore at Morehouse College in Atlanta, and 13-year-old daughter, Elizabeth.

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues of the Senate to join with me in extending best wishes for a successful inauguration of Dr. Luther Burse as president of Fort Valley State College.●

DEATH OF HENRY PALEY

(By request of Mr. BAKER, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:)

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, it is with great sadness that I rise today to inform the Senate of the untimely death of one of the great educational leaders in my State and our Nation.

Henry Paley, president of the Commission on Independent Colleges and Universities in New York, was dedicated as no man I have ever known to the proposition that educational opportunity is not a privilege but a right. He fought to see to it that college-bound students were given the widest possible range of academic choice.

Hank, as he was called by many, fought for students in both the private and public sectors of higher education. As the director of university relations at the City University of New York, he was a champion of broadened access to postsecondary education while always stressing the need for adherence to high academic standards.

At the Commission on Independent Colleges and Universities Hank Paley performed brilliantly to help preserve New York's nationally respected private colleges and universities. Thanks to his efforts, thousands of young people benefited from the opportunity to attend some of the great schools in our land. That opportunity is the foundation of our progress as a Nation.

Hank endeared himself to us in New York because he combined intelligence with intellectual integrity. He was a son of New York, a city he loved dearly. He never forgot those roots, and always exuded the unbridled optimism and good humor of a man truly at peace with himself and his fellowman.

Hank's social conscience was perhaps most influenced by his work as a young organizer for the International Ladies Garment Workers Union. He carried through life a keen sense of responsibility to working people. Whenever he spoke to me about higher education matters, Hank always framed the issues in terms of their impact on "working people." As a young man who benefited myself from a national defense student loan, I could always relate to Hank's passion for making quality education accessible and affordable to all.

So, Mr. President, we have lost a dear friend of one of the values we hold most dear: that in this Nation, anyone can pursue an education in an environment of freedom, can excel, and can contribute personally to our national well-being. While Hank is gone, that ideal will survive as long as there are men and women who believe in it with the passion and the dedication that he did. We will sorely miss him.●

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

PROMESA: A RAY OF HOPE IN THE SOUTH BRONX

HON. ROBERT GARCIA OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, more and more we see and hear evidence for hope and promise in my district of the South Bronx. One such example, is described in the following article of Nuestro. The article points out that through a program called PROMESA, those addicted to drugs can struggle to successfully rebuild their lives. In the middle of the South Bronx, in the Mount Hope section, in two renovated old buildings, society's "rejects" struggle to find themselves and to rebuild their lives against great odds. PROMESA survives despite devastating Federal cutbacks. Unfortunately, these cutbacks are indicative of the Reagan administration's hypocrisy toward social spending. That is, on one hand they want all members of society to be productive, but on the other hand, they remove the very financial assistance which could lead to that end. In any event, PROMESA will survive and provide that ray of hope for those "rejects" of the South Bronx.

[From Nuestro, March 1984]

PROMESA—A RAY OF HOPE IN THE SOUTH BRONX

(By Frank Espada)

"I was really down and out before I came here." Doris is an attractive 28-year-old addict, a resident of PROMESA, a drug treatment residential and ambulatory program in the South Bronx.

"I didn't have anything. I didn't have a family. I had to steal, to prostitute . . . I had been on drugs since I was 13."

Doris came into the program on February 28, 1983, a date she wants to remember. "I was in a similar program before, but I was never involved like this . . . I'm really dedicated to what I want to do, and it feels so good!"

At PROMESA, she is an "advanced client," undergoing clinical training. She works at the center's youth component and receives a stipend for her services. These may include such duties as escorting the youngsters to the medical department and making sure they are attending school. She is learning by observing the techniques employed by the counselors, assisting them in various ways.

She is planning to go to college next year, "because I understand that I need a full knowledge of what I'm going to be dealing with . . ." A talented young woman, she recently played Maria in PROMESA's production of "West Side Story."

According to the New York State Division of Substance Abuse Services (DSAS), almost 1.5 million people in New York are regular users of drugs. Most of them are between the ages of 12 and 35. Of these, almost 250,000 are heroin addicts, and more than three-quarters of them live in New York City.

Blacks, Puerto Ricans and other Hispanics are disproportionately represented in this group. Although they are about 21 percent of the population, they constitute 57 percent of the "hard" drug addicts in the city. In stark numbers, the estimate is that there are about 49,000 Puerto Rican and other Hispanic addicts in New York City alone. DSAS lists 48,800 clients in treatment of which more than half, 26,500 are minorities.

To a large extent, then, the hard drug problem is, and has always been, primarily a minority community problem, a very real and difficult one which is becoming increasingly worse, particularly in places like the South Bronx.

A recent Census Bureau report lists the 18th Congressional District of the South Bronx as the poorest in the nation. Yes, poorer than any districts in Mississippi, Alabama or West Virginia, with a median income of $8,448; 44 percent of the residents live on incomes below the federal poverty line.

The decade of the '70s saw a wave of arson for profit which decimated the housing stock. Many areas are totally devastated and, as a result, school enrollment has dropped dramatically, forcing the closing of many schools (one school district's population has dropped by more than half in less than five years).

Add to this situation the generally poor public services which are the norm, the specter of ever present crime and the desolation of a Martian landscape and one may have a hint of what it's like to live in the South Bronx.

In the middle of all of this stands PROMESA, in the Mount Hope section of the South Bronx. There, in two renovated old buildings that were formerly a Hebrew Home for the Aged, society's rejects struggle to find themselves and to rebuild their lives against great odds.

"Most of our clients are individuals who never had structure in their lives, who always ran away from responsibilities, who had a negative life style," says Felix Velásquez, the executive director of PROMESA. "They come because all the other doors have been closed to them."

Velásquez leans forward for emphasis. "Our job is to motivate them, to turn them around, to give them some self-esteem, a sense of values, to bring out their potential, to give them self-confidence—that's what PROMESA is about."

The program presently serves 210 adults and 25 youth between the ages of 12 and 19. Most are live-in residential clients, with an average stay of up to 18 months. There is also an ambulatory program on weekdays. The treatment modalities vary, depending on the needs of the client, from methadone-to-abstinence to a completely drug-free condition which is always the ultimate goal.

"We provide a multiple of options to our clients . . . We can fit them to the program that can best serve them," explains Velásquez.

The PROMESA program has been in existence since 1976 and has treated several thousand clients with a staff of 60 people in four departments: medical, administrative, fiscal and therapeutic (counseling).

Acceptance in the program is conditioned by the clients' agreement to a contract which spells out what is expected from them. There are rules of behavior that must be followed to the letter. If any are broken (stealing, abusing drugs, violence, etc.), termination may result. Unless the offense is unusually severe, their peers serve as the judges and decide how to deal with the problem. An appeal process and a client Bill of Rights protect the clients and assure fair treatment.

Upon arrival at PROMESA (from the courts, jail, hospital, the community) prospective clients are evaluated by counselors and social workers in order to develop a treatment plan. Clients are a vital part of this process, are fully aware of the elements of the plan and finally review and sign it. In addition, the counselor and the director also sign the plan, signifying agreement of all concerned.

John Franco, the deputy clinical director, says that this contributes to the success of a most difficult task—"modifying client's behavior towards becoming a bigger and better person."

The emphasis is on self-help, with intensive therapy through group counseling sessions, to deal with physical, emotional and mental problems.

A work-like atmosphere is maintained at PROMESA. Besides the therapy sessions, clients must be at their assigned work stations by 9 a.m. and are expected to perform their duties. There are 17 training positions, like the kitchen, where they learn to cook, to maintain a good apprearance, to develop a good attitude and to supervise. They are initially placed on probation, and after evaluation (once monthly), they receive small stipends, which are increased if they continue to perform their duties competently.

In consultation with their counselors, the clients decide how the money will be used. Most often a bank account is established. During their stay clients have an opportunity for additional education. Four teachers are available for adults, covering such areas as basic math, English, GED preparation and English As A Second Language.

"We have a unique population," says Franco. "A great number of our clients are non-English speaking. Therefore, a lot of work is done with them to bring them to the English-speaking group." He points out that alienation is a major cause of drug abuse and that lack of English language ability can contribute to that alienation. Thus, language instruction is considered a very important part of the treatment.

Because of the large Spanish-speaking population at the facility (70 percent of the residents are Hispanic), half of the counselors are bilingual as are the four assigned teachers. This ability to serve a primarily Spanish-speaking clientele effectively is considered one of the unique features of the home.

"If they don't speak English well, they do not need to feel embarrassed," says Franco. "A comfortable learning environment is provided. Also, with a bilingual staff, treatment will not be adversely affected by the language deficiency."

After six or seven months, clients may be advanced to what is termed a "re-entry level," where they re-enter the community to look for a job while continuing to live at PROMESA. Once they have jobs, they are expected to save enough money to allow them, when ready, to move out on their own. Once this has happened, they are still required to report to the facility once a week, render a urine test (to be assured they are drug-free), and to continue participation in group therapy. In another three to six months, usually around March, there is an annual graduation.

The program generally takes about a year before a staff committee screens candidates for graduation. At this time client-candidates are asked specific questions about their employment, how they handle pressure, what kinds of friends they have and their social life generally. Based on this the committee recommends whether or not the client is ready to graduate.

A separate annex building houses the Youth Component, for those between the ages of 12 and 19. Two floors provide dormitory-type accommodations for 25 residents as well as school rooms, offices and a lounge area.

On a typical day, the clients get up about 6:30 a.m., clean up, eat between 7 and 7:30 a.m. and then clean up the area for which they are responsible until about 8 a.m. At that time there is a morning meeting, for therapeutic purposes, a kind of family hour, where they may sing together or otherwise socialize in an effort to become closer.

The students go to classes from 9 to 12 noon, have lunch at noon and return at 1 p.m. for the discussion of a topic of interest to the community. This usually is a question and answer session, with a staff member or an outside guest. It provides an opportunity to ventilate on a number of subjects.

From 2 to 4 p.m. there is another class period; from 4 to 5 p.m. the focus is on homework and tutoring efforts, with adult clients often tutoring the younger ones. Dinner is served in the main building at 5 p.m. and then it is back to the annex again for an hour of leisure.

A house meeting is scheduled around 6:30 p.m. to discuss the day's happenings, to acknowledge good or bad efforts and to take care of general business. Afterwards, some may go in a supervised group to a movie, the library or a museum. Otherwise, they are not permitted to leave the facility unless accompanied by a responsible family member or other adult.

On Wednesdays or Fridays they split up into small groups around 7:30 p.m. for therapy sessions. They break up around 9 when a snack is provided. Bedtime is 10:30.

It is obviously a busy schedule for anyone and that is the intention, says Franco. "Young people have a lot of energy and it is important that they be kept busy and involved constructively."

Four Board of Education teachers are assigned to the Youth Component. Classes take place in four classrooms, in groups of 10 to 15 students. "In the small groups we provide, the learning environment is more family-like and they are less sensitive about their difficulties. As a result they have more success with the learning process," explains Franco.

Many have excelled in the center's educational program. Sixteen graduated from the nearby John F. Kennedy High School through a special arrangement with the board of education. "and some even graduated with honors," Velásquez points out proudly. What is most needed, says Franco, was "some patience, a little understanding and somebody to acknowledge that they were people."

Studies indicate that the Puerto Rican youngster is more greatly at risk of becoming involved with drugs than his counterpart in the greater society.

Dr. Francisco Trilla, medical director of PROMESA, ascribes stress as a major cause of drug addiction.

"An important consideration of the cause of drug addiction in our community is the despair connected to our experience . . . the uprooting of the Puerto Rican family from the island, arriving in a hostile environment, with all of the difficulties of adjustment, with discrimination in all aspects of life, especially in employment . . ."

All this often leads to family disintegration and to dependence on government assistance programs by families headed by single women.

Add to this, says Dr. Trilla, "an educational system that causes a very high dropout rate among our children and the absence of employment for those dropouts and you can begin to understand why they attempt to escape from this quagmire by getting into drugs . . ." And he concludes, "They eventually become prisoners of drug addiction."

"These things create a blueprint for failure," says Franco. "Instead of encouraging hard work and perseverance, what's touted on TV and in the movies are short-term solutions, short cuts and money will solve all the problems."

When the young realize the truth, "they become angry, they try to escape by using and abusing what society has always put in their way: liquor, pills, drugs . . . We live in a basically drug-oriented society. Everything our kids see leads them to believe that there is something you can take for every problem you might have . . ."

PROMESA is a family providing much-needed support through a team approach that attempts to meet every need clients may have. And their commitment to a contract of conduct and goals "is important," Dr. Trilla explains, "because it commits them to a pattern of conduct that is very necessary for their recovery. It is dramatic to see the improvement in the health and appearance of many of the clients after only a few weeks. That's because they are living a more structured life, a more normal life. . ."

The Youth Component is a sentimental favorite of the staff.

"Most of them are dropped off there," says Franco. "They are from broken homes or have other problems. They are brought here so we can save their lives and it sometimes is a matter of life and death."

The staff prides itself on the fact that PROMESA is the largest drug treatment program in the city primarily serving the Puerto Rican and Hispanic community generally, but they also recognize and are humbled by the enormity of the task they face.

As Velásquez expresses it, "The problem is monstrous and we are just a drop in the bucket. What's worse is that we are not growing, although there should be another 10 or 20 PROMESAS. Instead we have barely survived the federal cuts of the past three years. We have lost 93 client slots, but we are still managing to serve."

The federal money that PROMESA receives is currently channeled through the state and is supplemented by client support payments from Medicaid and Social Security. Clients are not charged for services.

Velásquez makes his statement with a tone of quiet resignation, of a perseverance developed after many years of having to do much with little, of having to "make do." But the anger is evident when he talks about the contradictions in Reagan Administration policies.

"The hypocrisy is something. Here we have the First Lady taking on drug abuse as her pet project, doing a national TV campaign urging people to get involved in solving the problem and here is her husband, the President of the United States, cutting back whatever little we have to deal with here in the South Bronx, where we have an epidemic, where it's killing our people . . . Good God!"

But let us listen to Doris, to understand why the PROMESA staff stays with it, why they persevere:

"Since coming here I have continued my education, I've learned that I have a lot of potential . . . I'm finding out that there are a lot of things about being Puerto Rican that I can be proud of . . . I've also found that I don't need drugs to feel good . . . I like being under the influence of just good feelings, and I'm excited about that. I haven't felt so excited in a long time . . ." Now she fights back tears, "I've changed a lot . . . My own mother doesn't even know me any more . . ."

There are some heroic things going on in a place called PROMESA, in a rundown neighborhood called Mount Hope, in a sad and desperate wasteland called the South Bronx.

MAZZOLI COSPONSORS THE TELECOMMUNICATIONS EMPLOYEES' PROTECTION ACT

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add my name as a cosponsor of H.R. 5391, legislation introduced by Representative TIM WIRTH to provide pension benefit protection for the thousands of dedicated communications employees—largely members of the Communications Workers of America—who were employed by the Bell System prior to the Court-ordered breakup.

Under the Court decree thousands upon thousands of workers will have to be transferred to and from Bell companies and AT&T.

H.R. 5391, the Telecommunications Employees' Protection Act, guarantees that employees who move from one company within the Bell System to another company within the system or who move to AT&T are allowed to take their accrued service credit and pension benefits with them regardless of when they move. The Court decree permitted portability only through 1984.

Virtually identical protections were included in H.R. 4102, the Universal Telephone Service Preservation Act of 1983, which passed the House in November 1983. And, Congress has acted on similar protection bills in previous years.

I encourage my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 5391 and I hope it can be quickly enacted into law to insure that communications workers who made this Nation's communications system what it is today—the best in the world—are not hurt through actions of the Court over which they had no control.●

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, Tuesday, May 1, this country will again have the honor and privilege of celebrating National Loyalty Day, a practice that has been going on for nearly three decades since the creation of this special observance in 1958.

It is my fervent hope that all Americans will take this occasion to show their strong feelings for their country by displaying prominently the American flag. I believe that such a show of patriotism is of special importance at this juncture in our history, a time when we are besieged by complex and difficult challenges everywhere we look, at home as well as abroad. A day such as this, when we can step back and remind ourselves about who we are and what our goals are can help provide the inspiration to conquer those challenges.

In my Eighth District of New Jersey, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, adhering to its charter that it shall foster true patriotism, will be in the forefront of this observance, as it has been for nearly 30 years.

I would like to take this opportunity to commend the VFW and its many branches, not just in my district but in the State of New Jersey and the entire Nation, for being instrumental in the creation of National Loyalty Day, and for taking the lead in its celebration.●

AMERICA'S FOREIGN POLICY TOWARD CYPRUS

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, the divergence between the reality and rhetoric in America's foreign policy toward Cyprus must not continue. The tragedy that has struck the people of that island nation has been permitted to linger 10 long years, and I am sorry to report that American policy in the Eastern Mediterranean this last year has greatly exacerbated the situation.

I need not remind my colleagues that almost a decade ago, on July 20, 1974, the Republic of Turkey—using American supplied weapons—invaded the Republic of Cyprus. While the roots of the Cyprus conflict go back to the early 1960's, the invasion was in direct violation of the treaties which established the republic and all norms of international law and conduct.

In the weeks after this catastrophe, when it became obvious that Turkey did not intend to quickly withdraw its troops from the 40 percent of Cyprus which it had occupied, Congress, asserting its constitutional prerogatives, imposed an arms embargo on Turkey. The embargo was imposed not only because the use of American weapons for aggressive purposes was a direct violation of American law, but because we had hoped that the embargo would encourage Turkey to be more forthcoming in negotiating the withdrawal of its troops from the sovereign nation.

After Turkey refused to respond to these efforts, some members of the Executive argued that Turkey would only negotiate after the embargo was lifted. Congress then lifted the embargo in 1978, but Turkey—ignoring numerous U.N. resolutions and world opinion—has yet to return 1 inch of territory to the Cyprus Republic.

The Turkish Cypriots, who administer the area under the control of Turkey, have failed to offer any substantive proposals concerning either the return of territory or the administration of a new government.

I would have expected that the Reagan administration, which has been so vocal concerning the need to strengthen NATO and to promote stability in the Middle East, would have told the Turks that the occupation of Cyprus cannot continue. The President might have further informed Turkey that American weapons should not be stationed against either Greece or Cyprus, but against the Soviet Union. But, in spite of the fact that recent Turkish actions have aggravated the situation in the Eastern Mediterranean, the Reagan administration proposed increasing aid to Turkey to almost $1 billion.

In November the Turkish Cypriots attempted to establish a separate state in the occupied territory and received immediate diplomatic recognition from the Republic of Turkey. In April, the secessionist state and Turkey exchanged diplomatic representatives, and the Turkish Cypriots have taken further steps to consolidate their control over 40 percent of Cyprus, even though they constitute only 18 percent of the population.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee recently voted to condition $215 million in military grant aid to Turkey upon the return of the ghost town of Varosha to the Government of Cyprus. This area could resettle approximately 50,000 refugees and be a first step toward a solution. I hope that such conditions become a part of the foreign aid bill this year. The world must come to understand that the United States will not support aggression by any nation, and that American aid is provided to support American objectives and principles.

For 10 years Turkey has failed to understand this message. I urge my colleagues to make our principled stand loud and clear. The American people, the people of Cyprus, and people everywhere are ready to hear it.●

A TRIBUTE TO THE SECOND MARINE DIVISION

HON. AUSTIN J. MURPHY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest pride and admiration that I rise today to take note of the outstanding service that the men of the 2d Marine Division have given to our country. With the founding of the division on February 1, 1941, these men engaged in some of the fiercest battles of World War II, including Tarawa, Guadalcanal, Saipan, and Okinawa.

After the war, the 2d Division served a brief deployment as an occupational force in Japan, and in 1946, was transferred to Camp Lejeune. In 1948, battalion-sized units of the 2d Division began regular deployment in the Mediterranean. During the Korean conflict, this combat-ready infantry division was deployed to the Far East. Later in this decade, it played a key role in the evacuation of American citizens during the Israeli-Egyptian war of 1956 and was the force called upon in 1958 to prevent civil war in Lebanon.

During the Cuban missile crisis, President Kennedy again summoned the 2d Marine Division for duty and they remained in the Caribbean until December 1962. The 2d Division returned to the Caribbean in 1965 in order to prevent civil war in the Dominican Republic.

Most recently, the 2d Marine Division was deployed in response to a crisis situation in Lebanon. On August 15, 1983, President Reagan directed the 32d Marine Amphibious Unit to become part of the multinational peacekeeping force in Beirut. This unit, as well as other 2d Division Marine amphibious units served in Lebanon with unprecedented dedication and valor until they were redeployed to ships off the coast of Beirut in February 1984.

Too often our fellow citizens forget the price that our combat forces have paid for freedom. For the 2d Marine Division, that price has often been the ultimate sacrifice. These modern day patriots have often paid this price quietly and with little recognition. Let us all take a few moments to recall their dedication to freedom and liberty and let us give them the respect, admiration, and applause that they deserve.●

CLOSING AN UNINTENDED LOOPHOLE IN THE MARRIAGE DEDUCTION

HON. JOHN F. SEIBERLING

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, in 1981 Congress took action to eliminate the so-called marriage penalty, that is, the tax penalty incurred by married couples. Under current law, married couples filing joint returns are entitled to deduct 10 percent of the lower paid spouse's qualifying income, on a maximum base amount of $30,000, from gross income for tax purposes.

I strongly supported the elimination of the marriage penalty. However, downturns in the economy have revealed that there is a major loophole in the marriage deduction. This loophole is adversely affecting those who can least afford it—the Nation's unemployed, who cannot count as income their unemployment compensation for purposes of determining their marriage deduction. This unintended penalty is made even worse by the fact that, under certain circumstances, unemployment compensation is now subject to taxation.

Under current law, a two-earner married couple filing a joint return would be able to deduct 10 percent of the lower earning spouse's income. If the lower earning spouse loses his or her job, and then received unemployment compensation, the couple would only be able to deduct 10 percent of that portion of the unemployed spouse's income which is earned—not the unemployment compensation, even though the unemployment compensation may ultimately be taxed under another provision of law. This is grossly unfair, and needlessly imposes an additional tax burden on the Nation's unemployed.

In order to rectify this inequity, I have introduced legislation which amends the Tax Code to provide that, for purposes of determining the marriage deduction only, unemployment compensation will be counted as earned income, to the extent it is taxed. Under current law, unemployment compensation for a married couple filing jointly—the criterion for taking the marriage deduction—is taxed on one-half the excess of $18,000 in adjusted gross income. My bill would allow only that portion of unemployment compensation which is taxed to be counted toward the marriage deduction. This would result in a very modest increase in the marriage deduction which the couple would be able to take.

Mr. Speaker, enactment of my bill would mean a great deal to the Nation's unemployed, and would eliminate an absolutely unfair penalty. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.●

TRIBUTE TO RALPH HAMILTON

HON. JOHN McCAIN

OF ARIZONA

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleagues to join me in saluting a man who, for the past 15 years, has been a strong and compassionate advocate for the needs of veterans.

On April 27, Mr. Ralph Hamilton completed 5 years as team leader of the veterans center in Phoenix, AZ. His distinguished accomplishments there followed 10 years of dedicated service to Wisconsin veterans. This remarkable man demonstrated unique skills and extraordinary commitment to our country. His diligence, integrity, and special insights helped make the Phoenix Vet Center a model for all veterans programs across the country.

Mr. Hamilton was not driven in his work by a desire for personal recognition, but by a genuine concern for the needs of veterans. Like those to whom he devoted so many hours, Ralph Hamilton put his country first and his personal life second.

Having set an outstanding example for those who will follow him, Ralph Hamilton will be sorely missed at the Phoenix Vet Center. I thank him and salute him for his outstanding efforts.●

HAMILTON BOWSER AND SAMUEL SALTER HONORED BY SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I recognize two of my constituents who will be honored next week by the U.S. Small Business Administration.

Hamilton Bowser and Samuel Salter II, both of East Orange, NJ, will receive awards during Small Business Week, hosted by the SBA here in Washington May 8–10. Mr. Bowser is to be honored as "Small Business Minority Advocate of the Year," and Mr. Salter will receive the award for the "Small Business Young Entrepreneur."

Hamilton Bowser is the president of Evanbow Construction Co. in East Orange. He has been an effective and influential advocate for the cause of minority entrepreneurship both in New Jersey and around the country. He has played an especially significant role in helping minority-owned businesses obtain contracts with the Federal Government. Mr. Bowser is one of the founders of the New Jersey United Minority Business Brain Trust, and conducts monthly seminars for small businesspeople in New Jersey. I am extremely pleased that Mr. Bowser's outstanding support of minority business, as well as his selfless assistance to others, is being recognized by the SBA with this prestigious award.

Mr. Salter, the recipient of the Young Entrepreneur of the Year Award, is living proof of the resourcesfulness and drive flourishing in our younger generation. At the age of 19, Mr. Salter has already established himself as a successful businessman, as the president and founder of Continational Financial Corp., which packages and services around $1 million in loans each month.

Mr. Salter's business career began as a bookkeeper in his father's auto repair shop when he was 13 years old. Two years later a summer job found him selling real estate. This fostered an interest in the field of venture capital and Mr. Salter set about learning everything he could about this area.

Shorty after his 16th birthday, with $500 in savings, Mr. Salter established his new company. Within 2 years the company grew to the point where he now has processed over 275 loans, and he has offices in East Orange and Wall Street. Currently enrolled in Rutgers University where he is earning his MBA degree in finance, Mr. Salter will certainly be someone we will hear about in the years to come.

I offer my best wishes to both Mr. Salter and Mr. Bowser. They are certainly deserving of these awards, and I know that they will continue to serve our community with great distinction.●

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE FRANK CHURCH

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 25, 1984

● Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in this House in mourning the death of Frank Church, a friend, a statesman, and certainly among the most eloquent of all who have ever served in this Congress.

I suppose that of all the ways I shall remember Frank Church, the one that will stand out in my mind will be his role as conscience of the Senate.

All of us in public service have seen the seductiveness of the easy path, the popular stand, the politically expedient. Frank Church never buckled to any of them.

For 24 years, Frank Church served this country and his native Idaho. As a Senator, he addressed the major foreign policy issues of his time with reason, foresight, thoughtfulness, and always with a very keen appreciation for the lessons of history.

As our Nation became gradually bogged down in Vietnam, Frank Church was among the earliest voices cautioning that we were headed toward disaster. It was not a popular stand at the time, and he was, in many quarters, vilified for it. Time proved him right—from the start.

"No nation, not even our own, possesses an arsenal so large or a treasury so rich as to damp down the fires of smoldering revolution throughout the whole awakening world," were Frank Church's words about Vietnam in 1966.

His beliefs were steadfast, and he echoed similar sentiment in his last public writing, published in the Washington Post on March 11, 1984, as he cautioned his countrymen to not be led into another folly in Central America. The words of that message, already published in full in this RECORD by several colleagues, are worth heeding.

I knew Frank also as a man concerned about the land, and his role in the passage of the Wilderness Act of 1974 was not unimportant. Legislation that Frank introduced in 1967 established the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System, which now includes miles and miles of some of this country's most beautiful waterways. As chairman of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, it was my pleasure to help Frank enact the Hell's Canyon National Recreation Area bill in 1978, as well as the Central Idaho Wilderness Act of 1980.

The Idaho bill added Frank's name to the wilderness area that surrounds the "River of No Return"—a fitting tribute to his concern and work on behalf of the American conservation effort.

Frank and I became rivals in 1976, as we both campaigned for our party's Presidential nomination. In such contests, emotions can become badly frayed and a sharp exchange in the heat of a moment can turn to a lifetime of regret. But Frank did not let that happen to his campaign. He campaigned on the issues. He was never anything less that a gentleman. When the battle ended, we remained friends.

Foreign affairs, of course, was Frank's passion, and he leaves an indelible mark in that arena. His examination of the Central Intelligence Agency remains as a model. Thanks to the efforts of Frank Church, the CIA was brought into a partnership with the Congress, and the congressional intelligence committees were established. The impact of his work in that field remains as current as the evening news.

Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in extending sympathy to Bethine, Forrest, Amy, and Chase Church.

Frank Church was my friend. I will miss him.●

WHAT THE PAST SHOULD TEACH US IN CENTRAL AMERICA

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. PHILIP M. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, as George Santayana wrote in 1906, "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it." In spite of this wise admonition, it seems that many of us have an amazingly poor memory of events that happened just over two decades ago and again a mere 5 years ago. Of course, I am referring to the Communist takeover of Cuba and the more recent Communist victory in Nicaragua.

These two incidents should have left no doubt in the minds of sincere observers as to the intentions of terrorist movements throughout the region. In spite of their claims to widespread popular support and their proclaimed goals of human rights, justice, and national liberation, these movements are nothing more than fronts that are set up, financed, and supplied by the Soviets and their surrogates. Shortly after taking power, these true intentions become painfully obvious.

Why then do so many people continue to call the Sandinista regime progressive rather than Communist? Why are the terrorists in El Salvador still called freedom fighters and agrarian reformers? Perhaps it is ignorance; or it may be embarrassment. It may even be that some hope that by calling these groups by such euphemistic names they will miraculously convert themselves into innocuous liberators and progressives.

As Ambassador J. William Middendorf II states in the following editorial, all this doubletalk is not new; Castro was lauded as a reformer and liberator when he first came to power. He himself made some remarkably democratic and encouraging statements in the beginning. But he soon betrayed his real plans for Cuba.

The same is now happening in Nicaragua. All this talk about "free elections" and "human rights" is greeted in this country as conclusive evidence of the Sandinista's purposes. Somehow, all I feel is an acute sense of déjà vu. I only hope that this time around we will have learned our history lessons. Let us not be taken in again.

[From the Washington Times, Apr. 9, 1984]

NICARAGUAN ELECTIONS AND A SENSE OF DÉJÀ VU

(By J. William Middendorf)

On Feb. 21, Sandinista Junta Coordinator Daniel Ortega announced that elections for president, vice president, and a constituent assembly would be held in Nicaragua on Nov. 4, 1984. The announcement appears to be one belated step toward meeting the electoral portion of the commitments the Sandinistas made to the Organization of American States 4½ years ago. However, many important questions remain about the nature of the elections the Nicaraguan government contemplates. These questions take on increasing relevance if we look at the history of elections and pluralism in other Marxist-oriented states.

I often reflect on how, as one with a business in Cuba in the late 1950s, I was initially encouraged by Fidel Castro's public statements. At that time he seemed to embody the hopes of most Cubans—and a lot of foreigners—for a return to democratic government and a purge of the graft and corruption of President Fulgensio Batista's regime. I remember some of the statements Castro made shortly after taking power that buoyed these expectations.

On April 2, 1959, before Cuba's CMQ Television Station, Mr. Castro also asserted: "When one newspaper is closed down, no newspaper can feel safe; when one man is persecuted for his political ideas, no one can feel safe." And two weeks later speaking before the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Mr. Castro declared: "I am not a communist. I do not think communism has any chance of success in Cuba."

I and many other U.S. businessmen, who saw our businesses illegally expropriated by Mr. Castro, learned the hard way the true nature of the Cuban revolution. So did the Cuban people—over one million of whom chose to flee Castro's tyranny.

I felt a sense of deja vu when in July 1979, we heard promises nearly identical to those of Fidel Castro when the Sandinistas took over with Cuban assistance in Nicaragua. Like Mr. Castro, they promised much. In a letter that month to the OAS secretary general, for distribution to all OAS member countries, they pledged "to establish full respect for human rights . . . enforce civil justice, and to call Nicaraguans to the first free elections that our country will have in the century.".

Instead, we have watched with deepening concern as Nicaragua has moved away from its pledges of political pluralism toward a repressive, one-party state. Business and union leaders have been jailed, strikes outlawed, the press and religious groups have been attacked, and much of the large Miskito Indian population uprooted.

Since 1979, the Sandinistas have moved to consolidate their domination over Nicaragua. They have built a military establishment five times the size of Somoza's notorious National Guard. They also have developed close military ties to Cuba and the Soviet Union, including thousands of advisers and a sophisticated cooperative effort to destabilize El Salvador and other neighboring governments.

In recent months, the Sandinistas have appeared to soften their stance. They agreed formally to the 21 objectives of the Contadora process—objectives that include democratization, arms control, an end to support for subversion, and gradual withdrawal of foreign military and security advisers.

Late last year, the Sandinistas hinted they were reducing their ties to Cuba and to the Salvadoran guerrillas. They also made overtures to some of their internal opposition.

For instance, Nicaragua claimed it was reducing the Cuban presence. But, as Interior Minister Borge himself admitted publicly, only normal, year-end rotations of teachers were involved. Nicaragua had implied it was forcing the Salvadoran FMLN/FDR out of Managua. Although a few FDR leaders did leave Nicaragua, the FMLN's sophisticated command and control headquarters and infrastructure remain intact and operating in Nicaragua.

Nicaragua claimed it was offering a generous amnesty to the Miskito Indians. Yet, just before Christmas, another 1,200 Miskito men, women and children chose to flee under hostile conditions into Honduras rather than suffer continued Sandinista repression.

The Sandinista commitment to elections, too, appears to be heavily conditioned. Sandinista leaders have said there will not be "bourgeois" elections, and Daniel Ortega on Dec. 24, 1981, said, "elections will not be to contest power but rather to strengthen the revolution."

Last month, Carlos Nunez, president of the Council of State, announced that the new electoral law will bar candidates of parties advocating a reversal of the Sandinista revolution. The opposition parties are rightly concerned that at a minimum they must have access to the media if the 1985 elections are to have any meaning. The continuation of the current state-of-emergency itself imposes limitations on the media and political activity. The opposition also has called for an end to Sandinista attacks upon the church and independent labor. These are issues which are vital to any free election process.

We and the rest of the world are watching with intense interest to see whether the Sandinistas, to consolidate their power and to gain international credibility, are in fact using the same public-relations tactics so successfully employed by Fidel Castro in 1959 and before him by Lenin.

It is often forgotten that before taking power in 1917, Lenin and the Bolsheviks not only called for, but insisted upon, elections for a constituent assembly leading to a "democratic" government. Yet, once in power, the Bolsheviks simply disbanded the constituent assembly and proceeded to establish one of the most ruthless regimes in the history of mankind.●

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

HON. JOSEPH D. EARLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1984

● Mr. EARLY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity on this special day to join Representatives COELHO, PASHAYAN, and WAXMAN along with my other friends and colleagues and all Americans to commemorate the Armenian Genocide. This horrific occurrence in world history is one that we must constantly disclose and engrain in our memories for two important reasons: To mourn the lives of those that were brutally taken and to insure that the barbaric extermination of the Armenian race or any race or group of people, is always remembered, but never repeated.

Throughout the late 19th and early 20th century the Armenians were persecuted, massacred, and driven from their homeland by the Ottoman Turks. Approximately 2,500,000 Armenian citizens resided throughout the Ottoman Empire when World War I began. From 1915 to 1923, 1,500,000 Armenians were brutally slain while 500,000 others attempted to escape from their ancestral homeland of 3,000 years. The Edict of Deportation, which was formally promulgated by the Turkish Government on May 27, 1915, is but one piece of evidence substantiating the systematic deportation and extermination of almost an entire people. In fear of their lives, the Armenians were forced to flee and scatter north across the Turkish border to Russia, south into the Arab countries, and to Europe and the United States. Many died of starvation, disease, and exposure or were murdered while attempting to leave the Ottoman Empire. Clearly, there are many well-documented accounts of this cold-blooded massacre in our National Archives, in libraries around the world, and most importantly, in the minds and hearts of those who lost their families and homeland in this brutal purge.

There appears to be some controversy, however, about documentation and the fact that some Turkish lives may have been lost in this alleged "civil war." These controversies, I believe, only cloud the real issue at hand; the deliberate annihilation of almost an entire race. German and Nazi lives were lost during World War II but clearly this did not sanction, warrant, or does not lessen the impact and horror of the extermination of 8 million Jews. Germany today will acknowledge and attest to that fact. An essential and vital point, that we must all remember, is that a series of socio-economic and political events in Turkey and throughout Europe in the late 1800's and early 1900's led a people and government to completely turn on and massacre an innocent faction of their own population as a scapegoat for extraneous and unrelated problems and events. I believe we must commemorate the Armenian Genocide and all genocides this year and every year so that such misunderstanding and violations against an entire people will never occur again. The purpose of our expression here today is not to punish or to seek revenge on a present-day government or people for what occurred 69 years ago. If that was our purpose, then none of us have really learned from the past. The intent of our assembly here today is to acknowledge and confirm the Armenian Genocide here in the United States, in Turkey and throughout the world, to mourn the lives of those who were lost, and to learn from past events.

The final purpose of my expression here today is to praise all Armenian-Americans and all people of Armenian dissent throughout the world for their courage, perseverance and the continuation of their cultural beliefs and strong faith. I am proud to know many Armenian-Americans personally as friends, neighbors, colleagues, and copatriots and I hold nothing but admiration and praise for their unbending spirit and heroic character. I look forward to the day when myself and all those who come to Washington may visit the U.S. Holocaust Memorial where the 1915-23 Genocide of the Armenian citizens of the Ottoman Turkish Empire will be prominently displayed.●

PROFESSOR TRIBE ON THE EQUAL ACCESS ACT AND THE CONSTITUTION

HON. DON BONKER

OF WASHINGTON

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, the Equal Access Act—which would prohibit discrimination against extracurricular student religious groups—is designed to protect public high school students' free speech rights without violating the separation of church and state as proscribed by the establishment clause of the Constitution.

Hearings before the Education and Labor Committee established that many school administrators have banned any form of student religious activity on campus—even when there is no State involvement—rather than risk expensive litigation. Such discrimination against religious speech constitutes a serious abridgment of students' first amendment rights and relegates religious speech to second class status. The Supreme Court, in Widmar against Vincent, recently held that, at the postsecondary level, such discrimination is unconstitutional and that State colleges must provide equal access for student religious groups. Unfortunately the Court did not rule on the applicability of the equal access doctrine to public secondary schools. The Equal Access Act attempts to clear up the confusion regarding the role of religious speech in schools by extending the Widmar holding to secondary schools.

Since these constitutional issues have been raised, I thought my colleagues would be interested in a scholarly analysis of the Equal Access Act by a noted constitutional authority. Reprinted below is the testimony of Prof. Laurence Tribe of the Harvard Law School before the House Education and Labor Committee. Please note that H.R. 4996 was reported by the committee as a clean bill, H.R. 5345.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF LAURENCE H. TRIBE

I am honored to appear before this Subcommittee to express my views on the constitutional implications of H.R. 4996. Although I am the Tyler Professor of Constitutional Law at Harvard Law School, I appear on behalf of no institution or group but am here solely in my capacity as a student of constitutional law and a scholar in the field. In the brief discussion that follows, I set forth my reasons for concluding that H.R. 4996 is entirely constitutional

1. The ultimate aims of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment are two: to assure that the church not be armed with the governmental powers of sword or purse, and that government not be wrapped in the mantle of infallibility that comes from identification with the divine—a mantle that makes it possible for government to denounce its critics as enemies of the Almighty. The injunction that one render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's presupposes a society in which God's earthly messengers may not borrow Ceasar's secular powers—and in which Caesar's Roman Empire is not permitted to become the Holy Roman Empire.

2. It is for this fundamental reason that churches must be denied the ability to use public coercion to sponsor official prayers in public elementary or secondary schools—organized prayers that, however "voluntary" in theory are likely to be mandatory in fact, given the legal compulsion that collects children in the public school in the first place, and the combination of official ceremony and peer pressure that makes publicly organized and sanctioned religious sessions in any such setting inherently coercive.

3. Such official school prayer thus violates the Free Exercise of Religion Clause as well as both of the core commands of the Establishment Clause—that government's heavy hand not be placed at the disposal of any religion, and that no religions' sanctifying aura be used to create a halo of spiritual authority around the state or its schools.

4. No Free Exercise Clause violation, and neither of these Establishment Clause concerns, are present where, in the language of Section 3 of H.R. 4996, "non-school-sponsored groups of students . . . meet" to discuss religion, or indeed to pray, on public secondary school premises where:

"(1) the meeting is voluntary and student initiated,

"(2) there is no sponsorship of the meeting by the school, government, or its agents or employees, and

"(3) no activity which is in and of itself unlawful is permitted."

5. Indeed, for public school authorities, or the local and state agencies responsible for public school policies and practices, "to discriminate on the basis of the religious content of the speech at such meetings"—to quote again the language of H.R. 4996—would, in my view, constitute a violation of the right to free speech and free exercise of religion of the students involved. See Widmar v. Vincent, 454 U.S. 263, 272 n.11 (1981) (citing section 14-6 of L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law (1978)). I therefore have no doubt that Congress has the constitutional authority—and may even have a real if imperfectly enforceable constitutional duty—to withhold federally appropriated funds from any such authorities or agencies that do discriminate in this manner.

6. It follows that H.R. 4996, which would withhold federal funds on precisely this basis, is a constitutionally permissible exercise of Congress' broad spending power—at least when coupled with the proviso of Section 4 that:

"Nothing in this Act shall be construed to permit the United States or any State or political subdivision thereof to—

"(1) influence the form or content of any prayer or other religious activity,

"(2) require any person to participate in prayer or other religious activity, or

"(3) expend public funds beyond the cost of providing the meeting space for student initiated meetings."

7. The text of H.R. 4996 assures that, should student prayers be structured or led in such a way as to make non-participants feel pressured to attend or penalized for non-attendance, the statute's equal-access guarantee would cease to apply. For such coercion of religion in public education "is in and of itself unlawful," and thus runs afoul of Section 3(3), and serves to "require (a) person to participate in prayer," and thus runs afoul of Section 4(2). Those who are concerned that students who reasonably feel coerced into religious activity in a public school might somehow be denied access to otherwise available judicial relief by H.R. 4996 simply misunderstand the language and structure of that bill—and overlook the fact that, in the absence of the bill, some students, at least, might well feel coerced into avoiding even wholly voluntary, student-initiated and student-led religious observance.

8. H.R. 4996 draws added support from Congress' broad authority, under Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment, to protect First Amendment rights from abridgment at the hands of state and local officials and agents. Nor do I think anything in the First Amendment, or in its underlying policies, is even arguably violated by H.R. 4996. Accordingly, my view as a constitutional scholar, teacher, and lawyer is that Congress would be acting in a constitutionally sound manner were it to enact this measure.

9. If H.R. 4996 is to be opposed on any principled basis, it must be opposed on the ground that even voluntary prayer may not take place in our public schools—a proposition that the proponents of a prayer amendment to the Constitution have incorrectly and irresponsibly attributed to decisions of the United States Supreme Court. Since that proposition is demonstrably false, it seems entirely appropriate that Congress codify its repudiation in a statute assuring that federal funds not subsidize discrimination against students who wish to exercise their First Amendment rights to pray, or to engage in other non-coercive religious activities, in a school setting.●

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE CORPS UNRESPONSIVE TO URBAN POOR

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about the inequitable distribution of health care in this country and would like to focus more attention on the National Health Service Corps (NHSC), a Federal program which was designed to provide medical assistance to traditionally unserved communities. As the following New York Times article of April 27, 1984, shows, recent policy changes within this agency have had a disproportionately negative impact on inner city areas. The administrators of the Corps are citing a physician diffusion theory to justify the removal of federally funded doctors from urban clinics. This theory is based on the erroneous assumption that because of record numbers of medical school graduates, the surplus physicians will drift into poor urban neighborhoods. At a time when infant mortality is on the rise in over 30 cities, and black infants die at twice the rate of white infants, I must take issue with the change in physician assignment.

I would like to share the New York Times article, with the hope that interest in the National Health Service Corps can be engendered among my colleagues. It is imperative that we work together to insure adequate and accessible health care for all of our constituents.

NEW YORK, NEW JERSEY, CONNECTICUT: 11 NEEDY AREAS OF CITY LOSING AID FOR DOCTORS

(By Ronald Sullivan)

At least 11 poor areas of New York City will no longer get federally sponsored physicians because the Reagan Administration has decided to shift such doctors from urban to rural areas, Federal and state health officials said yesterday.

Physicians already serving poor areas of the city will not be transferred, but no more will be sent to the 11 neighborhoods that have been dropped from the Federal Government's list of medically underserved areas.

There are 140 such doctors in New York City, serving two to four years in the National Health Service Corps program in return for scholarship aid they got from the Government. The new policy, Federal health officials said, will ultimately reduce that number by more than 20 percent as doctors who have served their obligation are not replaced.

Federal officials said the shift was designed to send doctors where there was the greatest need. But state health officials said the shift jeopardized health care for the poor in the cities.

MORE AREAS MAY BE DROPPED

The 11 areas—nearly one-third of the 34 areas in the city that were on the Federal list—were dropped beginning last August, and state health officials said 8 more areas in the South Bronx, as well as parts of West Harlem, could lose their designation as health-manpower shortage areas.

Thus far, the officials said, the hardest hit has been South Jamaica, Queens, where two areas have been "de-designated." Other areas that have lost their designations include parts of the South Williamsburg, Bushwick and Red Hook sections of Brooklyn, the Hunts Point and northeast sections of the Bronx and the Lower West Side of Manhattan.

Dr. Kennethy Moritsugu, the director of the corps, said the de-designations were the result of a shift seeking to restore the corps to its original mission of providing doctors to remote rural areas of the country.

Raymond Porfilio, a regional official of the United States Public Health Service, said, "Some areas are going to lose corps doctors, although the situation may not be as adverse as it looks."

For example, he said, parts of the areas losing their designation were absorbed by newly designated shortage areas.

To qualify as medically underserved, an area must produce statistical proof that it has less than one doctor for every 3,500 people. According to state health officials, such evidence is sometimes extremely difficult to gather, particularly in sections of the South Bronx that have burned out buildings and highly transient populations.

"We see less medical need in the Bronx then we saw before," said Howard Stambler, the director of the office of Data Analysis and management in the Bureau of Health Professions of the United States Public Health Service.

Dr. Katherine Lobach, the director of a comprehensive health care center at 1175 Morris Avenue in the East Bronx and the head of a group of 11 health-care centers in the South Bronx, disagreed. "We could lose 8 to 12 corps doctors who want to serve here," she said. "Their loss would just be one more blow to our efforts to provide quality care to patients here who otherwise have no way of getting it."

In Harlem, Dr. Paul Reagan, medical director of the Sydenham Neighborhood Family Health Care Center on West 125th Street, said that his area might be dropped as a shortage area and that any loss of corps doctors "would be a very serious blow."

All told, 64 of New York State's 104 health-manpower shortage areas have lost their designations, virtually all of them in urban areas, said David Abernethy, a deputy state health commissioner.

The loss of designation, he said, means that those areas no longer qualify for the services of National Health Corps physicians and other federally sponsored health care professionals such as dentists and nurses. "It seriously jeopardizes the health care of those areas that lose it," he said.

In 1972, when the corps was established, 95 percent of its doctors were assigned to rural sections of the country. However, an urban shift was ordered by the Carter Administration in 1978, and a roughly equal balance between urban and rural areas was achieved within three years. But the corps' original rural character was re-established by the Reagan Administration in 1982. Its annual budget is $91 million.

Dr. Moritsugu, the corps director, said the urban-to-rural shift would not have any immediate adverse effect on New York City. In fact, he said, the city's complement of 191 corps personnel in 1983 was increased to 218 in 1984, including 140 doctors. But he declined to say whether there would be any attrition next year.

According to Dr. Moritsugu, the loss of physicians would be compensated for by what Federal officials termed "defusion"—that is, doctors concentrated in wealthier city neigborhoods and suburbs would be persuaded to serve poor communities, or patients from those communities would develop new access to physicians outside their immediate neighborhoods.

"We are attempting to shift doctors where there is the greatest need, and where patients have no access to medical care," he said.

But state health officials described defusion as the equivalent of the Reagan Administration's "trickle down" economic theory, which they said did not work economically and would not work medically.

While sections of New York City—and Manhattan in particular—have more physicians than state and Federal health officials think are necessary, the state officials said a majority of them were specialists and not the kind of basic primary-care doctors needed in poor neighborhoods. Most of the corps doctors work in health-care centers and clinics.

About 500 medical students and young physicians in hospital residency programs who signed up for corps service in return for Federal subsidies for medical school and who anticipated serving the urban poor contended in a statement that the rural shift was a reflection of the Administration's conservative policies that would cost cities medical care.

The dissident physicians have formed an organization to oppose the rural shift and are resisting corps assignments away from cities. As a result, an increasing number of doctors face financial penalties that equal three times what they borrowed for medical school, with high interest penalties added.

The organization asserts that the Administration is trying to decimate the corps by refusing to commission obligated doctors with the rank and salary given to Public Health Service doctors. Instead, they said, most of the doctors are offered only the "private practice" option, which means they are paid by local health agencies and thus lose the professional and financial security of a Government commission.

For example, Mr. Abernethy said two-thirds of the corps doctors in New York held commissions before 1982, while only one-third had them now.

However, Dr. Moritsugu said there were "no politics involved in the rural shift" or in cutting down on corps commissions. He said 47 percent of the corps' 2,765 physicians were assigned to cities.

Federal health officials said increased use of the private-practice option was an effort to cut the Federal health budget and encourage private enterprise.●

CUBA'S ACTIVE ROLE IN DRUG TRAFFICKING TO THE UNITED STATES

HON. TOM LEWIS OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an article on the front page of today's Wall Street Journal entitled "Havana Haven—Smugglers of Drugs From Colombia to United States Are Protected by Cuba."

The article states that while Cuba maintains an outwardly tough posture on drug trafficking, the Government is secretly aiding in the trafficking of illegal drugs into the United States. In return, Cuba receives hard currency, which it uses to purchase arms, which are then smuggled to guerrillas in Latin America. High-level Cuban officials are directly involved and these activities are said to be sanctioned by Castro himself.

I urge my colleagues to read the article and join with me in cosponsoring the two resolutions I introduced, House Concurrent Resolutions Nos. 284 and 285, requesting the President to bring before the United Nations and the Organization of American States the issue of Cuba's involvement in drug dealing, smuggling, and trafficking in the Western Hemisphere.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Apr. 30, 1984]

HAVANA HAVEN—SMUGGLERS OF DRUGS FROM COLOMBIA TO UNITED STATES ARE PROTECTED BY CUBA

(By Stanley Penn and Edward T. Pound)

The drug business is helping Cuba foment revolution in Latin America.

While maintaining an outwardly tough posture toward drug smugglers, the Cuban government has secretly singled out a few for special favors. These selected traffickers have been permitted to use Cuban waters as a haven from the U.S. Coast Guard while transhipping narcotics to the U.S. from Colombia.

In return, Cuba gets scarce hard currency—as much as $500,000 per shipment, by some estimates. It uses some of this money to buy arms that are secretly ferried by the drug smugglers to guerrillas in Latin America.

This arrangement, said to be sanctioned by Fidel Castro himself, has been detailed by U.S. drug investigators and intelligence specialists, as well as by drug runners who have given first-hand testimony of their activities to lawmen in the U.S. and Mexico.

OFFICIAL CONCERN

"There's evidence of a considerable amount of drug trafficking that transits through Cuba by water and air," says Frank V. Monastero, assistant administrator of the federal Drug Enforcement Administration. Noting that the smugglers sometimes use Cuban government facilities, Mr. Monastero adds: "If the Cuban government wanted to cease that activity, they could put a stop to it."

Drug agents don't think Cuba operates its own drug-smuggling network. Rather, they say, Cuba permits certain traffickers safe passage and allows large "mother ships" laden with drugs from Colombia to lay over and refuel in Cuba. This allows the mother ships to transfer their illicit cargo to smaller, faster boats for delivery to Florida.

The Cuban government's ties to drug smuggling were discussed two years ago during hearings by a Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. Jeremiah A. Denton of Alabama. Federal lawmen gave Senate panels additional information last year and in closed session last month.

A criminal trial last year in Miami provided still more evidence. Four Cuban government officials were among those charged with conspiring to permit Cuba to be used as a loading station for U.S.-bound drug vessels during 1980 and 1981. Six people were convicted or pleaded guilty. The Cuban officials, including a former Cuban ambassador to Colombia and a vice admiral who belonged to the Cuban Communist Party's central committee, failed to appear at the trial and are considered fugitives, according to the U.S. Justice Department.

Evidence presented at the trial has convinced Tom Boyatt, a former U.S. ambassador to Colombia, of the Cuban government's complicity. "When you have a Cuban ambassador and a Cuban admiral involved" he says, "you don't need further evidence that it's a matter of national policy."

Indicted with the Cuban officials was Jaime Guillot-Lara, a 38-year-old Colombian charged with using Cuban facilities to help transport large quantities of marijuana and Quaalude tablets in the U.S. The U.S. government has never apprehended Mr. Guillot-Lara, but in November 1981, he was imprisoned in Mexico for using false identity papers.

Mr. Guillot-Lara admitted shipping arms to Colombia's Cuban-backed M-19 terrorist group, according to a State Department official reporting to a Senate subcommittee. Mr. Guillot-Lara said that funds for the arms shipments were furnished by Cuban embassies in Mexico and Colombia. He was freed by Mexico in 1982, but the Mexican government refused a U.S. request for his extradition. His current whereabouts aren't known.

Mr. Guillot-Lara apparently entered the drug business in 1976. By the U.S. government's estimate, his 15-member gang shipped some 2.5 million pounds of marijuana, 80 pounds of cocaine and 25 million Quaaludes to the U.S. between 1977 and 1981.

THE M-19 CONNECTION

In 1980, Mr. Guillot-Lara allegedly arranged to receive Cuban assistance with those shipments and agreed to transport arms to M-19. Mr. Guillot-Lara was known to M-19 through his longtime acquaintance with Jaime Bateman, a Colombian who was an M-19 leader until his death in a plane crash in 1982.

Mr. Guillot-Lara is known to have purchased Uzi submachine guns, pistols and AR-15 rifles from a Miami arms dealer. According to State Department reports, the arms he purchased typically were ferried to Colombia, where his boat picked up drugs for delivery to the U.S.

In October 1981, for example, Mr. Guillot-Lara's boat, Zar De Honduras, received arms from a ship off the coast of Panama. The arms—550 FAL rifles worth at least $500 apiece and 90,000 cartridges—were delivered to a port on Colombia's northeast coast and taken to a clandestine airport nearby. After 5,000 pounds of marijuana bound for the U.S. were stowed on board the ship, the weapons were flown to an M-19 base in Caqueta province, a large cocaine-producing area in southern Colombia.

M-19 and other Colombian insurgents profit from narcotics by taxing drug growers and by guarding traffickers' airstrips and cocaine-processing laboratories. Colombia's defense minister, Gustavo Matamoros, recently attacked the "alliance" between drug runners and guerrillas. He claimed that planes leave Colombia with cocaine and return with weapons originating in Cuba.

Colombia broke ties with Cuba in 1981, following the capture of some M-19 terrorists who admitted they had been trained and outfitted in Cuba. Just last month, 100 M-19 insurgents, armed with submachine guns and hand grenades, battled a Colombian army garrison in Florencia, the capital of Caqueta province. The army drove off the guerrillas, but not before they had seized the local jail and freed 125 prisoners.

Cuba stoutly denies involvement with drug smugglers. "We have been trying to help in control of the drug traffic," says a Cuban government press officer in Washington. "Every plane, every ship or yacht which we catch in our waters or in our air space, we have detained." Terming the charges that Cuba helps drug smugglers "unfounded," he says that at any given time, 15 to 30 American traffickers are in Cuban jails. "We have been freeing some of them at the request of some [U.S.] congressman as a goodwill gesture," he adds.

By denying its ties to dope runners, diplomats say, Cuba hopes to avoid antagonizing other Hispanic governments. "The Cubans are interested in expanding regular diplomatic relations with Latin America," a U.S. State Department official says, "and they'd like to present at least a plausible denial that they're involved in subverting these governments."

A MIAMI SUSPECT

Jose Alvero-Cruz, a Miami beauty parlor operator, is among those suspected of using Cuba to smuggle drugs to the U.S. According to a secret 1982 Drug Enforcement Administration report, an informant disclosed that Mr. Alvero-Cruz met with Fidel Castro, and during the meeting they arranged for a fishing vessel, the Santa Marta, to use a secluded harbor on Cuba's southern coast.

"The vessel would contain 50 tons of marijuana and a large quantity of cocaine," the report stated. "Arrangements were made from Cuba to have the Santa Marta leave port and meet the offload boats at sea."

Mr. Alvero-Cruz, who took part in the abortive, U.S.-sponsored Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba in 1961, recently began a 10-year prison sentence for federal income-tax evasion. The wealthy 44-year-old had "large" bank deposits in Spain, the Justice Department has said. Mr. Alvero-Cruz's attorney says his client "hates Castro" and hasn't been involved with Cuba in drug smuggling.

Another suspected smuggler with Cuban ties is Osiris Santis. According to the Drug agency report, Mr. Santis told an informant that he had received "large quantities" of marijuana and cocaine from "high Cuban government officials." The drugs assertedly came from Colombia's M-19 guerrillas. The informant said he saw "automatic weapons, grenades and explosives of apparent Russian manufacturer," in Cuban-born Mr. Santis' possession.

In 1982, Mr. Santis pleaded guilty in Miami's Dade County circuit court to charges of possession of cocaine and a concealed weapon. He received probation. His attorney says that the 40-year-old Mr. Santis denies any wrongdoing in connection with Cuba.

Fresh information about M-19's links to the drug trade may surface as a result of the federal indictment of Harold J. Rosenthal and 29 others in Atlanta last January.

Mr. Rosenthal fled to Colombia after escaping in 1981 from a Memphis prison, where he had been serving time for a drug conviction. He was captured by Colombian authorities last September and returned to the U.S. where he was charged with operating a ring that had smuggled five tons of cocaine into the U.S. since June 1982. "He was sharing his profits with M-19," says an investigator familiar with the case. "In turn the M-19 allowed him to conduct his business." Mr. Rosenthal had denied any wrongdoing.

Back in 1979, when Cuba was considering aiding drug smugglers, one high-level Cuban official branded the plan "barbarous," according to a Central Intelligence Agency report. But according to the CIA's informant, the prevailing view was that by assisting the narcotics trade, Cuba would obtain hard currency while hastening the "deterioration" of U.S. society.

The major Colombian narcotices smugglers long had been eager for an understanding with Cuba. Cuba's vigilance in seizing narcotics boats and confiscating drugs had added burdensome costs to their business.

TOP-LEVEL MEETING IN SPAIN

One former smuggler, interviewed in his attorney's office in Miami, recalls that the leaders of five major Colombian drug gangs met in Spain in 1979 "to see what could be done to get Cuba not to kidnap boats anymore." According to the former smuggler, who says he attended some of the meetings, the smugglers determined to seek help from Jaime Guillot-Lara, in the belief that he had contact with the Cubans."

Whether Mr. Guillot-Lara aided the traffikers at that time isn't clear. But his Cuban connection was a Colombian lawyer and the admitted drug dealer, Juan (Johnny) Crump, who was a close friend of Cuba's Ambassador to Colombia at the time, Ferndo Ravelo.

The 43-year-old Mr. Crump, who was briefly jailed in the U.S. after a guilty plea for a drug violation, testified for the government at the Miami drug trial that stemmed from the indictment of the four Cuban officials.

Interviewed in New York, Mr. Crump, currently a U.S. resident, recalls his association with the former Cuban ambassador to Colombia: "We talked to each other almost daily during the last two or three years I was in Colombia," he says. "We called each other compadre." The tall, lanky Mr. Crump displays a snapshot of his youngest daughter, Viviana, with Ambassador Ravelo at the child's baptism in Bogota in November 1980. "Ambassador Ravelo was the godfather," Mr. Crump says.

GATHERING IN BOGOTA

Mr. Crump figured prominently in the negotiations that led to an agreement between the smugglers and Cuba, according to the interview and trial testimony. The deal was struck at a series of meetings held during 1979 and 1980 at the Bogota Hilton Hotel, Mr. Crump says. In attendance were Mr. Crump, Mr. Guillot-Lara, Ambassador Ravelo and Cuba's minister-counselor to Colombia, Gonzalo Bassols. They agreed that Mr. Guillot-Lara's drug boats, flying the Panamanian flag and bearing the code name Viviana, would be given passage through Cuban waters.

Also privy to those meetings was Mr. Guillot-Lara's girlfriend at the time, Carmen Blanco, whose room at the Bogota Hilton adjoined the conference room. Miss Blanco later told the Miami grand jury that indicted the four Cuban officials what she had overheard. At one point, she said, Mr. Guillot-Lara told the Cubans that "he had enough money to do any type of business with them."

She also testified that Mr. Bassols, the Cuban minister-counselor, told Mr. Guillot-Lara that the drug scheme had been cleared by a high Cuban official. "Did he mention that man's name?" the prosecutor asked. "Fidel Castro," replied Miss Blanco, who wasn't accused of any wrongdoing.

A self-described former Cuban intelligence agent, Mario Estevez, was a government witness at the Miami trial. Mr. Estevez said he served on the crew of the Lazy Lady, a fishing boat that sailed from Florida to Cuba in late 1980 to rendezvous with the Viviana, a mother ship laden with 10 million Quaaludes from Colombia. Mr. Guillot-Lara, who had purchased the pills for 10 cents each, intended to smuggle them into the U.S., where they would fetch 70 cents apiece, according to information at the trial in Miami.

Mr. Estevez testified that when the Lazy Lady pulled into port on Cuba's north coast it was greeted by Aldo Santamaria-Cuadrado, a Cuban vice admiral. The vice admiral allegedly said to the crew: "We are going to fill Miami completely with the drugs." Imprisoned for a drug conviction in 1982, Mr. Estevez has since been released.

Since that incident, U.S. drug agents have seized a number of Mr. Guillot-Lara's ships, thus sharply reducing his drug income and hampering his ability to pay Cuba the required fees. He owed the Cuban government an estimated $8 million as of October 1981, an official of the U.S. drug agency says.

One trawler, seized off North Carolina in 1981, contained 40,000 pounds of marijuana, worth $16 million wholesale. U.S. Coast Guard officials say it bore the name Viviana and flew a Panamanian flag.

Since 1982, the U.S. Coast Guard has intensified its effort to choke off the flow of drugs by placing its cutters along two major trade routes: the Yucatan Straits between Cuba and Mexico and the Windward Passage between Cuba and Haiti. But the Cubans apparently have devised a plan to undercut the U.S. strategy.

According to a Defense Department intelligence report, Cuba has rented a cargo ship for $24,000 a month from a Panamanian shipowner. The scheme calls for the ship to move narcotics north from Colombia to a small island off Cuba's southern coast. The drugs would then be flown over the Cuban mainland to an island off the northern coast and from there shipped to Florida. This route would nearly avoid the Yucatan Straits and the Windward Passage. Whether the plan has yet been employed isn't known.●

TERRORISM: A NEW MODE OF WARFARE

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my foreign affairs newsletter for April 1984 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

The newsletter follows:

TERRORISM: A NEW MODE OF WARFARE

Terrorism is a frightening and all too familiar part of modern life. In 1983 terrorist incidents took place in 91 countries, and in the past 15 years more than 4,500 people have been killed in such attacks. In April 1983 more than 50 people, 17 of them Americans, died in a terrorist bombing of our embassy in Beirut. Terrorist violence again erupted in Lebanon in October, when 241 Marines were killed in a bomb attack. Such terrorist attacks have one common feature—a wanton disregard for human life.

Americans are the most frequent targets. Forty percent of the more than 550 terrorist attacks worldwide last year were directed against American citizens. There is significant terrorist activity within our borders as well. Last November, a bomb exploded in the Capitol, and possible terrorist activities are a major concern as we prepare for the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles. Americans are especially attractive targets of terrorism because of the guaranteed publicity and because Americans are viewed as symbols of policies or principles which terrorists seek to undermine.

New trends in terrorism are emerging. Diplomats from dozens of countries have been targets in the last few years, and they are now the victims of more than half of all terrorist incidents. Since 1968, 23 ambassadors from 13 countries have been killed. Terrorists are also better armed and are exploiting new tactics, such as suicide truck bombings. Ominously, governments are getting into the business of terrorism. There is evidence that North Korean agents killed South Korean officials in Burma last year, and that Syria and Iran tolerated and assisted in the Beirut bombings.

However, there also have been some positive trends in recent years. Hostage incidents are less frequent, and many victims have been rescued through negotiations or commando operations. Aircraft hijackings have been reduced since the mid-1970s, because of increased security measures at airports and stronger international action against hijackers and nations which harbor them.

The war against terrorism must be intensified. We need to:

Improve our intelligence: American and other intelligence services already give high priority to combatting terrorism. Terrorist groups, such as Italy's Red Brigades and West Germany's Baader-Meinhof Gang, have been hurt by good intelligence work. However, the Beirut bombings showed that intelligence gaps remain, particularly in regard to radical Middle East groups. Such groups, because of their close-knit membership and fanatical motivation, are very difficult for Western intelligence to penetrate. Another problem is how to assemble and to assess better the jigsaw puzzle of raw reports to create intelligence which can predict possible terrorist attacks. The recent appointment for the first time of a National Intelligence Officer for Terrorism is a good step in the right direction.

Tighten anti-terrorist laws: In his State of the Union message, President Reagan announced his intent to propose new laws to crack down on terror-related activity in the United States, including increased fines and prison terms, rewards for informants, and measures to outlaw conspiracy to commit terrorists acts in foreign countries. This legislative package reached Capital Hill on April 26, and Congress should act quickly so that there can be no doubt of our national resolve to combat terrorism.

Increase security abroad: The State Department already spends fifteen percent of its small budget on security, but much more needs to be done to protect Amercian diplomatic and military installations overseas. Even in this era of budgetary stringency, we must be sure that our diplomacy will not be impaired by terrorists.

Strengthen cooperation among countries: Multilateral diplomacy should build on the success of the Bonn Declaration of 1978 and other agreements in combatting aircraft hijacking. An urgent priority of the international community must be effective multilateral diplomatic and economic action against countries which support terrorism. More needs to be done in the areas of mutual assistance, intelligence sharing, research into the causes and tactics of terrorism, and joint planning with friendly governments.

Build an American capability for anti-terrorist action: The first specially trained hostage rescue unit was created last year in the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI). Also, the Pentagon has a special anti-terrorist unit know as the "Delta Force." Congress and the President must ensure that these units continue to receive sufficient resources.

Maintain our respect for law and civil liberties: We dare not fall into the trap of violating our own laws in the pursuit of terrorists. The President has signed a directive that endorses the principle of preemptive strikes and raids of reprisal against terrorists. While the directive does not lift the existing ban on assassination attempts, it still raises troubling issues concerning due process and the rule of law. Congress should air these issues fully. At home, the FBI's anti-terrorist activities are carried out now under guidelines established in the mid-1970s and updated last year after talks between the President and Congress. The Intelligence Committee of the House and Senate have oversight responsibility to ensure that steps to combat terrorism do not violate Americans' civil rights.

Address the roots of terrorism: The only long-term solution for terrorism is to address the political grievances which give rise to it. Terrorism is a new mode of warfare. We must work to understand what causes it, as well as what can be done about it. Terrorism must not deter us from acting to promote our interests or the cause of peace. But we must be careful to maintain our reputation for balance, fairness, and real dialogue with all parties.●

B'NAI B'RITH ANNIVERSARY

HON. MICHAEL D. BARNES

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, this year the B'nai B'rith organization is celebrating its 140th anniversary, as well as the 25th anniversary of the B'nai B'rith National Capital Association which serves the Washington metropolitan area. In honor of this important occasion, I would like to say a few words about this remarkable institution.

B'nai B'rith, the first international service organization founded in the United States, was started in a small cafe in New York City in 1843. Its 12 founders established the organization's purpose as the "mission of uniting persons of the Jewish faith in the work of promoting their highest interest and those of humanity." Since that time, B'nai B'rith has more than lived up to its mission. Its accomplishments have been varied and far reaching, ranging from the everyday to the extraordinary and including political activism, youth education, and community volunteer work.

Today B'nai B'rith represents a partnership of programs working to uphold the Jewish tradition. The Anti-Defamation League has fought for the cause of anti-Semitism and human rights the world over; the Hillel and Youth Organizations—representing the world's largest youth movement—have reached out to countless young people to instill in them a positive interpretation of the Jewish experience; the community services program has provided assistance wherever there is a need—be it for impoverished families, unsettled emigrants, senior citizens or the handicapped; the Israel Programs, through emphasizing cultural and social interchange, have strengthened ties between Jews in Israel and other countries; and B'nai B'rith Women has furthered the cause of understanding among groups through its own voluntary service programs.

The driving spirit behind the efforts of B'nai B'rith is manifested in its volunteers, who have devoted such phenomenal energy for the benefit of humanity. The grassroots involvement of these committed individuals will continue to serve as an ideal for what can be accomplished if we accept and act on the responsibility for mankind that we all share.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, May 1, 1984, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Tuesday, May 1, 1984

(Legislative day of Monday, April 30, 1984)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Merciful Father in Heaven, thank You for Your gracious perseverance in seeking and wooing us. Forgive us when we run away as though we are afraid lest You get too close or when we ignore You or find substitutes to replace You. Help us to see the distinction between religion—man's search for God—and Biblical faith—God seeking man. Save us from creating our own gods and diminishing our true humanness which was created in the image of God. Save us from trying to be our own gods—believing only in ourselves and suffering the frustration that self-worship generates. Lead us to Thee, the true God, that we may find ourselves and be fulfilled as the children of God we were meant to be. In the name of the Perfect Man, who served Thee as Father. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, after the formalities of reopening are over, which includes the special order and the time for morning business, we shall be back on the unfinished business. The Mitchell amendment is the pending question. I have been advised informally that Senator MITCHELL perhaps will not wish a rollcall vote on that amendment until after the two caucuses. If the minority leader confirms that, I am willing to arrange that so that all Senators will be accommodated. I do not want to prolong the debate unnecessarily. It may be possible, if that is the case, if the debate does not require much more time, that we will want to deal with some other amendments temporarily.

I guess I put that rambling question to the minority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HECHT). The minority leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I shall be happy to respond to the majority leader's inquiry.

Mr. MITCHELL is going to have to attend a committee meeting during the morning. It is my understanding that he is willing to have his amendment set aside temporarily and that debate start thereon at 2 o'clock, with a half-hour to be equally divided, and with a vote to occur at the end of that time. Moreover, I am advised that Mr. HOLLINGS is prepared to come over and talk about his amendment during the morning and I believe that we are prepared to enter into agreement. I think we have an arrangement with Mr. MITCHELL to enter into an agreement dealing with his amendment as I have described it.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, I think that that would be eminently agreeable to this side, but if I could have just a moment to check with the chairman of the Committee on the Budget and our calendar operation, I shall happily put that request.

There is also a Wilson amendment that might be taken up, but I would rather have the Hollings amendment up. I thank the minority leader for that information, that Senator HOLLINGS is willing to do that.

As I understand the suggestion, Mr. President, it will be that when we resume consideration of the unfinished business, the Mitchell amendment will be temporarily laid aside and we would lay down the Hollings amendment. Then, after the recess which will occur today, at 2 o'clock, we shall resume the consideration of the Mitchell amendment on a time agreement of 30 minutes, to be equally divided and, at the end of that 30 minutes, we vote on or in relation to the Mitchell amendment and once again resume consideration of the Hollings amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished majority leader has stated the position which I shall say I meant to outline and perhaps did not exactly; namely, if I may say, the majority leader used the words "lay down the Hollings amendment." I am not sure Mr. HOLLINGS wishes to lay it down at that point. I meant we shall discuss it before he calls it up. To prevent any misunderstanding, I have not discussed that with him, but if instead of laying it down, Mr. HOLLINGS could be recognized at that point to talk on his amendment, that would be fine.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there will be no problem with me. Indeed, I should be happy to agree to a time certain to go to the Hollings amendment, which precludes the possibility of a tabling amendment or that no tabling amendment would be in order until a time certain. I hoped that we could actually lay it down, because, as the minority leader will appreciate from his experience both as majority and minority leader, I rest more easily when there is something pending.

Mr. BYRD. Especially when it can be tabled.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am advised by my staff that we are cleared on this side to accept the proposal of the minority leader in respect to the Mitchell amendment. Therefore, I make this request.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on the resumption of the consideration of the unfinished business, the Mitchell amendment, which is the pending question, be temporarily laid aside and that the Chair then recognize the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) for the purpose of discussing an amendment to be offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

I further ask unanimous consent that at the hour of 12 noon today, the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 2 p.m. and that, at 2 p.m., the Senate resume consideration of the Mitchell amendment; that there be a 1-hour time limitation on that amendment, to be equally divided, with control of the time to be in the usual form; and that at the end of that hour, the Senate vote on or in relation to the Mitchell amendment.

That is the request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair, and I thank the minority leader. I thank Senator MITCHELL, who I believe is attending an Environment and Public Works Committee hearing. While I am at it, I might point out to Senator MITCHELL, if he is listening, there are some good Tennessee projects in there, and I urge he consider them favorably.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there are a number of items on today's Executive and Legislative Calendars that I am advised have been cleared on this side for action. If the minority leader is prepared to do so, I am prepared to get those out of the way right now with a minimum of time.

Mr. President, I gather from the minority leader's indication to me that he is prepared to consider some items. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am cleared on this side to take up these matters by unanimous consent: Calendar Order 777, 786, 789, 801, 802, and 803.

May I inquire of the minority leader if he is prepared to consider those or any portion of them and, in the interest of time, to do so en bloc?

Mr. BYRD. Yes. I have no objection.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the items just identified en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

"C. To subject any property of the United States of America, its agencies or instrumentalities, to the laws of any State to any extent other than the extent to which these laws would apply without regard to the compact.".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

HELEN KELLER DEAF-BLIND AWARENESS WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 261) to provide for the designation of the last week in June 1984 as "Helen Keller Deaf-Blindness Awareness Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 261

Whereas the anniversary of the birth of Helen Keller, the most accomplished, respected, and renowned deaf-blind American in our history, falls on June 27; and

Whereas deaf-blindness is one of the most severe of all disabilities, with respect to which some forty thousand Americans are deprived of two primary senses; and

Whereas the rubella epidemic of the 1960's, along with other pathologies, has resulted in deaf-blindness for approximately six thousand of our children; and

Whereas, because of the severity of deaf-blindness the cost of educating, training, and rehabilitating persons who are deaf and blind is high in comparison with other disabilities; and

Whereas this high cost causes many service agencies to be reluctant to serve deaf-blind persons, thus inhibiting the independence and self-sufficiency of such persons, and frequently resulting in their placement in custodial institutions; and

Whereas, although the Helen Keller National Center and its network, and regional deaf-blind centers serve a portion of this population, inadequate education, training and rehabilitation services to the deaf-blind population represents a terrible waste of human lives and resources, imposing a high economic cost on the Nation; and

Whereas it is in the national interest to prevent this waste of human resources, foster independence, create opportunities for employment, and maximize the ability to achieve among our deaf-blind citizens; and

Whereas these objectives can be accomplished only through an increased public awareness of, and attention to, the needs, abilities, and potential contributions to society of persons who are both deaf and blind; and

Whereas it is highly appropriate to publicize the needs, abilities, and potential of all deaf-blind persons, and simultaneously to recognize Helen Keller not only as a beacon of courage and hope for our Nation, but also as a symbol of what is possible for deaf-blind persons to achieve: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President shall issue a proclamation designating the last week in June of 1984 as "Helen Keller Deaf-Blind Awareness Week" and calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

HONORING COMMANDER ALPHONSE DESJARDINS

The resolution (S. Res. 312) to honor Comdr. Alphonse Desjardins, founder of La Caisse Populaire de Ste-Marie, Manchester, N.H. was considered and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S. RES. 312

Whereas Commander Alphonse Desjardins observed a lack of adequate banking facilities for most working Americans and undertook an active role in encouraging interested groups to develop a useful community-based alternative,

Whereas the objectives of credit unions are to encourage economy and financial responsibility among members, to promote Christian and humane values, to combat usury, to provide capital for local individual enterprises, and to help borrowers achieve economic independence through self-help,

Whereas the credit union movement in the United States began on a note of high idealism, its purpose service, its motivation religion, and its essence the practicality of the association of individuals, and

Whereas Commander Desjardins responded to the request of Monsignor Pierre Hevey, priest of Saint Mary's parish, Manchester, New Hampshire, to organize a credit union among a group of Franco-American citizens, resulting in the first incorporation of a credit union in this Nation, La Caisse Populaire de Ste-Marie: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate recognizes and honors the efforts of Commander Alphonse Desjardins, who, in this important way, did so much to bring credit unionism to the United States.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL WEEK OF THE OCEAN

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 478) designating the week of April 29 through May 5, 1984, as "National Week of the Ocean," was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, my executive calendar today also has a number of clearances on it. May I inquire of the minority leader if he is prepared to consider all those nominations under the heading "Nominations," not including those nominations placed on the Secretary's desk, however?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this side of the aisle is ready to proceed with all nominations with the exception of Calendar Order No. 514.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, I hope to have cleared the nominations placed on the Secretary's desk early this afternoon. I think I may be able to do that.

I also hope that the minority leader might be in a position to clear Calendar Order 514. The minority leader I am sure will understand what I am about to say. We discussed it privately, and I mentioned it on the floor yesterday. At some point the leadership on this side will feel compelled to move to the consideration of that item. We do not do that often, and I will not do it today certainly. But if the minority leader could reexamine that particular item, I would be grateful for it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, that will be done.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, then I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now go into executive session to consider those items that are cleared on both sides, to wit: Calendar Orders 567, 569, and 570.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Alicemarie H. Stotler, of California, to be U.S. district judge for the central district of California.

The nomination was considered and confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Bohdan A. Futey, of Ohio, to be chairman of the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission of the United States for the remainder of the term expiring September 30, 1985.

The nomination was considered and confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Chapman B. Cox, of Virginia, to be General Counsel of the Department of Defense.

The nomination was considered and confirmed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the nominations were confirmed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of these nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, that concludes my business for this morning. I thank the minority leader for his assistance and cooperation. I apologize to the Senator from Wisconsin for taking so long.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the standing order, the Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may retain control of the time that is left for me, and that the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIRE) proceed with his order, if he so wishes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIRE) is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

HOLLAND: THE WELFARE STATE GONE WILD

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on Sunday, April 1, the "60 Minutes" program on CBS carried the most damning indictment of the welfare state pushed to its extreme that this Senator has ever seen. This was a depiction of the economic plight into which Holland has worked in its quest to create a perfect social democracy. It provides subsidies for just about everything: for opera, for art, for marihuana for teenagers. As CBS commentator Morley Safer observed:

By the mid-70's the social welfare system had reached a crescendo of plans and programs, a reverse of Orwell's "1984." Big Brother was not watching; he was asking, "Can I do anything to help?"

In recent years, Mr. President, our country the United States, has begun to show a little restraint in foolish domestic spending. But we could easily lapse back into the bad old habits; "60 Minutes" offered a vivid picture of why we should be very careful about such a lapse.

I ask unanimous consent that excerpts from the transcript of the "60 Minutes" television presentation of Sunday, April 1, on where the social democracy crusade has led Holland be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"DUTCH TREAT"

MORLEY SAFER.—The Dutch ideal 20 years ago or so was to create the perfect social democracy, a state that would meet every need but, more than that, a state that would indulge every whim. The "Dutch Treat" is the result. Some of you will see it as something as close to Utopia as can be found on this earth. Others will see it as proof that there are limits to what the state can do, even with the best intentions. And once the state giveth, it is nearly impossible for the state to taketh away. Whatever way you do see it, one fact is it's running out of money. Dutch workers are paying fifty to sixty percent in taxes, the tax base is declining, unemployment in Holland may be the highest in Europe, but the treat goes on.

[Opera excerpt.]

The Dutch treat is for everyone. For the opera lover, it's particularly delicious. If the production wasn't subsidized, it would cost $85 a ticket, but it only costs $7 to attend. The government puts up the difference.

In Holland, the government puts up the difference for everything, from tennis lessons to providing a place for teenagers to buy cheap hashish, to paying undiscovered artists a state salary. It pays a retired bookkeeper, age 30, a nice pension for an alleged bad back, giving him time to be a full-time hawker for a sex club. And he pays not a penny in taxes.

By the mid-70's the social welfare system had reached a crescendo of plans and programs, a reverse of Orwell's 1984. Big Brother wasn't watching; he was asking, "Can I do anything to help?" The militant women demanded the government give them a women-only restaurant. The Government gave them money to get one going. And when lesbian women felt they were excluded from job opportunities as barge captains, the Dutch government put up money, got the Common Market to put up more, and gave them a school and bought them a barge.

[Barge engine revving up.]

The male barge crews objected, predicted disaster—accidents in Holland's delicate canal system. But the women won; the canal walls held.

[Dog barking; women barge workers chatting.]

WOMAN. Have a good time now. [Laughing, kissing].

SAFER. The homosexual community demanded and got a government-subsidized club and dance hall. The Hell's Angels complained they had no place to meet; so, the government gave them a clubhouse. Youth in general complained that youth was not being served; so, the government started something called "The Happy Family Clubs". Kids from 15 to 24 are provided with free music, sausages and soft drinks. Beer is 35¢ a glass; the hashish and marijuana are sold at discount prices.

[Singers performing Dutch pop music.]

The system is almost self-sufficient. The man who runs this Happy Family told me that the sale of drugs helps to offset the cost of running the clubs. The drugs are half the street price, and they're pure.

Remember, there's nothing clandestine about the sale of drugs in these clubs. This has the approval of the Dutch social welfare system.

[Singers performing.]

For older children and younger adults, the government subsidizes other clubs, like the "Milkey Way". In the Milkey Way, the drugs are sold at booths that give the latest market prices for marijuana and hashish. Everyone goes to great pains to say that hard drugs are not offered for sale, though the government is about to open a center where 300 heroin users will be given free drugs and a clean place to inject themselves.

[Orchestra tuning up.]

Holland is a great haven for musicians and for lovers of music. It pays virtually the entire cost for 19 symphony orchestras, plus operas and ballet companies. The musicians are all on civil service salaries and pensions, given 12 months a year of work, even though some of them put in only eight weeks.

[Orchestra tuning up.]

"The Ysbreaker"—[pronounced ice-breaker]—an Amsterdam cafe and experimental music club—gets a stipend of about a quarter of a million dollars a year from the government. Holland may be the most youth-conscious society in the world. Youth is indulged and pampered and subsidized, right through to middle age and beyond. At The Ysbreaker, just about any kind of music goes.

[Avant-garde violin and trombone music.]

It's also a place to try out new vaudeville acts, even though vaudeville is as dead in Holland as it is anywhere. The performers are, of course, on a government stipend as well. (Trombone blats; vaudeville excerpt)

Pop music is not left out, and here you may have the most enigmatic non sequitur in the history of musicology—the Committee for Non-Commercial Pop Music, designed to make more commercial and more popular non-commercial music. In other words, they're here to find ways of getting the bottom 400 into the Top 20, which of course would then make it no longer non-commercial.

But the most graphic, visual example of the Dutch treat is the way it treats its unsuccessful artists and those claiming to be artists. Last year, the Arts Committee of the Dutch Government spent more than $43-million on artworks from painters and sculptors who could not otherwise make a living. There are 3500 such artists on the government payroll. In return for the money, the artists offer their, quote, "best work", unquote, to the state.

[Chairman of Arts Committee speaking Dutch.]

The state committee is made up of civil servants and artists who are themselves on the nation's payroll. They meet twice a month to select art and artists to be added to the payroll.

The decision will be made today about whether to vote to——

MAN [municipal government employee]. Yes?

SAFER [continuing]. Subsidize that artist or not.

MAN. Right. That's correct. First, they have a general judgment whether the work presented is good enough, qualified to be bought. And then, if they vote yes, then afterwards they vote which part of the work they actually will buy.

SAFER. And are you from the Ministry, or——

MAN. From the municipal government.

SAFER. I see.

[Background comments in Dutch.]

SAFER. Much of what the committee looks at is atrocious. There's just no other word for it. And most members will privately admit it. But, not unlike certain departments of the U.S. government, once you have a budget, it must be spent—so they spend it.

[Comments in Dutch; pounding of gavel.]

SAFER. If the spiritual and esthetic sides of Dutch life seem indulged, what about the more practical side of life? Well, Holland has the most generous compensation for disabled workers anywhere, and it may be no surprise that it has more disabled workers than any other country. One in six people in the Dutch work force is on the "permanently disabled" list, being paid up to 80% of their former salaries. Right now, between the disabled and the unemployed, 41% of the Dutch work force is not working but being paid handsome benefits. And those benefits are not the end of it.

The abuses are not legendary; they are factual. In order to receive the disability pension, the alleged accident does not have to be job-related. One young man wrenched his back skiing, and managed to pull a $20,000-a-year pension for life. And then again, Willem the bookkeeper, back at his stand, earning, as he says, "luxury money" in Amsterdam's red-light district.

[Willem hawking outside sex shop; dialogue in Dutch.]

SAFER. Willem says doctors have not been able to trace the exact cause of his bad back, but he says it does hurt after a few hours of sitting.

But you look like a very healthy fellow.

WILLEM. Yeah, that's because I have—well, enough money to live in a bit of luxury, to go on—on a holiday for a year. Eat good to live good.

SAFER. Where do you go?

WILLEM. Well, depends. I've been through Europe, all over, most countries of Europe. And next year, I plan to go to the highlands of Scotland, this year, in the summer.

SAFER. Can you sit in an airplane for three or four hours?

WILLEM. That's okay, yeah.

SAFER. Or a car?

WILLEM. That's not—that's not hanging over a desk with your back bent.

SAFER. I see.

Dr. Jop Stork is a leading internist. He was the doctor to a former prime minister of Holland. He sees plenty of legitimately ill people, and he sees some others as well.

Dr. JOP STORK. Most of the patients come in to us with—with complaints like headache, backache, irritable colon, hyperventilation. And that's more than 50% of my patients. And then, we are ex—— examining everything: laboratory tests, X-rays, endoscopical examination.

At the end we say, "Congratulations! We didn't find anything!" And then we don't see a laugh. They say, "Well, I'm sorry, but I have my complaints. I'm not able to work." And then the problem starts.

Dr. VICTOR HELMBERSTADT. The system is abused, because it has been made to be abused.

SAFER. Dr. Victor Helmberstadt is a world-renowned Dutch economist. He lectures at Leyden University. He's one of the architects of the system, a system he now says has gotten completely out of hand.

Dr. HELMBERSTADT. It has been a terrible blow against morality, against the work ethic, and especially it has been a terrible blow for younger people, because in the past decade lots of young people have seen around them fraud, legal fraud, which allowed workers to obtain a benefit as a disabled person. And that, in—in turn, made it seem to young people, I think, that, well, trying to get a benefit instead of working was socially acceptable. And that's why we have now brought up generations of people who think that it's quite normal to live on a benefit instead of living on the income made from work.

[Laughter at cafe; Turks playing cards and dominos.]

SAFER. Non-Dutchman take further advantage of the Dutch social welfare system. There are hundreds of thousand of foreign workers in Holland, invited in to do the menial work many Dutchmen did not want to do. These Turkish men, many of them now on unemployment or disability themselves, are entitled to full benefits, plus family benefits for wives and children who've never been to Holland. The system is badly abused. Men claim more children than they have, and in some cases the money's going back to buy up farmland in Turkey.

[Turks playing; clatter of dishes.]

Imdad Alli is a Pakistani who came to Holland seven years ago. He works as a dishwasher in an Amsterdam hotel. On top of a fairly good salary, he gets a whole array of benefits.

[Music—Pakistanis watching Dynasty on TV.]

He lives in a big house which is subsidized by the state. He rents out rooms to other Pakistanis on an unofficial basis. On top of that, the Dutch government sends $3,000 a year in family assistance to his family in Pakistan, a family he claims numbers nine people. That $3,000 alone is nine times the average annual income in Pakistan.

[TV excerpt from Dynasty, with John Forsythe portraying Blake Carrington, declaring: "Yes, I'm going to get my grandson back home where he belongs!"]

Dr. HELMBERSTADT. The Dutch system is as generous to those who have—hold a Dutch passport as to those who do not hold a Dutch passport but who have worked here, are still working. That implies that those who return to their own country—because they have, for instance, entered the disability scheme and have been declared disabled or partially disabled—will get a benefit even in their own country. Some people will, for their specific disability, need a car, as to be able to transport themself. Now, if this were a foreign worker, and he goes back to his own country, which is perfectly legitimate, he'll be entitled to take that car along and get a replacement for that car after a few years.

SAFER. What's been the net effect on Dutch society of this generosity—I mean, beyond any economic problems? Has there been some other——

Dr. HELMBERSTADT. People consider it quite normal that government finances almost everything, be it education, be it art, be it benefits. And government is not a strange and alien body somewhere; government is us. And now people are finding out that—that they're paying the bill themselves, and that bill today is very high. And that makes a situation whereby wor—more and more workers will say, "We can't accept it." It's not yet a revolt, but there is a strong resistance to an increase in the tax take, only to finance schemes, benefits, for those who don't work.

SAFER. And what about those who do? All those universally unrecognized artists on the Dutch payroll, what happens to all that output? In theory, the work that is selected is sent to public buildings like this one. This building's main purpose is to administer "bad back" benefits. The idea is that state-employed office workers can enjoy the fruits of state-approved art. in fact, most of the art is sent here, to a warehouse. This one is down by the waterfront in Amsterdam. This is the little warehouse. It houses only 40,000 pieces.

Last year, the Dutch government paid $43-million for this stuff, and who knows how much more to house it. And as I said, this is only part of it. In the Hague, in the big warehouse, there are another 200,000 pieces of forlorn, long-forgotten inspiration.

[Gavel pounding at Arts Committee meeting.]

HOW A BRILLIANT BUREAUCRAT SAVED NATIONAL PUBLIC RADIO

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, in contrast with the waste and extravagance of social expenditures gone wild in Holland, I want to offer at this point an example of bureaucracy at its best in our Government.

This town has a great time denouncing bureaucrats gone wrong. But when a public official does something brilliantly, no one read about it, hears about it or talks about it. This morning I should like to call the Senate's attention to a bureaucrat who did a superlative job. The name of this public official is Ronald Bornstein. If you have never heard of Ronald Bornstein, welcome to the club. Very few have.

But here is what he did: Last year, National Public Radio was in abysmal financial shape. Its budget crisis was so severe that it appeared impossible for this excellent public service to survive. The usual answer under these circumstances is to pump more public money into the operation. Just hike the old appropriation. But sometimes Congress says no and a service dies. In this case, Congress did not act, and the service carried on.

In spite of strong public and congressional support for National Public Radio, especially for its excellent "Morning Edition" and "All Things Considered," it appeared that National Public Radio might have to go. At this point, Bornstein was asked to come to the rescue. Why Bornstein? Bornstein has for a number of years run National Public Radio's most successful radio as well as its affiliated television station: WHA in Madison, Wis.

In 1976, Bornstein had come to Washington briefly to head a committee to recognize National Public Radio, a nonprofit programing and distribution organization which serves more than 240 affiliated public stations. He did such a good job then that he won the Edward R. Murrow Award for Distinguished Service to Public Radio. Bornstein also returned to Washington when he served as a vice president of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting for 18 months beginning in 1980.

So when National Public Radio got into trouble, the National Public Radio Board of Directors turned to Bornstein. No other name came up. When Bornstein arrived, he had to do a painful, difficult job. He reduced the staff of NPR by more than 150, including firing more than a hundred, and these were people whom Bornstein acknowledged were good people. As Bornstein told the Wisconsin Business Journal: "There were no financial systems operating at National Public Radio. There was lack of internal discipline, management discipline, erosion of the chain of command." At one point, NPR had $65,000 in the bank and a $6.5 million debt. The telephone company repeatedly threatened to disconnect the phones. The landlord threatened eviction. The satellite interconnection system operated only through emergency payments to Western Union. The company had 9,000 checks that could not be sent, because there were no funds to pay them. NPR owed almost $800,000 in salary withholding taxes to the Internal Revenue Service and was behind in paying withholding tax moneys to the District of Columbia and other tax districts. Bad business practices abounded in the chaotic climate. NPR had issued 110 American Express credit cards for use by its 449 employees. The cards were billable directly to the company. There were no uniform expense reimbursement procedures.

Bornstein moved quickly and decisively to clean up this messs. But he acquired some deep resentment along the way; he was called Attila the Munchkin and the Midwest Hick. The board chairman of NPR, Myron Jones, said that he could not tolerate Bornstein's style of management. He told the Board: "One of us has to go. It's either Bornstein or Jones." Jones went.

Mr. President, today we still have an excellent National Public Radio, not only by virtue of a regard for the importance of the service NPR brings, but also a sensitivity to hardheaded, sound business practices and accountability, and a remarkable, first-class bureaucrat: Ronald C. Bornstein of Madison, Wis.

I ask unanimous consent that an article from the Wisconsin Business Journal of April 1984, by Joel McNair, entitled "Is Ron Bornstein God? Or Is He Just Damn Good?" be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IS RON BORNSTEIN GOD? OR IS HE JUST DAMN GOOD?

(By Joel McNair)

The Madison newspaper headline last November lableled him "Superman." Another anointed him "Savior." Yet another news story said he's "an authentic American hero."

For the press to gush is one thing. For the press to gush over a bureaucrat is quite another.

But to the eight million persons who regularly listen to National Public Radio, balding, 51-year-old Ronald C. Bornstein, at five feet six inches, is a man of heroic proportions. In the space of six eventful months last year, Bornstein quite literally saved NPR—an organization "close to anarchy"—from oblivion. A communications professor with UW-Madison and just recently appointed chief lobbyist and public relations officer of the University of Wisconsin System, Bornstein was directing WHA public television and radio in Madison before he headed east.

When he assumed the temporary presidency of NPR last May, Bornstein discovered the organization was some $9 million in debt in a total budget of $26 million. NPR wasn't meeting payrolls. Withholding taxes were not being paid. Employees had to cross the street to borrow paper for the copying machine.

Through massive budget cuts, employee layoffs, programming reduction and a craftily negotiated loan, Bornstein in a summer's time left NPR in a position to survive, if not thrive. Most critics and listeners agree that, despite the cutbacks, the quality of the network's programming was not greatly affected.

And, perhaps most incredibly, "Superman" did all this as a half-time employee.

"The remedies were standard business practice, nothing revolutionary," claims Bornstein in the soft, steady voice that belies his "tough guy" image within the broadcasting industry. His special qualifications, Bornstein feels, were knowing public broadcasting and the political workings of Washington, D.C., where NPR is headquartered.

"No other name ever came up," says Jack Mitchell, a member of the NPR board of directors that selected Bornstein to succeed Frank Mankiewicz as president last May. "There's nobody else quite like him."

Bornstein carved his unique niche through more than a decade of managing WHA, interrupted by stints at NPR and the Corporation for Public Broadcasting in Washington. In Madison he learned to handle the budget and staff of a highly regarded public broadcasting station that ranks first in the nation in terms of radio listeners and second in television viewers.

In Washington, Bornstein says he learned "the political landscape" of public broadcasting—and where the organization's "corporate bodies were buried."

A Detroit native, Bornstein came to Madison in 1967 to be associate director of television services at WHA, which is part of the University of Wisconsin Extension. He has headed the station's television and radio operations since 1970. Now, he is the chief spokesperson and lobbyist for the University of Wisconsin System.

WHA produces local broadcasts and statewide information and educational services for the Wisconsin public television and radio networks. It also provides educational materials for state and educational agencies.

Under Bornstein's stewardship, WHA radio and television has modernized its facilities and increased staff (to 135 full-time employees) and budget (to a total of $7.8 million for the current fiscal year). Despite its growth, Bornstein points with pride to the fact that use of state tax money as a percentage of direct operating costs has decreased substantially in the last 15 years.

"Our direct operating costs are supported in the majority by nontaxpayer funds," Bornstein says. The majority of these operations are paid for by providing services to non-profit organizations and by donations from foundations and individuals.

In 1976, Bornstein traveled to Washington to head a committee to reorganize NPR, a non-profit programming and distribution organization which serves more than 240 affiliate public stations. As a result of that effort, he won the Edward R. Murrow Award for Distinguished Service to Public Radio.

He was also instrumental in hiring Frank Mankiewicz as NPR's president.

Bornstein went to Washington again in 1980, taking an 18-month leave of absence from the UW to serve as a vice-president of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. He says the CPB, an independent non-profit organization which receives federal funding to be used for public broadcasting, acts as an "insulator between the political sector and a First Amendment enterprise."

Despite spending his entire broadcasting career in the public sector, Bornstein says his philosophy is the same as that of any good small businessman. "We believe in the same business-like principles of private enterprise," he says. "We believe in budget integrity, appropriate stewardship of funds and attention to the bottom line and performance."

He says these principles were what NPR lacked last spring.

Jack Mitchell, who is also station manager at WHA, says the 17-member NPR board of directors first realized they had a serious budget crisis in March. the board tried to balance NPR's current (1983) budget. They found, Mitchell says, that this was impossible.

Mankiewicz resigned under pressure. And the board gave Bornstein a call.

Bornstein agreed to help out on a part-time basis—with one stipulation. "I told the board that I would not accept a permanent position," he explains. "I promised my family I would be home in time for Halloween."

For the next six months, he spent three days a week in Washington, generally from Sunday night through Wednesday. He was soon on a firstname basis with crew members of Northwest Airlines Flight 379 out of Washington.

Bornstein's arrival was not greeted with enthusiasm by the NPR staff. Mankiewicz had been popular, particularly with the people who produced NPR's stellar news shows, "Morning Edition" and "All Things Considered."

Mankiewicz, too, had fostered an attitude that the organization's problems were minor and temporary. "Frank was saying that things are rosy, 'there's a little cash flow problem, but if we just hang tough we'll get through it'," Mitchell remembers. "Then the NPR board essentially fires Frank and sends in a guy who has a reputation for toughness."

"Since they had been told there was no problem, the staff thought that 'someone's out to get us.' "

The word at NPR, Mitchell says, was that Bornstein represented President Reagan's plan to kill public radio. Or that the CPB and hostile public radio stations were planning similar deeds. And Bornstein was friendly with NPR's rival, American Public Radio.

He was dubbed, "Attila the Munchkin" and "The Midwest Hick."

Bornstein had his own description of the situation: "Chaos."

"There were simply no financial systems operating at National Public Radio," he says. "There was lack of internal discipline, management discipline, erosion of the chain of command, lack of financial and administrative leadership by some of the principal department heads and officers."

"It was an organization that I thought was pretty close to anarchy."

The results of that anarchy were everywhere. At one point, NPR had $65,000 in the bank and a $6.5 million debt. The telephone company repeatedly threatened to disconnect the phones. The landlord threatened eviction. Member stations, Bornstein recalls, were "owed lots of money." The satellite interconnection system operated only through emergency payments to Western Union.

Bornstein more than once had to obtain emergency loans to meet the payroll. The company had 9,000 checks that could not be sent, because there were no funds to pay them. NPR owed almost $800,000 in salary withholding taxes to the Internal Revenue Service and was behind in paying withholding tax monies to the District of Columbia and other tax districts.

"A series of administrative fiefdoms were built that had their own books," says Bornstein. "These had a tendency not to agree with each other's or the corporate books."

Bad business practices abounded in the chaotic climate. For example, NPR had issued 110 American Express credit cards for use by its 449 employees. "The cards were billable directly to the company," Bornstein explains. "There was no uniform expense reimbursement procedure."

He says employees "would somehow, someday turn in a reconciling piece of paper, but the company would by that time have paid the American Express bill."

When he first stepped into NPR's Washington headquarters, Bornstein realized almost immediately that drastic budget and staff cutting was needed.

"We knew what we had to cut the first week we were there," says Mitchell. "His (Bornstein's) great strength is decisiveness."

Mitchell was part of a transition team, hand-picked by Bornstein to carry out his directives. As the temporary programming specialist, Mitchell was Bornstein's "cutter." Weekend and hourly news programs were terminated and reporters laid off. Four-fifths of arts and performance programming was chopped away.

Steve Symonds, a CPB veteran, was Bornstein's deputy, the man who provided Bornstein with much of his decision-making information. When Bornstein wanted a chief financial officer from the commercial broadcasting sector, Westinghouse Broadcasting offered George Miles, a Boston television station manager.

In the space of a few weeks, the team reduced NPR's staff by more than 150 employees. More than 100 were fired. Mitchell says he was "numb."

"It was absolutely agonizing," Bornstein remembers. "Those people were good people. They were the victims of the problem, not the cause."

Bornstein's axe was criticized within the organization. In what his staff calls the "June 14th Shootout at the OK Corral." NPR Board Chairman Myron Jones said he could not tolerate Bornstein's style of management. "He told the board it was either him or me," Bornstein recalls.

It was "him." Bornstein stayed.

Outsiders like the Washington Post's Jacqueline Trescott say some public radio station managers criticize Bornstein's decision to cut first and seek funds later.

"He stayed away from direct fundraising for so long," says Trescott, who covered the NPR story for the Post. Although more than $2 million was eventually raised in a "Drive to Survive" broadcast appeal, Trescott says much of the arts and performance division could have been saved if money had been raised earlier.

"In the long run, those cuts hurt NPR," she adds.

Bornstein counters that "Morning Edition" and "All Things Considered" are the heart and soul of NPR, the programming that is demanded by listeners and station managers. To attract foundation support and negotiate a loan with the CPB, he says all other areas had to suffer cuts. Without the cuts, he feels outside contributors would have been "throwing money down a rat-hole."

Once Bornstein felt the situation was under control, he went to the CPB for a loan that would keep NPR afloat. The negotiations were not friendly.

Bornstein is frank in his assessment of the CPB. "(CPB) should have been watching the store while someone took the cookies. They should have watched the financial performance of NPR."

The corporation, he says, was not experienced in negotiating what essentially was a commercial loan. Bornstein also feels the CPB's general counsel was not familiar with broadcast regulation. He says CPB's initial loan stipulations required too much control over NPR, and represented a First Amendment threat.

CPB wanted title to NPR's interconnection system. "Legally, they couldn't do it," Bornstein relates.

"But they maintained they could."

When the two parties decided upon a trust to oversee continued operation of the system, CPB attempted to select representatives of public radio stations as trustees. This is also illegal, Bornstein says, because trustees cannot be beneficiaries of the trust.

The corporation also wanted tighter control of NPR's budget. "Most people in the business sector clearly understand that if you have control of the budget for one day you have control of the organization," Bornstein says. Elements for CPB budget review were a continuing battle.

"Our position," Bornstein explains, "was that the NPR budget review should not provide the Corporation for Public Broadcasting with any ability to either approve or disapprove the receipt of grants. If you have that, you have significant influence over programming.

"If that had come to push and shove, I would rather have seen the organization stop, if that was the price. Nothing is worth that."

The $8.5 million loan guarantee came just hours before NPR would have been forced to close its doors for lack of money.

While not guaranteeing NPR's future, Bornstein and his team had at least given it some breathing space with the loan. And Bornstein returned to Wisconsin, where he helped pass out the Halloween candy.

Bornstein has received the praise of the NPR board, the news staff, the CPB and the press. With new President Douglas J. Bennet at the helm, Trescott reports that NPR appears to be staying above water, even to the point of having a small surplus for the first quarter of fiscal 1984. "People there are restless, because the real frustration is coming now in holding to a tight budget," she says.

Despite 10 to 15 percent cuts in the news budget, Trescott feels NPR is still respected. "'Morning Edition' uses more pieces from the BBC, so you know they are still stretching," she says. "But the quality of reporting stands with anyone in town."

Though he no longer has the power associated with the presidency of National Public Radio, "Bottom Line Ron" Bornstein is glad to be home. "The job doesn't pay enough" is his flip answer to questions about whether he would want to be NPR's permanent leader.

But Bornstein's feelings for Wisconsin—and Washington—run far deeper. "(In Washington) every act is questioned on the basis of running for office. I do not like to go into a situation like that with hidden agendas," he says. "That is the first thing that paranoid Washington types think about, because it's a hyper-political town. I told the board going in that I didn't want the job.

"I happen to be a great believer in personal choice and lifestyle," he continues. "Madison has been pleasing to me, and the university has been pleasing to me. There are several things that are important to me, and one of them is my family."

Mitchell says Bornstein was "never fully accepted as 'one of them'" by the NPR staff. "He's not one of them."

Bornstein and Mitchell agree that the Madison Ron Bornstein is a completely different person from the one who ran NPR. "The Ron Bornstein here is a lot nicer," Mitchell says. "(In Washington) there wasn't time for that."

"Here, I operate as a collegial manager," Bornstein says. "My talent is hiring good people and giving them a creative environment. I like to manage through others and bask in the glory of my own staff," he says.

In Washington the staff, while talented, was in complete disarray. "In Washington I was much more autocratic," he explains. "In a situation as critical as NPR's, you don't operate on a plebiscite basis.

"It's like providing policy directives to the inmates. You can't do that."

Bornstein, who says "boredom is my worst enemy," plans to stay active, both on the job and in the community.

He still offers advice when NPR calls from Washington. "I'm glad I was able to do a job," he says. "The entire experience is probably the greatest management challenge I have ever had, and may ever have. I'm really happy that it turned out well."

But he says he is also happy that it is over.

Happy, too, that his staff has stopped greeting him with "Good morning, savior."

DOES THE UNITED STATES HAVE IT WITHIN ITS POWER TO PREVENT A NUCLEAR WAR?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, is it possible for this country to find and follow military and foreign policies that will sharply reduce the prospects of a nuclear war? This Senator thinks it is. If we have a nuclear war, it will be very largely brought about by forces over which we in the Government have control. It will be the consequence of the failure of the U.S. Government to work wisely enough and hard enough to achieve two objectives: One, a comprehensive mutual, verifiable agreement to stop the arms race with the Soviet Union; two, an international agreement to stop the spread of nuclear arms material or equipment to other nations. Can we achieve either of these objectives? Yes, indeed. We can achieve both.

Are we making progress now in achieving either objective? No. We are losing ground every day. Consider: the limited nuclear arms talks between the United States and the Soviet Union. Both the START talks and the intermediate nuclear force talks have been suspended. The Russians—not the United States—walked away from both. Will they return to the table if the United States proposes to negotiate a comprehensive freeze on all testing, production, and deployment of nuclear weapons? There are strong indications they would. This Senator feels it is highly likely that eventually, and probably within the next year, they would do so. Would such negotiations lead to an agreement we could confidently verify? Of course, we will not know for sure until we try. But the Russians have indicated they will agree to consider to some of the principal and most critical elements such an agreement would have to contain, including verification by locating monitoring equipment within the Soviet Union, unrestricted satellite inspection, and verification of suspicious developments by on-the-spot inspection.

Most Americans and most Members of Congress have paid far less attention to an even more critical threat of nuclear war: the continued proliferation of nuclear weapons. The United States by itself can make a far more profound contribution to slamming the door shut on this threat than Russia. Russia has not engaged in selling or providing nuclear arms capability to other nations, and for obvious reasons. A nuclear-armed Hungary or Poland or East Germany could and very possibly would turn on their Soviet masters, once any of these Soviet-dominated satellites achieved the strength and independence of a nuclear arsenal.

After all, the biggest Communist defection in history has been the break between the Communist People's Republic of China and the Communist Soviet Union. What was the military basis for that split? Why did China leave the Soviet orbit while other Communist nations stayed under the Soviet wing? Certainly a prime reason was the development of an independent nuclear arsenal by China. Russia has held its international power through puppet governments that rely on the Soviet Union for military strength. The proliferation of nuclear weapons among these Soviet-dominated countries in Eastern Europe and elsewhere would mean a spectacular loss of Russian domination. But it would also mean a far, far more dangerous world. So Russia has tightly resisted the export of any of its nuclear arms technology. Unfortunately, the United States has not. We have provided nuclear materials or equipment to India, Pakistan, and South Africa. None of those countries has ratified the nuclear nonproliferation pact. So none of them permits international inspection to determine whether or not they are building a nuclear arms arsenal. And each of these countries seems determined, with our help, to build exactly that. India already has.

We are about to enter into a nuclear export agreement with the People's Republic of China. China has informally agreed to international inspection to determine whether or not she has diverted nuclear technology to military purposes. Meanwhile, she may have exported nuclear technology to other countries, including Pakistan, which could end up as nuclear weapons.

It is within the power of the United States to change this dangerous proliferation policy decisively. We could and should make an end to the spread of nuclear weapons the number one objective of our foreign policy.

To do this effectively would force this country to take truly radical and drastic action in our trade policies. That action would not only require stringent export controls on nuclear technology. It would also take a policy of tough and strict discipline with those of our trading partners who now sell nuclear technology: the French, the West Germans, the Swiss, the People's Republic of China, and others. This Senator is convinced that we should declare that we will refuse to buy or sell. We should refuse to trade at all with any country that permits trade in nuclear technology with any nation that diverts that nuclear technology to military purposes.

Mr. President, the survival of people throughout the world is at stake here. This country's military intelligence agencies estimate that unless we stop this nuclear proliferation, more than 30 nations will have nuclear arsenals within the next 16 years. If we permit that to happen, the prospect of our children living out their lives free of nuclear war would be nil.

So, Mr. President, it is within the power of the U.S. Government to take the steps we must take to give peace a chance. No one can guarantee that any steps we will take will surely lead to freedom from nuclear war forever. But we can immensely reduce the prospect of nuclear war and give our children a fighting chance to live out their lives.

THE NATIONAL SYMBOL OF THE LIFE OF YURIY SHUKHEVYCH

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, last month, the National Executive Board of the Ukrainian Students Association of Mykola Michnowsky (TUSM) set aside a week of observance and remembrance for the life of Yuriy Shukhevych. The activities surrounding this year's observance are designed to broaden public awareness and bring moral pressure on the Soviet Union to release Mr. Shukhevych from his 32-year incarceration in Soviet Russian prisons, concentration camps, and exile.

Yuriy Shukhevych was arrested in 1948, at the age of 15, because he was born the son of Roman Shukhevych. His father was the commander-in-chief of the Ukrainian Insurgent Army (UPA) which fought on two fronts against Hitler's Germany and Stalin's Russia during World War II and continued the struggle for national liberation well into the 1950's.

Though it is not uncommon to have the relatives and friends of a leader like Roman Shukhevych jailed and tortured by opposing factions, it is unintelligible and senseless to continue his confinement so long. After all, Yuriy Shukhevych's sole "crime" is having been born the son of Roman Shukhevych. Thirty-two years, I am sure everyone will agree, is more than sufficient payment for this offense.

However, just serving a sentence for his crime is not enough for the Soviet regime. What now stands between Yuriy Shukhevych and freedom is the odious demand by the authorities to renounce his father and the Ukrainian National Liberation struggle. For his continued aversion to comply, he has been subjected to the most repulsive physical and psychological torture that the KGB has devised and only our nightmares can comprehend.

Mr. Shukhevych's case is symptomatic of Moscow's fears of open resistance to its policy denying the most elementary human and national rights. Furthermore, it is indicative of the plight of the thousands of Ukrainian political prisoners who are today languishing in Soviet concentration camps because of their resistance to the occupation and colonization of Ukraine by Soviet Russia.

Mr. President, Yuriy Shukhevych's courageous life is an inspiration to all of us to continue the fight for every group's basic, international human right to self-determination and self-sufficiency, without having that pursuit oppressed.

Let us join the Ukrainian Students Association in not only bringing moral pressure on the Soviet Union to release Mr. Shukhevych and countless others like him, but also in condemning under international law the Soviets' persistent persecution of all of its country's minority groups. We can strengthen our efforts through the ratification of the Genocide Convention.

The Genocide Convention attempts to defend the fundamental right of all national, racial, ethnic, and religious groups to live in this world without being subject to persecution. Ratification of the Genocide Convention will give Mr. Shukhevych a much-needed inspiration to continue his struggle against his senseless, prolonged oppression. His hope, to live without persecution, should not be denied.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for a quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond 10:45 a.m., during which Senators may speak for up to 5 minutes apiece.

The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. EAGLETON. Thank you, Mr. President.

THE CAREER OF SENATOR HARRY S. TRUMAN

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, next Tuesday, May 8, 1984, will mark the 100th anniversary of the birth of one of America's truly great Presidents, Harry S. Truman.

All across the Nation, Americans will be reflecting on the achievements of President Truman and his enduring legacy as a champion of freedom and democracy, both at home and abroad.

On the eve of the centennial, I will discuss the Truman Presidency here on the Senate floor as part of a series of speeches on the greatness of the man from Missouri, Harry S. Truman.

Today, however, I would like to concentrate on a period in Mr. Truman's life which I believe is of particular significance to my colleagues—the career of Senator Harry S. Truman.

The historical record tells us that Harry S. Truman was "a Senator's Senator"—well-respected and liked by his colleagues for his absolute integrity, fairness, and willingness to go to great lengths to allow other Senators to share the credit for his outstanding work. As we all know, at any time in this body, that is a rare quality.

In 1934, after serving two terms as presiding judge of Jackson County, Harry Truman entered the race for United States Senator from Missouri as an underdog. The pundits did not give him much of a chance of winning then, just as they did not give him much of a chance of winning the 1948 Presidential election against the "unbeatable" Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, of New York.

Instinctively, the Jackson County presiding judge knew that he could win if he took his case directly to the people. He won a tough primary battle by driving himself across the State, speaking to farmers and small-town Missouri at dozens of stops. In November, riding the enthusiasm generated by his feisty campaign he defeated the incumbent, Roscoe C. Patterson, by a whopping 262,000 votes. At the age of 50, Harry Truman was just beginning his Senate career.

During his first term, Senator Truman distinguished himself as a hard worker with a diligent eye for the details of legislation. He painstakingly researched the issues before his committees, wrote his own statements and speeches, and demonstrated an unswerving determination to have all the facts at his command.

These qualities won for him that all-important asset needed for the making of an effective U.S. Senator: The respect of his colleagues.

Despite outstanding work as chairman of the subcommittee that wrote the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 and outstanding work on the Transportation Act of 1940, Harry Truman entered the 1940 campaign as an underdog once again.

In fact, talk of his likely defeat was so strong within the Democratic Party that President Roosevelt offered Senator Truman a seat on the Interstate Commerce Commission as an inducement not to run.

Harry Truman, however, was nothing if not a man who believed in himself. He sought reelection in 1940, saying, "I would run even if I only got one vote—mine." He reiterated his firm position when he met with a group of friends in St. Louis on the eve of the 1940 campaign. He said, "I'm going to file. I wouldn't have the guts to go home and face my people if I ran out."

Initially, he lacked even the money to buy the stamps for letters asking for support. But, once again, his unshakable belief in himself prevailed, and Senator Truman won the election. Nevertheless, 1940 was a year of personal disappointment. Despite being reelected to the U.S. Senate, Harry Truman could not prevent his 88-year-old mother's farm in Grandview from being sold out from under her. His political opponents foreclosed on her as a way of hurting him in the campaign, but, he said years later, "Everybody in Missouri had a mortgage, so it didn't do me a bit of harm." Once again, Harry Truman suffered the hard knocks of political life. This time, however, the effects were felt by one of the people he was closest to.

It was in his second term that Senator Truman developed the national reputation which led to his selection as President Roosevelt's running mate in 1944.

The famous Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program grew out of a personal investigation Senator Truman performed after being told by Missourians that equipment was being ruined at Fort Leonard Wood from being left out in the rain and snow to rust.

Plunging into the task he set for himself, as was his usual practice, he drove over 30,000 miles in his own car not only to Fort Leonard Wood, but also to military facilities in Maryland, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Tennessee, South Carolina, and Georgia. Almost everywhere he found wasteful practices that were weakening the Nation's defense and squandering taxpayers' money.

In February 1941, he introduced a resolution calling for further investigation into the pattern of personal and geographical favoritism he had discovered.

Ever the diligent student of history, Harry Truman got the only remaining copy of the hearings of the Civil War Committee on the Conduct of the War.

Before asking for the establishment of a special committee to investigate America's defense in the 1940's, Senator Truman studied the proceedings of a congressional committee which 80 years previously had done an especially bad job of wartime oversight.

The Civil War Committee's sensational investigations included testimony from President Lincoln over wild rumors of anti-Union activities by Mrs. Lincoln. And, it actually meddled in war strategy.

Senator Truman had no such committee in mind, later saying, "Lee said that committee was worth two divisions to him."

As a former Missouri presiding judge, Harry Truman was interested in the unglamorous, but highly fruitful examination of the contracting procedures, billing procedures, and labor practices used in the defense effort. There was no one better qualified in the U.S. Senate than Harry Truman. The principles of public contracting were fundamentally the same, whether for the construction of defense plants or for roads and bridges for Jackson County.

One of Senator Truman's key concerns was the practical exclusion of defense contracts to small manufacturers.

"The little manufacturer, the little contractor, and the little machine shop have been left entirely out in the cold," Mr. Truman said in a 1941 Senate floor speech. "The policy seems to make the big man bigger and to put the little man completely out of business."

He also pointed out that "I am reliably informed that from 70 to 90 percent of the contracts let have been concentrated in an area smaller than England."

In early 1941, the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program was organized, with Senator Truman as its chairman. The Senate leadership did not think the committee would amount to much; all except one of the six members appointed to serve with Mr. Truman were junior Senators. Its initial budget was just $15,000.

But, as at so many other times in his career, the unassuming Harry Truman was underestimated.

On April 25, 1943, Richard Stokes wrote in the conservative Washington Star:

> The committee's streamlined efficiency is due to compulsion as well as choice. It has a staff of only 30, of whom 15 are stenographers. To examine a program rising toward $300 billions, it has received aggregate appropriations of $200,000 as against $570,000 lavished on the Dies Committee. * * *
> The committee was Truman's own idea and at the beginning no one took it seriously but himself. The powers that be thought that a bit of humoring was owed to a faithful New Dealer * * * It is generally thought that the appointment of freshman Senators of small influence reflected the slight esteem in which the committee was first held.

In Truman's view, the appointment of rookie Senators to the Committee did him a favor. He found himself associated with youthful, energetic and ambitious men who in many cases still had their spurs to win.

Truman's style as chairman was to share the credit for the committee's successes, even to the point of appointing subchairmen to examine various aspects of the defense program; to achieve bipartisanship through complete unanimity on all committee reports; and to scrupulously avoid sensational publicity or unfair accusations against anyone.

On its first major investigation into practices employed in the construction of Army camps, the Truman committee, as the press had dubbed it, saved the taxpayers $250 million.

From 1941–45, the committee saved the taxpayers an estimated $15 billion.

Early on in the process, the Nation discovered Harry Truman. He became a national figure. Marquis Childs of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch Washington bureau wrote on November 2, 1942, that among the Members of the Senate, Harry Truman had become "one of the most useful and at the same time one of the most forthright of the ninety-six."

Although he had become one of the most valuable civilians the United States had in its service, Harry Truman, serving on his last duty as a full colonel in the Field Artillery Reserve, went to Gen. George A. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, to offer his service in uniform.

Walter Hehmeyer, the committee publicity man, told Truman biographer Jonathan Daniels of the conversation Senator Truman and General Marshall had early in the war. The Senator did not like the general's answer, Hehmeyer recalled. Hehmeyer recounted the exchange as follows:

Senator Truman, you've got a big job to do right up there at the Capitol, with your Investigating Committee. Besides, Senator, this is a young man's war. We don't need any old stiffs like you.

"I am younger than you, General Marshall," the Senator replied.

Yes, but I'm a general and you'd be only a colonel. You stay right where you are.

His hope of fighting in both World Wars dashed, Senator Truman continued in his outstanding work as chairman of the committee.

In Daniels' view,

Perhaps the main accomplishment of the committee was not the fine result it obtained in the war effort in better organization or greater production in aluminum or rubber, steel, or planes. Its lasting product was the example it provided "of the results that can be obtained by making a factual investigation with a good staff." It demonstrated the effectiveness of investigation by a committee of Congress.

Harry Truman once advised me that "history isn't dead; history is reality." All of us who serve in the U.S. Senate in 1984 could learn some valuable lessons in the field of congressional oversight by studying the work of the Truman committee.

The national reputation Harry Truman developed from the committee's work for honesty, integrity, fairmindedness, straightforward speech, and gritty determination was being watched closely by President Roosevelt.

Typical of the kind of national exposure Senator Truman was receiving was this comment in the Washington Star on April 16, 1944:

Inherently democratic, congenial and affable, scrupulously fair * * * his activities as chairman of the Senate Committee Investigating the Defense Program have won him the enmity of those he has investigated and the gratitude of millions of taxpayers * * * No flowing tie, no pomposity, no meaningless eloquence; just a regular guy by any standard. But the finest investment the taxpayers have in Washington today.

Despite the fact that his name had become well known across America, Senator Truman resisted the coaxing of Democratic Party leaders, who were in search of a 1944 running mate for F.D.R.

On the second day of the Democratic National Convention, Mr. Truman was sitting near the telephone in the room of National Committeeman Robert E. Hannegan of St. Louis when the President called.

Mr. Truman had just told Hannegan that he could not believe F.D.R. wanted him as a running mate. Hannegan held the phone so that Mr. Truman and others in the room could hear the President ask if the Senator from Missouri had agreed to accept the Vice-Presidency yet.

According to Truman biographer Jonathan Daniels:

Hannegan said, "No. He hasn't agreed yet." Roosevelt replied loud enough for Truman to hear him. "Well, tell him if he wants to break up the Democratic Party in the middle of a war, that's his responsibility."

Hannegan turned to Truman. "Now what do you say?"

"My God," said Truman.

After the reelection of President Roosevelt against Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, Harry Truman was to serve as Vice President for just 82 days before the President's death.

Characteristically, he was humble about assuming the Presidency. One of his first acts was to ask members of the White House press corps to pray for him.

But, he also knew that the American people, Allied fighting men around the world, and perhaps most importantly, our enemies, had to understand quickly that firm and capable hands were guiding the most powerful Nation on Earth.

To convey this impression, Harry Truman did not have to "act Presidential," or be photographed "doing Presidential things." He merely had to be himself.

Throughout his life, whether as a timekeeper on a Missouri railroad, as an artillery officer leading his men in combat, as a county judge, U.S. Senator, or President, Harry Truman led by example.

His strength, his vision, his dignity, naturally came through.

That is the essence of leadership. There is no doubt that the world was extremely fortunate to have Harry Truman as President of the United States at one of the most crucial and dangerous periods in history.

I have spoken today on the mark Harry Truman made in this Chamber to remind my colleagues of the achievements of one of America's great Senators.

In his centennial year, I urge all my Senate colleagues to study the life and accomplishments of Mr. Truman. There is much to learn that can be applied to our work here in the Senate. I can also promise a great deal of enjoyment in becoming reacquainted with Harry Truman, the man.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT ON THE HOLLINGS AMENDMENT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I conferred with the minority leader on this subject, and he brought to my attention a request by the Senator from Mississippi in respect to the sequence of speakers after the introduction of the Hollings amendment or after debate on the Hollings amendment has begun, whether the amendment has been laid before the Senate or not.

The distinguished Senator from Mississippi, of course, is the ranking minority member on the Armed Services Committee. He is a former chairman of the Armed Services Committee. He is beloved on all sides.

Without any hesitation, I was happy to clear this request.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Senate commences debate on the Hollings amendment, the Senator from Mississippi, Mr. STENNIS, be next recognized after the principal author of the amendment, Senator HOLLINGS, for the purpose of debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of Mr. STENNIS and myself, I thank the distinguished majority leader for his accommodation in this matter.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S TRIP TO MAINLAND CHINA

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, finally, President Reagan's trip to mainland China has ended and, by now, he is on his way home or, safely again, home in the White House.

If one measures the fact that he was able to establish a basis to sell a number of nuclear electric plants to that country as a success, then I guess the trip could be called that. It may, at least, be a small start at giving electricity to 1 billion people, most of whom do not know what it is; and it can help to prove that American made nuclear reactors are safe and will work, something many American citizens are not willing to admit.

Another thing I was grateful for was the fact that he did not agree with Red China to sell them weapons or even advanced technology to help make them.

I believe the President understands fully that military aid to Communist China would be harmful to our national interests because it could threaten our allies in Asia, arouse increased Soviet military preparations, and drain the United States of many billions of dollars of financial resources and technology needed elsewhere.

His attitude toward Taiwan, while quite a bit changed, in fact, completely changed from the rhetoric he used during his Presidential campaign, remains what he put it at a few years ago, but, I would hope that he would soften just a bit and allow Taiwan to buy some defensive aircraft that they badly need should the mainland ever attempt to take them by force.

There is no way, in my opinion, that the mainland forces can cross the channel while Taiwan has a technological superiority and, what they need to achieve this and keep it, are a good number of our modern interceptor aircraft.

Mr. President, I think the rather shameful demonstration of Red China's willingness to censor the remarks made by the President to her people should indicate to the President, and anybody else who does not quite grasp the full meaning of Communist government, that they do not want their people to learn, they want to keep from them the words of encouragement that the President made in what I consider to be an exemplary speech but, that is the way those people operate. And, some day, I hope our State Department and our executive branch will realize that we are not playing with ordinary people and, when having learned that, we can begin to conduct ourselves more wisely.

We might even realize that the so-called normalization of relations with Communist China has caused the United States more problems than it would have faced had we not played the China card. If Red China had remained allied with the Soviet Union, political turmoil between the two ideological competitors may have created serious instability within the Communist camp.

Our economic and diplomatic ties with Red China did not prevent the Soviet Union from invading Afghanistan, nor from acquiring basing rights in Vietnam. Nor have they slowed down the growth of Soviet military forces.

Instead of playing the China card, the greatest priority should be given to strengthen U.S. relations with the non-Communist, private enterprise nations of Asia and the Pacific, which includes the Republic of China on Taiwan.

TRIBUTE TO KEN MURPHY

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I would like to take the floor briefly this morning to express my appreciation for the work that Ken Murphy has done as staff director of the Environmental and Energy Study Conference. There are two accomplishments of his tenure which I particularly want to mention.

First, before Ken came to the Environmental and Energy Study Conference, the conference had established a reputation for developing the soundest, nonpartisan material available on energy and environmental matters. However, during these last 3 years, unusually partisan issues have developed involving environmental policies, personalities, and budgets. Throughout this period, with Ken's hand at the helm, the Environmental and Energy Study Conference's nonpartisan reputation has been both preserved and enhanced.

Second, during this same period, because of changes in the rules of the other body, a major reorganization of the conference has been necessary. Under weaker leadership, these changes could have disrupted, and even destroyed, the organization. Throughout this difficult process, however, Ken's personnel and administrative skills have made the Environmental and Energy Study Conference even a stronger organization.

He moves now to the executive directorship of the Environmental and Energy Study Institute. Establishing this new organization will be a major new personal and professional challenge at which I am confident Ken will succeed.

APPOINTMENT BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUGAR). The Chair on behalf of the Vice President appoints the Senator from Florida (Mrs. HAWKINS) as a member of the Senate delegation to the Mexico-United States Interparliamentary Group.

DEATH OF ANSEL ADAMS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, with the death of Ansel Adams last week, America lost one of the greatest conservationists and greatest artists in its history. A renowned photographer, Ansel Adams used his incomparable artistic and photographic talent to immortalize the subjects he loved best—the landscapes of the American West.

For half a century his work has been a reminder to us all of the critical need to preserve our most precious natural resources. Whenever conservation legislation was under consideration by the Congress, Ansel's presence and his photographs would bear eloquent witness to the tremendous importance of the issues at stake in our deliberations. Most of all, he taught us that America the beautiful must never be permitted to become America the exploited.

Ansel Adams' twin legacies to the future are his extraordinary art and his spirited commitment to conservation. He has been an inspiration to all of us who had the privilege to know him personally, to millions more across America who love the beauty of this land, and to anyone in any land who ever stood in awe before the natural majesty of his work.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that editorials and articles from the Washington Post, the New York Times, and the Los Angeles Times, on the life and work of Ansel Adams may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANSEL ADAMS

It was, finally, the light—not simply the monumental face of the Half Dome at Yosemite, or the great fact of Mount McKinley itself looming over Wonder Lake in his famous photograph, but the light that Ansel Adams saw, captured and presented to the world in thousands of magisterial photographs. These photographs earned him fame and fortune and, more important, admiration and enduring respect. He was an artist of the beautiful, in Hawthorne's phrase, and the source of his artistry lies in the light (and the reverence) with which he imbued the wild landscapes he so indefatigably photographed. The wonders of nature may speak for themselves, and the light is there for all to see; but the essence of the artist lies in the vision that is uniquely his own. Mr. Adams's vision was luminous. Light emanates—gloriously, mysteriously—from those silent, unpeopled, unforgettable images of vastness and wildness.

There is no art without craft, and the meticulous craftsmanship of Ansel Adams, whose life was 82 years long, died with him last Sunday. But what he saw and seized and made uniquely his own—the single moment of a particular hour on one ordinary day—is now part of history, part of the record, part of our legacy because he made the ordinary extraordinary and caught it on a simple piece of light-sensitive paper.

DEATH OF AN ARTIST

Ansel Adams, dead at 82, was the self-commissioned portrait photographer for the western wilderness who did far more than help elevate photography from the level of hobby to the level of high art. His portraits of Yosemite National Park and the New Mexico wilderness and the rugged California coast are gifts of beauty second only to the real thing. But in his later years his most important work lay in doing all that one man could to make sure that the real thing was not trampled in the name of progress.

Adams left 50,000 photographs to be cherished, stark and fragile fragments snatched from reality, as disembodied as poetry; he came, in fact, to call himself a "photo-poet." His reputation was that of a patient artist, standing with his tripod for hours or even days waiting for the perfect light, the perfect formation of clouds. Yet one of his most spectacular photographs, which captured the moon rising over Hernandez, N.M., was a chance work of art created by the side of a road in the panic of a missing exposure meter, a balky tripod, a vanishing sun that, in the end, left him 15 seconds to compose.

In recent years he combined politics with photography, a voice not in the wilderness but of the wilderness, battling not always gently the encroachment of blind development on his favorite parts of the world—Big Sur, endangered stretches of the coastline, Yosemite Valley. One of his last crusades was against a plan to fly sightseers over Yosemite, a plan he feared would shatter what was left of the silence of the High Sierra meadows.

Ansel Adams also leaves thousands of grateful students who flocked to his home in the Carmel Highlands to study in his huge darkroom and to hike with him into the wilderness. Some marveled at what they saw as the willingness of a successful photographer to tell everything he knew, to give away his secrets.

He insisted that he had no secrets. In the most technical and mechanical sense, that may be true, but a colleague who saw him at a reception in his home overlooking the ocean a few weeks before his death says he did. As the sun dipped toward the ocean, Adams scrambled to his huge picture window, urging his guests to join him to watch the setting sun and stood motionless and enthralled by an event he had watched for 82 years without any discernible failure of enthusiasm. That was the secret.

ANSEL ADAMS, PHOTOGRAPHER AND ENVIRONMENTALIST, DIES AT 82

(By Dale Russakoff)

Ansel Adams, the photographer who celebrated the majesty of nature through panoramic pictures of the virgin American West and a lifetime of environmental activism, died of a heart ailment Sunday at a hospital near his home in Carmel, Calif. He was 82.

Renowned for his twin commitment to art and activism, Mr. Adams worked at both causes until the end. He had recently finished his autobiography and was at work on a series of technical books on photography. On the day he died, aides said he dictated notes on his concern over threats to the natural environment.

Mr. Adams was one of a small group of 20th-century photographers credited with elevating his field from a hobby to an art form. He took his first snapshot at age 14 in Yosemite National Park with a Kodak Brownie box camera and spent much of the rest of his life capturing on film the contrasting light, beauty, and power of the American wilderness.

"We will remember him more than anything else for his vision of the western landscape," said John Szarkowski, director of the department of photography at the Museum of Modern Art in New York City. "He understood that the earth was not just a sculpture, it was an event, constantly changing. That's what he explained in his pictures, which is why they were so moving and why they gave us another sense of what the world was about."

Szarkowski and others said it was Mr. Adam's creative energy and intensity, as much as his artistic achievement, that distinguished him. Even in his later years, friends said, it took two, full-time darkroom assistants working in shifts to keep up with him.

Mr. Adams' heralded photographs of Kings Canyon and his personal lobbying efforts as a director of the Sierra Club in the 1930s helped persuade Congress to preserve the 455,000-acre wilderness area as a national park.

For the past three years, he wrote a letter a day to congressmen and newspapers decrying the Reagan administration's environmental policies, which he once branded "the Pearl Harbor of our American earth." He often said that only his Pacemaker and his fight against Reagan and former Interior Secretary James G. Watt kept him alive.

Last summer, after Mr. Adams told Playboy in an interview, "I hate Reagan," the president invited the photographer-conservationist to meet with him. After a 50-minute session at a Los Angeles hotel, Mr. Adams emerged to call the president "sincerely cordial" but unconvincing. Borrowing a phrase from Oscar Wilde, he said Reagan "knows the cost of everything and the value of nothing."

"Ansel believed everyone had a responsibility in the larger world, that an artist couldn't just withdraw," said William A. Turnage, executive director of the Wilderness Society and a close friend and former business manager of Mr. Adams. "He became one of the most important environmentalists of the century. His work had a tremendous impact on the way Americans understand nature."

Born in San Francisco Feb. 20, 1902, Mr. Adams had his first encounter with the raw power of nature at age 4, when the great earthquake of 1906 hurled him into a brick wall, leaving him with a broken nose that later became one of his best-known trademarks, along with his brushy white beard, tall presence and Stetson hat.

He embarked first on a career as a concert pianist, with photography as a hobby, but committed himself full time to the camera and the serious study of light, form and nature in 1930. He dated this interest to 1915, when at age 13, he went daily to see the Armory Show, the revolutionary modern art exhibit of impressionists and surrealists, at the San Francisco World's Fair.

Mr. Adams returned to Yosemite each summer after snapping his first picture there. In 1919, he joined the Sierra Club, and later became caretaker of its Yosemite Valley headquarters. He became an expert mountaineer in pursuit of pictures of the vast, rocky expanse.

"The excitement of Yosemite became strong and filtered through me into some esthetic experiences, which probably were supported by similar experience I was having in music study," Mr. Adams recalled in a 1975 interview.

Mr. Adams' early works were impressionistic and soft-focus, but under the influence of photographer Paul Strand, whom he met in 1930 in Taos, N.M., he moved toward conveying sharp, stark details. In 1932, he joined Edward Weston, Imogen Cunningham and others to form Group f/64, whose name refers to the small lens opening of a camera, symbolizing the depth of field and sharpness of image that Mr. Adams and his compatriots sought.

In 1935, Mr. Adams attracted the attention of the renowned photographer, Alfred Stieglitz, with his first technical manual, "Making a Photograph." The next year, Stieglitz sponsored a one-man show of Mr. Adams' work titled "An American Place," at his New York City gallery.

Over the years, Mr. Adams helped develop the concept of "equivalents," which he described as the link between the spiritual excitement that a photographer feels about his subject and the image he creates of it. He said this allows the spectator to create his own "equivalent."

Mr. Adams also was a proponent of the concept of "visualization," which frowns on retouching, requiring an artist to see and feel the final print of a picture before releasing the camera shutter. He developed the break-through "zone system" of film exposure to control specific textures and contrasts in each part of a panoramic vista.

A prolific writer, Mr. Adams published a series of technical works, known as the Basic Photo Books, and numerous collections of his photographs, of which the most famous include the luminous and haunting "Moonrise, Hernandez, New Mexico," and the mystical "Monolith, the Face of Half Dome."

More than 1 million copies of his books have been sold, and more than 5,000 students have attended his workshops. He is also well known for "Born Free and Equal," a photographic record of the lives of thousands of Japanese Americans interned at the Manzanar Relocation Center in California during World War II.

Mr. Adams helped launch the first department of photography as a fine art at the Museum of Modern Art in 1940, and in 1946 he founded the first academic department of photography at what was then the California School of Fine Arts.

On Sunday, Swiss pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy performed at Mr. Adams' home overlooking the spectacular Big Sur coastline in a private concert scheduled months earlier. He then visited Mr. Adams at Monterey's Community Hospital, where the photographer had been confined since Friday, and gave his friend a tape of his latest recording of Brahms.

Mr. Adams spent the day reading newspapers and a mystery book, dictating his thoughts on photography and conservation into his tape recorder and listening to Ashkenazy's tape on his Walk-Man, said Mary Alinder, Mr. Adams' chief assistant and editor of his autobiography.

"He was Ansel right to the end," Alinder said.

Survivors include his wife of 56 years, the former Virginia Best, of Carmel; a daughter, Anne Helms, and a son, Dr. Michael Adams.

MEMORIES OF A.A.: DINING ON APPETIZERS AND DRIVING THE CADDY

(By Tom Zito)

Those who were lucky enough to have known Ansel Adams will hardly remember him for his photographs, as monumental as they were. That's just it; the photos were monumental and A.A., as he was affectionately known, wasn't. He was the first person in the world to admit absolute bafflement over why his pictures had become so pricey and, beyond all that, he was hardly the sort who liked to sit around and talk photography. Unlike most people who have become famous for some body of work, A.A. was well aware that his life was not defined by his work.

I first met A.A. some 10 or 15 years ago. The occasion was an exhibition of his photographs at the Corcoran, and I, the young reporter, had been assigned to interview him. I was immediately struck by his joviality: he dressed in a Stetson and string tie, he loved to laugh, there was always a mischievous twinkle in his eye, and he was quite able to drink me under the table. I recall him interrupting me after about five minutes of conversation and saying, "Please don't call me Mr. Adams; it makes me feel old and I don't."

Generally in journalism, interviews are completed and all contact is lost with the subject—hardly the case with A.A. He called me the day after my interview had run and invited me to dinner. He had five appetizers, which was always his favorite way to dine out, drank several vodkas and regaled me with tales about getting his nose broken in the San Francisco earthquake, hauling dead bodies down from the High Sierras on the backs of mules, and convincing his father to let him take a year off during grammer school, so he could attend the Centenary Exhibition. I think we spent not one moment talking about photography.

He told me he liked me. The great difference with A.A. was that he meant it. He and his wife Virginia would regularly invite me out to visit them in Carmel. The house was big and warm and modern, and sat up on a point overlooking the Pacific where each spring the whales would migrate past. A.A. would sit there and look at the whales, or hop into his white Cadillac and drive over to Point Lobos to take a little constitutional.

He was a real technology junkie; he said he liked the Caddy because it dimmed its own high beams, turned on the interior lights when your hand touched the outside door handle and had a little onboard computer that told you how many miles you could go before you needed to stop for gas. He said one of the great benefits of being a senior citizen was that he got into parks like Point Lobos for free.

He'd park the Caddy and wander around the wooded hills of Point Lobos. The place was always full of people lugging around view cameras, and A.A. would jokingly go up to them and say, "Haven't you heard about 35 millimeters?" You could see their faces get bent out of shape. They suspected that this was the great Ansel Adams, who worked only with view cameras, but they were too embarrassed to ask and so they'd just stare and wonder and A.A. would trot off over the hill and laugh.

Several years later I was to write a long, detailed piece about A.A., for which I went out to Carmel and was given complete run of the house. A.A. and Virginia opened up closets and drawers and said, "Well, if you really want to do this you'd better go through this stuff. Don't be bashful." I had never had a subject provide such access. I remember quizzing A.A. about his seeming abandonment of privacy, and he said, "I'm 75 years old; why would I want to hide anything?"

He always seemed to display this sort of elfin, child-like quality: a blending of the absolutely forthright and the sublimely humorous. A few years back when he was making an official portrait of Jimmy Carter—for which he used his Horsemann view camera—he said, "We're putting the Carter before the Horsemann."

There were some wonderful times at the house in Carmel. You were never quite sure who would show up for dinner. One night Georgia O'Keeffe came by and she and A.A. went back and forth about who was the better mountain climber. Sometimes at night A.A. would sit down at the piano and play; he'd studied as a boy to be a concert pianist but abandoned all that for the camera. Later his hands became withered by arthritis and it was difficult for him to play, but if you goaded him enough he'd eventually sit down and the touch and the ear were still absolutely there. He'd always finish up with a piece he had composed for left hand and orange, that involved rolling an orange around the treble keys with a surprising degree of melody.

A.A. transposed some of his alacrity at the piano to another keyboard, that of his IBM Displaywriter, a word processor that he would sit at for hours each day and bat out chapter and verse for an autobiography he was well into. Most recently he had been anticipating a visit from Steve Jobs, the young chairman of the board of Apple Computer. Jobs was scheduled to bring A.A. one of Apple's new MacIntosh computers, which had captivated A.A.'s interest because of its remarkable ability to create graphics. You knew that A.A. probably wanted to figure out some way to get a black and white image up on the screen and then fiddle around with it.

He was always fascinated with this sort of technological wizardry. He did some of the very early testing of Polaroid film (Ed Land was an old friend of his), and also made some fascinating home movies with the Polavision system. The first time I met him he'd just gotten ahold of one of Kodak's new Instamatic cameras, and he was snapping away with wild abandon, just like the kid he really was.

Years later, when I finally took him up on his invitation to visit the photography workshop he conducted each year in Yosemite, he was fooling around with an SX-70. Here were all these students trying to learn the intricacies of the view camera and the zone system and there was A.A. firing away with his Polaroid. He stuck me in front of Half Dome and made a little snapshot. Then he handed it to me and said, "Hang on to this; with the way the prices of my pictures are going this will be worth $1,000 soon." And he laughed.

I saw A.A. in Virginia very recently and he seemed well and happy. He said he had been working on two major projects. One had been to get rid of James Watt, and he was quite pleased with that endeavor.

The other one is beyond A.A. now. Several months back he had gotten a call from Ronald Reagan, who had requested an audience. It seemed that the president was pretty tired of A.A.'s verbal assault in the press, and wanted to know why A.A. was so critical of him. So the octogenarian went to visit the septuagenarian in some California hotel room, and basically told him that he just didn't like his politics.

"It was like I was dealing with somebody who had just landed from Mars," A.A. said. "So now I've got to put my energy into getting a different president elected."

He was always ready for a battle. And always willing to turn the other cheek. And he will be missed long after the last of his prints have faded away—except that he made such damned good ones that some of them will probably last forever.

MASTER OF THE CAMERA, POET OF THE LANDSCAPE, PROTECTOR OF THE WILD

(By Paul Richard)

At photography—and politics—Ansel Adams was a master.

When Adams came to Washington, as he often did, Adams would dress up like the Old Man of the Mountains. He'd wear a string tie and a Stetson. He'd scratch his grizzled beard, grin his impish grin, snap his red suspenders—and go about his business with implacable intensity. Adams had two missions here. One was selling photographs. The other was pressuring politicians into helping him preserve the wild landscapes that he loved.

At both of his two missions, Adams, 82—whose heart gave out on Sunday night—was enormously successful. He was the grand old man of the environmental movement. His photographs appear in nearly a million books. He had countless exhibitions and honors. He was the best loved and best known of American photographers.

Adams was in some ways a 19th-century artist who flourished in the 20th. The technically impeccable, usually unpeopled, photographs that brought him fame blend two different traditions of American landscape art, one factual, one fanciful.

Adams was not the first good artist to go into the mountains. The western landscapes he portrayed had been portrayed in previous century by photographers and painters. The painters leaned toward poetry, the photographers toward prose. They taught him different things.

"Not everybody trusts paintings," said Adams, "but people believe photographs."

His photographs are believable in part because their details seem absolutely right. When he shows a still-young aspen tree growing in New Mexico, one can take a magnifying glass and study ever leaf. When he shows a field of stones, one can see the texture of every rounded rock.

Adams as a lobbyist was comparably effective. His pictures of California's Kings Canyon, hand-carried to Washington in the 1930s, helped lead to the creation of the 455,000-acre Kings Canyon National Park. Adams, a Sierra Club director from 1936 to 1970, worked over every president from Franklin Roosevelt to Ronald Reagan. He made phone calls, he wrote letters. When Interior Secretary James Watt was in office, Adams would dash off a letter of complaint—to newspapers and congressmen—almost every day.

"You should see him lobby," said his friend Bill Turnage in 1979. After seven years as Adams's business manager, Turnage had become the head of the Wilderness Society. When Adams came to Washington, they would work the Hill together.

"We run this Abbott and Costello act," said Turnage. "I let Ansel start. He speaks about the spirit, then I hit them with the details."

Adams the photographer took a similar approach. The majesty of landscape, and its minutiae, too—the spirit and the details—dance together beautifully in his finest works of art.

He was a masterful technician. He invented the "zone system" of exposure, he taught 5,000 students, and his printing sets a standard that has rarely been surpassed. When, in 1932, Adams, Edward Weston, Imogen Cunningham and Willard Van Dyke began to work together, they called themselves "Group f64," in honor of the smallest lens opening then available. They liked f64 because it offered the greatest depth of field and the sharpest possible focus. "A lot of younger American photographers," observes John Szarkowski of the Museum of Modern Art, "have no clue about how much they've been influenced by Ansel's rigorous sense of obligation to using the machine well."

The scientist in Adams insisted on the precise replication of the smallest detail. But he was a poet, too.

"Ansel Adams was complaining about the clouds when I first met him," wrote David Brower, then director of the Sierra Club. "They weren't yet what they ought to be, but he thought they would get better."

The early western photographers took nature as they found it. C.L. Weed, C.E. Watkins, E.J. Muybridge and their colleagues were rock-hard men who left us rock-hard pictures. They cared little for the arty. They were scientists, explorers. They rode mules to Yosemite. Their cameras were cumbersome, their lenses were handground. they hauled carboys of acid and fragile glass plates up the rocky slopes. They did not sleep in lodges, but outside, on the ground. Their pictures call to mind the pictures the first astronauts took from outer space. They brought back to the cities accurate, convincing images of marvels rarely glimpsed before.

Bierstadt and Moran and other 19th-century painters of the mountains cared less for reportage than they did for drama. Their pictures feel like operas. In the wilds they made sketches that were relatively straightforward. But when they returned to New York, to their studios, they pulled out all the stops. Their lakes are just a bit too clear, their peaks a bit too high. They liked to dress their mountains with waterfalls and rainbows, sunsets, stormy clouds, little bears and deer. Their pictures aren't believable. They are too gaudy, too romantic.

Like Bierstadt, like Moran, Adams often stretched the truth a bit. He wasn't always a "straight" photographer. He once admitted that he dodged the crosses in the foreground of his "Moonrise, Hernandez, New Mexico," his most famous image, to make them just a bit lighter and more ghostly.

As a young man in California, Adams studied to be a pianist. The day he died, his family and friends gathered in his Carmel, Calif., home to hear a recital by his favorite pianist, Vladimir Ashkenazy. When he talked about the aims that guided him in art, Adams often spoke of seeking "spiritual resonance, as moving and profound as great music." When one looks at Adams' photographs, one can almost feel him there behind the camera, a maestro in control, conducting all those boiling clouds and those shafts of sunlight that seem to shoot, on cue, through the stormy clouds.

"Purism, in the sense of rigid abstention from any control, is ridiculous," he wrote. "A great photograph is a full expression of what one feels about what is being photographed in the deepest sense, and is, thereby, a true expression of what one feels about life in its entirety."

Washington's Harry Lunn, the dealer who helped make Adams rich, used to say, "there are two markets for photography—there is one for Ansel Adams, and one for everybody else."

A single print of "Moonrise" sold recently for $71,500. It wasn't a unique object; its edition had been "limited" to 942. Suppose each "Moonrise" print is worth that much. That means that the artist, with one click of his shutter in 1941, had made a golden goose whose golden eggs today have a combined market value of more than $67 million.

The most popular American artists—Norman Rockwell, Andrew Wyeth, and Adams, too—tend to lend their art a quality of almost shameless emotional exaggeration. Most of Wyeth's pictures are a bit too morbid, most of Rockwell's too goody-goody. Szarkowski writes that "the natural world," as seen by Adams, "is infinitely varied in aspect . . . : its grand vistas and its microcosms are never twice the same . . . ; the landscape is not only a place, but an event."

Still, something in his pictures suggests a benign propaganda. No tin cans mar his landscapes. His elegant, authoritative, perfectly made prints show us what we wish the world outside to be. He was a true believer. His mission was to awe.

One great photographer, Paul Strand, helped show Ansel Adams the path that led to art. Another, Alfred Stieglitz, gave Adams his first one-man show 46 years ago.

"It is all very beautiful and magical here," Adams wrote Stieglitz from New Mexico many years ago. What he said of that landscape could describe the viewer's experience of Ansel Adam's art:

"The skies and land are so enormous and the detail so precise and exquisite that wherever you are you are isolated in a glowing world between the macro and the micro—where everything is sidewise under you and over you, and the clocks stopped long ago."

ANSEL ADAMS DIES AT 82; PHOTOGRAPHED THE WEST

(By John Russell)

Ansel Adams, whose majestic black-and-white landscapes of the American West and whose devotion to clarity and precision made him probably the best-known photographer in the United States, died of heart disease Sunday night at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula, near his home in Carmel, Calif. He was 82 years old.

In a career that spanned more than 50 years, Mr. Adams combined a passion for natural landscape, meticulous craftsmanship as a printmaker and a missionary's zeal for his medium to become the most widely exhibited and recognized photographer of his generation.

His photographs have been published in more than 35 books and portfolios, and they have been seen in hundreds of exhibitions, including a one-man show, "Ansel Adams and the West," at the Museum of Modern Art in New York in 1979. That same year he was the subject of a cover story in Time magazine, and in 1980 he received the Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest civilian honor.

In addition to being acclaimed for his dramatic landscapes of the American West, he was held in esteem for his contributions to photographic technology and to the recognition of photography as an art form.

Though trained as a concert pianist, Mr. Adams decided in 1930 that his true vocation was photography. Two years later, he was accomplished enough to be given a one-man show at the M. H. de Young Museum in San Francisco, and the same year he joined Edward Weston and Imogen Cunningham in forming the short-lived "Group f/64."

In the words, of Mr. Adams's friend Wallace Stegner, the founding of this group was a benchmark in the establishment of photography as a distinct and legitimate art form that would be "not a substitute brush, but a way of seeing."

From that point onward, Mr. Adams rapidly became famous not only as a photographer but also as critic, teacher, publisher of portfolios, co-founder of the department of photography at the Museum of Modern Art, longtime consultant to the Polaroid Corporation and spokesman for a heroic and yet plainspoken approach to photography.

BOOK CONSECRATED REPUTATION

The publication by the New York Graphic Society in 1975 of his book "Ansel Adams: Images 1923–1974" consecrated his reputation as a photographer whose work appealed to the widest possible public for its evocation of an American scene that was still without blemish.

Ansel Adams was born in San Francisco on Feb. 20, 1902, of New England descent. The next year, his parents moved to a house overlooking the Golden Gate, where he formed his life-long taste for a spectacular natural scene.

In 1916, while on a visit to the Yosemite Valley, he made his first photographs with a box Brownie. Yosemite had so fired his imagination that for four summers running he took a job as caretaker for a lodge owned by the Sierra Club, of which he was later to be a director for 37 years.

In 1927, while earning his living as a professional musician, Mr. Adams acquired a patron in San Francisco by the name of Albert Bender. Mr. Bender took him to Taos, N.M., where, during visits over the next few years, he made friends with Robinson Jeffers, John Marin and Georgia O'Keeffe. As his biographer, Nancy Newhall, said later, "Taos was his Paris and his Rome." His first book, "Taos Pueblo," with a text by Mary Astin, came out in 1930.

Precision and sharp focus were fundamental to good photography, as Mr. Adams saw it, and as a born teacher he neglected no opportunity to make his views felt. He wrote for the Sierra Club Bulletin, he published a series of books on the basics of photography, he ran workshops and seminars in the Yosemite Valley, he taught and lectured at the Museum of Modern Art and colleges all along the Pacific Coast, and he published his work in portfolio form.

As his reputation grew, he was encouraged to travel throughout the United States in order to bring his characteristic clarity and his sense of unforced grandeur to studies of national parks and remote places of every kind.

In the 1930's he made extended trips with his fellow photographer Mr. Weston to the High Sierra, and with O'Keeffe and David McAlpin to the Southwest. In 1933, he met Alfred Stieglitz, and in 1936 Stieglitz gave Mr. Adams a one-man show at his New York City gallery, "An American Place." This was the first one-man show of photography that Stieglitz had put on since Paul Strand was similarly honored two decades earlier.

DIRECTED A PAGEANT

In 1940, Mr. Adams directed "A Pageant of Photography" as part of the Golden Gate Exposition in San Francisco, and took part with Mr. Weston and Dorothea Lange in a photographic forum organized by U.S. Camera in the Yosemite Valley. Also in 1940, he helped Beaumont Newhall and Mr. McAlpin to found the department of photography at the Museum of Modern Art.

At the outbreak of World War II, he became a consultant to the Armed Services. But, ever-sensitive to the plight of minority groups, he published in 1944 "Born Free and Equal," a photographic survey of a California camp in which Japanese-Americans were interned at the outbreak of war with Japan.

After the war, Mr. Adams three times received Guggenheim Fellowships, which enabled him to record national parks and monuments in Alaska, Hawaii and elsewhere. In many writings in the postwar period, he stressed the importance of vision, as distinct from gadgetry. "A picture," he liked to say, "is only a collection of brightnesses," and, he would add, "There is nothing worse than a brilliant image of a fuzzy concept."

FELLOW OF AMERICAN ACADEMY

Films about Mr. Adams and his work were directed by David Myers in 1957 and by Robert Katz in 1959. In 1964, Mrs. Newhall published a study of him (called "The Eloquent Light," after the 1963 show of that name that Mr. Adams had just had at the de Young Museum in San Francisco). In 1967 he and Mrs. Newhall published a book called "Fiat Lux," to mark the centenary of the University of California, and in 1974 he was honored by a retrospective exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum in New York.

In 1966, Mr. Adams was made a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and in 1970 he was made a Chubb Fellow at Yale University. He received honorary doctorates from Occidental College, the University of Massachusetts and Yale University.

In 1928, Mr. Adams married Virginia Best. After many years in Yosemite, the Adamses moved in 1962 to Carmel.

He is survived by his wife; two children, Dr. Michael Adams of Fresno, Calif., and Anne Adams Helms of Redwood City, Calif., and five grandchildren. Funeral services will be private.

ADAMS: HIS LEGACY ENDURES

(By Gene Thornton)

The brilliant clarity of Ansel Adams's photographs—and especially the Western landscapes in black and white for which he is best known and most loved—is no accident. It is partly the result of a deep love of nature and a good eye, plus the natural dryness and clarity of the Western air.

But it is also the result of a technical procedure that Adams, the master photographer who died Sunday at the age of 82, developed, refined and codified in a series of instruction books and technical manuals. These began in 1935 with the publication of "Making a Photograph," and continued for the rest of his life. The most recent how-to book, "Examples, the Making of 40 Photographs," was published in 1983 by the New York Graphic Society.

At the heart of this procedure is the practice of previsualization. This means planning the photograph in advance of making the exposure, carefully studying the image in the camera's viewfinder or on the groundglass screen and making sure that every element of the picture—lighting, composition, focus and pose—is the way the photographer wants it before making the exposure. The result should be a picture that can be printed straight from the negative without any need for retouching or other manipulation of negative or print.

This type of "straight" or "pure" photography is the norm today among serious amateurs and art photographers, so much so that it may seem odd to include it among the characteristics of Adams's technique. But it was not yet the norm when Adams was starting out as a photographer in the 1920's. In those days it was customary for artistically ambitious "Pictorialist" photographers to retough the photographic image extensively to make it look more like a painting, a drawing or a print. The unassisted camera was not believed to give its operator enough control over the picture to dignify the results with the name of art.

ABANDONDED PICTORIAL APPROACH

Adams did not invent the idea of straight or pure photography. An early and eloquent spokesman was the critic Sadakichi Hartmann, in his review of the 1904 Photo-Secession exhibition at the Carnegie Institute in Pittsburgh, and early practioners included the photographers Paul Strand, Alfred Stieglitz and Edward Weston. However, after a meeting with Strand in 1930, Adams abandoned his earlier, more Pictorial approach in favor of straight photography and became its most eloquent spokesman and exponent.

He had his work cut out for him. Although the straight photographers rejected the Pictorialist practice of darkroom manipulation, they did not reject the Pictorialist claim that photography was art. On the contrary, they claimed that "pure" photography, the type they practiced, was more artistic than the type practiced by the Pictorialists. However, straight photographers had less control over their final results than Pictorialists, since they had restricted themselves to purely photographic means, and this left them open to Pictorialist charges of not being real artists.

It was in part to meet this objection that Ansel Adams developed the celebrated Zone System of photography, a method that he and such successors as Minor White and Fred Picker have written about and taught in workshops all over the country and abroad. The aim of the Zone System is to give the photographer the maximum control over his pictures making consistent with a purely photographic technique.

HOW PICTURE WILL TRANSLATE

Adams began by dividing the darks and lights of the photographic print into 10 distinct shades or zones, ranging from pure black (Zone 0) to pure white (Zone IX). Between are eight graduated shades of gray—Zone V, the middle tone, being the one that seems closest to halfway between dark and light, and Zone VI, the next lightest tone, being the tone of human skin under good light. By learning to see his subject in this scale of grays, the photographer can "previsualize" not only the subject matter and composition of his picture but also how it will translate into the darks and lights of a photographic print.

Adams used a photoelectric exposure meter to measure the brightness of the parts of a scene he was photographing, Beaumont Newhall explained in his classic "History of Photography." These calibrations were then correlated with exposure and development to enable the photographer to achieve in the final print the entire gamut of values he had previsualized.

"The control is comparable to that which a musician has over his instrument," Mr. Newhall wrote. "Guesswork is eliminated, and the photographer can concentrate on esthetic problems, secure in the knowledge that his results will not only be of technical excellence, but will embody his subjective interpretation of the scene."

This kind of planning of a picture can be done better with a camera that has a large viewing screen showing the image in considerable detail. It is also better suited to motionless subjects, such as landscapes, still lifes and portraits, rather than to action shots. Long practice, however, enabled Adams to work rapidly when necessary, and perhaps his most famous picture, "Moonlight: Hernandez, N.M.," was seen, conceived and shot in a brief moment before the moon went behind a cloud.

ASHES OVER MOUNTAIN

MONTEREY, CALIF., April 24.—The Adams family said it expects to scatter the photographer's ashes over a mountain long known informally as Mount Ansel Adams in Yosemite National Park.

"We will probably scatter the ashes on Mount Ansel Adams in Yosemite National Park," said Ann Helms, Adams's daughter. "The mountain has been called that unofficially for years, but you can't name a mountain after a living person."

Lisa Dapprich, a public affairs officer at Yosemite National Park, said that the National Park Service would allow the ashes to be scattered on the mountain. She said the mountain "will probably" be named after Adams, a process that takes five years.

ANSEL ADAMS, ARTIST WITH A CAMERA, DIES

(By Burt A. Folkart)

Ansel Adams, whose camera celebrated nature's wonders and whose life was dedicated to perpetuating the purity of its creations, has died.

Death came late Sunday at age 82 in Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula, near Big Sur, where he had lived, photographed and battled for his beloved environment.

Adams had undergone heart surgery in 1979 and was admitted to the hospital last Friday with his recurring heart problem.

Adams and Edward Weston were the two names most often mentioned when historians tried to decide when photography had moved from the realm of hobbyists and was accorded a niche in the world's art salons and museums.

ASSIGNMENTS FROM WITHIN

And it was Adams, the gruffly pleasant bear of a man, who generally is credited with taking Weston's visions of unsullied clarity and moving them from the curious to the commercial, providing through-out his lengthy and prolific career thousands of negatives and prints from the photographic assignments that he said came "from within."

At his death, more than a million books of his photographs rested on coffee tables and in libraries throughout the world.

A single Adams photograph once commanded $70,000 and, more important to Adams the man, 5,000 students had trudged to his studio and then on with him to view the scenic glories of the United States, watching as the aging master set up his tripod to capture what he said were the "images and not just records" of their world.

Like those early students who worshiped him, the photographer—whose "Moonrise, Hernandez, New Mexico," and "Moon and Half Dome, Yosemite National Park," would one day hang in museums around the world—began with a Kodak Brownie box cameras.

He was a gangly 14-year-old with a nose that tilted angularly left, the result of a falling wall during an aftershock from the 1906 San Francisco earthquake.

("The doctor said to get it straightened when I matured," Adams loved to say. "But of course, I never matured.")

A year earlier his father, a successful businessman, had given him a pass to the World's Fair in San Francisco. Adams spent most of his time at the Armory Show, the revolutionary modern art display transplanted from New York that gave prosaic America its first glimpse of the impressionists and surrealists.

He also had been exposed to a book, "In the Heart of the Sierra," part of the tutoring program his parents had designed for him when he opted to give up formal schooling.

"A-A," as he would someday be known to friends, bought a simple camera, hoping to combine a vacation trip to Yosemite, the excitement of abstract art and his blooming vicarious sentiments for the High Sierra into a new interest.

RETURNED TO YOSEMITE

At the time he was an accomplished, albeit beginning pianist and was leaning toward a career in music.

His vacation pictures fell far short of his dreams, however, and he talked a San Francisco photofinisher into a job as an apprentice.

Adams continued to return with his camera to Yosemite every summer, as he would for the next 60 years, joining the young Sierra Club and working summers as caretaker at the club's headquarters in the Yosemite Valley.

He learned to climb the mountains where climate and light varied with shifting wind and cloud patterns. He also learned of "conservation," long before it was a cocktail hour byword.

Photography remained a hobby and music a predilection at this time, but his visits to the mountains "filtered through me into some aesthetic experiences which probably were supported by similar experiences I was having in music study," he told an interviewer in 1975.

It wasn't until 1930, after trying to serve both masters, that his "own personal satisfaction with the pictures was greater than with music."

But by then the self-proclaimed "photopoet" was tired of having to deal with the popular notion of photography as "painting with a lens."

He had produced a mildly successful portfolio of the High Sierra that proved his knowledge of technique but left him personally dissatisfied.

PHOTOGRAPHY EXISTS

Still seeking the modernist vision that had first stirred him at the Armory Show, he took his pictures to master photographer Paul Strand who talked to him of organization and composition.

Years later he would say:

"I came home thinking: Now photography exists."

Within a few months he had met a fellow seeker of visual truth, Weston.

In 1932 he, Weston, Imogen Cunningham and Willard Van Dyke formed the loosely knit "Group F/64," devoted to high-contrast realism.

(The name was adopted from the smallest camera lens opening then available. It offered the greatest depth of field and therefore the sharpest images.)

Although the group would exist formally for only two years, its impact on the world's then-newest art form continues to this day.

He had married in 1928 and, to support himself, was taking on "assignments from the outside" that did not interfere with "assignments from the inside," his term for "visualization" of the trees, rocks and leaves he found and illustrated in his beloved Sierra.

He began accepting the students that would one day include the daughter of a President (Susan Ford). The alacritous acceptance of the "Group F/64" concept of crispness in pictures now brought offers from photography magazines and product manufacturers.

And now he had words for his craft:

"A photograph is not an accident, it is a concept." Pictures, he explained, were composed in the mind and only then recorded by the camera.

In 1935 he published "Making a Photograph," the first of his many manuals on technique in which he noted that the making of many negatives in the hope that one will be good "is fatal to serious results."

His reputation was growing and in 1936 Alfred Stieglitz, perhaps the world's best-known photographer, arranged a one-man Adams show in New York City, the first since A-A's former mentor Strand had shown there in 1917.

Adams by now had moved to the Yosemite Valley, and his feel for its mountains and valleys began to transcend just photography.

As official photographer and a director of the Sierra Club, he had traveled to Washington to show his photographs of Kings Canyon and to lobby for a bill that would preserve that area as a national park.

The result was not immediately successful but his efforts had come to the attention of Interior Secretary Harold L. Ickes. By 1940 Ickes had shown the photos to President Franklin D. Roosevelt and the resultant presidential arm-twisting produced from Congress what Adams considered a personal monument—the establishment of 455,000 acres as the Kings Canyon National Park.

His first ecological triumph was followed quickly by a professional one. In 1941 he had stopped his car in New Mexico to take, in 15 seconds, a photograph that four decades later commanded $71,500 at auction.

It was the moon rising over the village of Hernandez. It, with another photo of the moon shining over Half Dome in Yosemite, taken in 1960, became synonymous with Adams' name.

The two photos were archetypically Weston—the preconceived clarity felt before the shutter was snapped and then transferred to film and paper. To Weston's theory of visualization Adams brought his own contributions—a system of film exposure to predetermine the tones of the print.

It has become known as the Adams zone system, and he soon was teaching it at the California School of Fine Arts (later the San Francisco Art Institute) where he founded the first photography department in 1946.

He also was teaching at Art Center in Los Angeles, lecturing at the Museum of Modern Art in New York and at colleges throughout the West.

Between 1948 and 1956 he published four photography books and in 1949 was named a consultant to Polaroid Corp., working with Edwin Land on the Polaroid Land process.

ANSWERED CRITICS

He also answered those who criticized "Group F/64" adherents for photographing trees and mountains while the nation struggled through the Great Depression and World War II.

He published a book of the photographs he had taken of the thousands of Japanese-Americans interned in the Manzanar Relocation Center in California during the war. Its wry title was "Born Free and Equal."

His spreading fame resulted in "The Eloquent Light," a 1963 biography of Ansel Adams published by the Sierra Club.

He was a Sierra Club director from 1936 to 1970, and his many trophies include the Conservation Service Award of the Interior Department.

He was an untypical artist—outspoken, opinionated and highly political when it came to his dearly loved scenery.

He warred against those trying to develop Big Sur and led a drive to oust Interior Secretary James G. Watt for "halting 100 years of growth of the national park system." His attacks on Watt led President Reagan to seek a meeting with Adams—a session held in July, 1983. Adams afterward pronounced Reagan "opaque—a substance that does not permit the passage of light . . . in either direction.

REAL HAM

Until his hospitalization the artist-advocate had been working to limit Reagan to one term.

Adams' personality lent itself to public display and theatrical statements.

"You'll understand him better," painter Georgia O'Keeffe—a longtime friend—told a prospective interviewer in 1979, "if you think of him as a real ham, the eternal life of the party."

His leathery countenance was on the cover of Time magazine on Sept. 3, 1979, the first photographer ever honored there.

In 1980, President Jimmy Carter awarded him the Presidential Medal of Freedom for his "visionary efforts to preserve this country's wild and scenic areas both on film and on Earth."

This came after he had supported legislation to protect 100 million acres of the Alaska wilderness.

The boy with the Brownie box camera and a vision had become the Grand Old Man of Photography.

He was pleased but took the accolades lightly. They were but the gifts of man.

The greatest gift God had granted him, Adams said in a long-ago letter to photographer Stieglitz written from New Mexico, was the Earth itself.

"It is all very beautiful and magical here . . . a quality which cannot be described.

The skies and land are so enormous and the detail so precise and exquisite that, wherever you are, you are isolated in a glowing world between the macro and the micro—where everything is sidewise under you and over you, and the clocks stopped long ago."

DEATH OF "CAPTAIN JACK" BARLEON

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, Massachusetts and the entire Nation have lost a true hero and an outstanding human being with the death last month of Naval Capt. John S. Barleon, Jr.

"Captain Jack," as he was affectionately known by his legions of friends and admirers, was a man of uncommon valor who turned a crippling injury into a courageous life of helping others. He fought with great bravery in the Pacific in World War II and later suffered a serious spinal injury which eventually resulted in quadriplegia. For the rest of his life, he kept on fighting—for paralyzed and disabled veterans, for the physically handicapped, and for the retarded. He was a tireless advocate for their cause; his active lifestyle defied his disability and made him an inspiration to all he touched.

Captain Jack was also a generous supporter of a program close to the heart of the Kennedy family, the Eunice Shriver Clinic for retarded children and their families at the Walter E. Fernald State School in Massachusetts. His extraordinary life brought hope to millions, and his achievements are an example to all of us who carry on his work.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the obituary for Captain Jack, which appeared in the Boston Globe on March 27, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the obituary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Boston Globe, Mar. 27, 1984]

"CAPTAIN JACK" BARLEON, WAR HERO AND FIGHTER FOR THE PARALYZED, 70

(By William P. Coughlin)

They called him "Captain Jack."

A decorated World War II hero whose Navy career continued until 1961, Capt. John S. Barleon Jr. was a wheelchair quadriplegic the last 23 years of his life who:

Was a dynamic, one-man advocate and former national research director for the Paralyzed Veterans of America.

Was a 1962 delegate to the World Veterans Organization in Copenhagen, Denmark; Lausanne, Switzerland, and The Hague.

Sought government and private grants in a constant search for ways to improve health care and devices for the handicapped.

Was active as a member of the corporation of the Walter E. Fernald School and helped raise $2.4 million in 1962 to fund the Eunice Shriver clinic, the first clinic in the nation where parents could live in and be examined with their retarded children.

Flew aircraft, despite his handicap, as a member of the Wheelchair Pilots Assn; drove his car, fished, sailed a kayak, and visited archeological ruins from Greenland to Europe, Asia and South America.

A long-term member of the International Oceanographic Foundation, he also was a member of the Society of Naval Architects and Engineers.

He held the Bronze Star, the Navy Commendation Medal and numerous campaign ribbons from his World War II experiences, and in his final two decades Capt. Barleon was a live-in quadriplegic at the Veterans Administration hospitals in West Roxbury and in Brockton for six years.

He died at age 70 yesterday, after four weeks in a coma in the Veterans Hospital in West Roxbury. He had fallen ill Jan. 9 with a respiratory ailment linked to quadriplegia.

As a Naval officer and fighter pilot he was a hero and doer; as a quadriplegic, he turned his wartime spine injury and disability into a life of helping others similarly crippled. By all accounts, "Captain Jack" was not a quitter.

In a 1980 interview for a magazine called Paraplegia News, he summed up his outlook:

"Although my disability—quadriplegia—is disagreeable, I have had a far more fortunate, full and interesting life than most citizens . . . What I need is a system of getting 48 hours into a 24-hour day so I can do all the things I want to do."

Born at the Naval Academy at Annapolis where his father, Jack Barleon Sr., was an officer, he entered the Navy in 1931 after a boyhood during which he had climbed aboard the World War I German submarine Deutschland and US Admiral Richard E. Byrd's famed tri-motor airplane which had seen the Arctic and Antarctic. As a boy, he met Byrd practicing landings at the Naval Station in Norfolk, Va.

Perhaps it was Byrd's plane or the flying model of an old NC-4 Navy seaplane, given him by Adm. Albert C. Read, that hooked young John Barleon on flying.

He followed his father's beginnings at the Naval Academy where he cruised the Mediterranean on the battleship Wyoming, met a Pope and the Italian dictator, Benito Mussolini, and graduated in 1935. As a freshman he had won the small bore rifle intercollegiate championship, and later the national intercollegiate title.

He was aboard the cruiser San Francisco when she suffered heavy battle damage at Savo Island in the battle of Guadacanal, and during one of the war's lighter events he played against the Peruvian Olympic basketball team on a dirt floor of the Lima bull ring. The Peruvians won, "Captain Jack" recalled with a smile.

Later he was aboard the USS Phelps, flagship of the First Destroyer Squadron, which, records show, fought in every Pacific battle. Then, after a tour from Panama to Newfoundland in the old World War I four-stack destroyer, USS McCormick, he began flight training in the new Grumman open cockpit fighters.

It was in one of these craft, during a landing rollout exercise, when he flipped on his back, crushing and dislocating several vertebrae. After six months in a San Diego Hospital, he returned to active duty and underwent a spinal fusion. Six months later, with a slightly stiff neck, he headed for the old USS Enterprise, a carrier where he became air officer, executive officer and commanding officer. In her, he lived through the so-called Admiral William (Bull) Halsey typhoon when three destroyers were lost. Still later, he commanded air groups, flying the old Hellcats, Corsairs and Bearcats.

Ashore, "Captain Jack" held many fleet posts, including Pentagon and Bureau of Personnel positions in which he was responsible for personnel planning. He testified often before the Department of Defense review teams, the Bureau of the Budget and before congressional committees. It was his job to justify naval expenses and plans.

"Captain Jack" also served in the former British Joint Services Staff College and at the National War College at Washington, D.C.

During this time he underwent five more spinal operations to remove bone and scar tissue, while carrying out his duties. He told an interviewer then that he relaxed by scuba diving and racing outboard runabouts. He also was a championship skeet shooter.

But his wound became infected and after the fifth operation he was a quadriplegic. His condition deteriorated and in September 1961, after another operation to remove a cyst, he was retired for physical disability and sent to the Veterans Administration Hospital in West Roxbury.

At the hospital he learned of the Paralyzed Veterans of America, became active, and was a delegate to national conventions. He was the first chairman of the Paralyzed Veterans' investment committee in the mid-1960s and was its national research director until the mid-1970s. In 1976, he became a trustee of the organization's technological and research foundation.

He was appointed by Gov. John A. Volpe in 1962 as a member of the corporation of the Fernald School.

He leaves a son, John S. Barleon of Waltham; three daughters, Anne B. Nolan of Waltham, Elizabeth H.B. Ross of Loveland, Colo., and Claudia B. Danikian of Boston; two sisters, Claudia B. Burkey of Bozman, Md., and Elizabeth B. Keller of Alexandria, Va., and a grandchild.

A memorial service will be conducted at 1 p.m. Saturday in the chapel at Brockton Veterans Administration Hospital.

WITHHOLDING OF TAXES ON ROYALTY PAYMENTS AND PAYMENTS TO INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS

SEC. 1003. (a) Section 3402 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to income tax collected at source) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(q) EXTENSION OF WITHHOLDING TO ROYALTY PAYMENTS AND PAYMENTS TO INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In any case in which—

"(A) a person issues a royalty payment, or

"(B) notwithstanding subsection (a)(4), a person issues a payment to an independent contractor, such person or any withholding agent shall deduct and withhold from such payment an amount equal to 10 percent of such payment.

"(2) WITHHOLDING AGENT.—Except as provided in regulations prescribed by the Secretary, the term 'withholding agent' means, with respect to any payment described in paragraph (1), the person who controls, receives, has custody of, disposes of, or pays such payment.

"(3) COORDINATION WITH OTHER SECTIONS.—For purposes of sections 3403 and 3404 and for purposes of so much of subtitle F (except section 7205) as relates to this chapter, payments described under paragraph (1) which are subject to withholding shall be treated as if they were wages paid by an employer to an employee.".

(b) The amendments made by this section shall apply to payments made after June 30, 1984.

REVENUE INCREASES

SEC. 1004. (a) Within 45 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Senate Committee on Finance shall report to the full Senate changes in laws within the jurisdiction of the Senate Committee on Finance sufficient to increase revenues by $4,300,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $7,100,000,000 in fiscal year 1986, $11,700,000,000 in fiscal year 1987, $19,000,000,000 in fiscal year 1988, and $28,700,000,000 in fiscal year 1989.

PAY COMPARABILITY ADJUSTMENT FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

SEC. 1005. Nothwithstanding any other provision of this Act or of any other law—

(1) there shall not be an adjustment under section 5305 of title 5, United States Code, in the rates of pay under the General Schedule and in the rates of pay under the other statutory pay systems during fiscal year 1985; and

(2) the overall percentage of the adjustment in such rates taking effect under such section in each of fiscal year 1986, 1987, 1988, or 1989, shall be an increase of 3 percent.

COST-OF-LIVING INCREASES

SEC. 1006. (a)(1) Except as provided in subsection (b), for the purpose of determining or computing the amount of any increase in payments or benefit amounts or in standards for eligibility for payments or benefits taking effect on any date during the fiscal year 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, or 1989 under any provision of Federal law which requires an increase or change in such payments, benefit amounts, or standards as a result of any change in—

(A) the Consumer Price Index (or any component thereof); or

(B) any other index which measures costs, prices, or wages,

the change in any such index shall be deemed to be the change as computed or determined under such provision of Federal law or (if less)—

(1) zero percent in the case of increases taking effect in fiscal year 1985; or

(ii) 3 percent in the case of increases taking effect in fiscal year 1986, 1987, 1988, or 1989.

(2) Nothwithstanding any other provision of Federal law, no person shall be—

(A) entitled to any increase in payments, benefit amounts, or rates of pay; or

(B) eligible for any payments or benefits, under any provision of Federal law to the extent that such increase or eligibility is denied by reason of paragraph (1).

(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any change in any index described in paragraph (1) which would have resulted in an increase in payments or benefit amounts or in standards for eligibility for payments or benefits effective on any date during the fiscal year 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, or 1989 but for paragraph (1) shall not be taken into account for the purposes of determining or computing any increase or change in such payments, benefit amounts, or standards taking effect on any date during any fiscal year after fiscal year 1989.

(b)(1) With respect to the Social Security Act, subsection (a) shall apply only to cost-of-living adjustments to cash benefits paid under section 202 or 223, and shall not limit cost-of-living adjustments under section 1617 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1382f), or any other adjustment under any other provision of such Act. The adjustments becoming effective under such section 1617, and any other adjustment to which subsection (a) does not apply, will be made as though there had been made the full cost-of-living adjustment which, but for subsection (a), would have become effective under section 215(i) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 415(i)) with respect to cash benefits.

(2) Subsection (a) shall not apply to increases under section 3(o), 5(c), or 5(e) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2012(o), 2014(c), and 2014(e), respectively).

(3) Subsection (a) shall not apply to increases under section 3112 of title 38, United States Code. For the purposes of such section, benefit amounts payable under title II of the Social Security Act shall be deemed to be increased when and by the percentage such amounts would be increased (as a result of a determination made under section 215(i) of such Act) if subsection (a) had not been enacted.

MEDICARE FREEZE

SEC. 1007. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act (or any amendment made by this Act) or any provision of title XVIII of the Social Security Act, the "applicable percentage increase" under section 1886(b)(3)(B) of the Social Security Act for any 12-month cost reporting period or fiscal year beginning on or after October 1, 1984, and before October 1, 1985, shall be zero percent.

(b) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall report to the Congress within 45 days after the date of the enactment of this Act with respect to suggested methods for assuring that hospitals will not increase amounts charged to patients who are not entitled to benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act in order to compensate for amounts not paid by reason of the limitation under subsection (a).

LIMITATION ON INCREASE IN BUDGET AUTHORITY FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE ACTIVITIES

SEC. 1008. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act (or any amendment made by this Act), the Congress declares that—

(1) an urgent priority of the United States Government is the pursuit of a national defense policy that adequately provides for the security of the United States and that of its allies against the threat of their adversaries;

(2) the basic goal of any national defense program of the United States should be to provide a consistent and sustained growth in defense readiness activities and in weapon systems research and development, procurement, and force modernization;

(3) an annual increase in the defense budget of the United States Government, in accordance with the commitment made in 1977 and 1978 by the United States Government and the other members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) to provide for annual increases in the defense budgets of the members by three percent in excess of the rate of inflation, is an essential element in developing a reliable national defense capability; and

(4) the policies relating to the commitment of resources to develop and maintain a strong and comprehensive defense program by the United States must be fully integrated with an overall fiscal and economic policy directed toward restoring the financial credibility of the Government in an equitable manner.

(b) Therefore, it is the sense of the Congress that the amount of budget authority provided for each of the fiscal years 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989 for all purchases made by departments and agencies administering activities classified under the functional category of National Defense in the Budget transmitted under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, should be the amount of budget authority provided for such purchases for the preceding fiscal year plus an amount equal to the product of—

(1) the amount of budget authority provided for such purchases for such preceding fiscal year; and

(2) the sum of—

(A) the rate of inflation projected (in accordance with Subsection (c)(2)) to occur during the fiscal year 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, or 1989, as the case may be; and

(B) four percent in fiscal years 1985 and 1986; and

(C) three percent in fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.

(c)(1) For the purposes of subsection (b), budget authority does not include the budget authority provided for the pay of employees of any department or agency described in subsection (b), including members of the Armed Forces, or for military retired or retainer pay.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (b), the rate of inflation projected to occur during a fiscal year under subsection (b) shall be—

(A) for fiscal year 1985, the percent change in the defense purchases index which is projected for such fiscal year by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(B) for fiscal year 1986, 1987, 1988, or 1989, the most recent projection of the percent change in such index for such fiscal year made by such Director before the date on which the Senate or the House of Representatives, or any committee thereof, takes action to provide budget authority for such fiscal year to which subsection (b) applies.

DISCRETIONARY FEDERAL PROGRAMS

SEC. 1009. (a) Not withstanding any other provision of this Act (or any amendment made by this Act), it is the sense of the Senate that the total amount of budget authority provided for all discretionary Federal programs for fiscal year 1985 should not exceed an amount equal to the total amount of budget authority provided for all such programs for fiscal year 1984.

(b) It is the sense of the Senate that the total amount of budget authority provided for all discretionary Federal programs for each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, should not exceed an amount equal to the total amount of budget authority provided for all such programs for the preceding fiscal year plus an amount equal to the product of—

(1) the total amount of budget authority provided for all such programs for such preceding fiscal year, multiplied by

(2) three percent.

(c) For purposes of this section, the term "discretionary Federal program" means any Federal program other than—

(1) a program classified under the functional category of National Defense in the budget submitted by the President for the applicable fiscal year under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code; or

(2) a program for which spending authority (as defined in section 401(c)(2)(C) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974) is provided by law.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, an order has already been entered that when the Senate resumes consideration of the unfinished business which we have now done, the Mitchell amendment would be temporarily set aside, the vote to occur this afternoon at 2 p.m., and that the Senator from South Carolina would be the first recognized. That is as far as we went. We did not provide for the purpose of his offering his amendment. I hope the Senator will do that. I understand he has now done that. Then it would be automatic under the order entered that at 2 p.m. the Hollings amendment would be laid aside for 1 hour, plus voting time, and then we would be back on the Hollings amendment again at 3:30 p.m. or thereabouts.

The order also provides that the Senator from Mississippi would be next recognized after the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS).

Mr. President, I thank the Senator for being here and agreeing to these things. If he cares to proceed with this amendment now, that is the procedure that would automatically ensue.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Chris McLean, of the staff of Senator EXON, be granted the privilege of the floor during debate on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, with respect to this particular amendment, before I go into a detailed discussion of it, I note the distinguished Senator from Mississippi on the floor and I note his vital interest in this matter. He and I were talking informally just a few moments ago about the seriousness of the occasion where we are running some $200 billion in deficits. While there is some concern amongst small groups here and there, the gallery is partically empty and there is no real interest in the White House and in the Senate about really doing something. Well, some of us care and we are not going to stop trying to save our future.

This is a sad commentary to have to make, Mr. President. It should be understood what is really going on.

We had last year an organized effort on behalf of those responsible for trying to maintain the discipline in fiscal integrity of both the public and the private sectors, which culminated in the Hatch amendment. That included all the different business groups, who are noticeably absent here in 1984.

I want to divert for a second and mention that the majority leader, myself, and others traveled to Argentina a couple of years ago. We searched out the Argentine Economic Minister, who was trying to rebuild that nation's economy. At the time, he had just been discharged from the hospital and was resting at home. He was hospitalized, I should say, from exhaustion. He described his exhaustion from having traveled from town to town trying to build a solid civic and business foundation and interest in maintaining and building communities.

He said private free enterprise could not exist except where you had civic and community interest and pride in maintaining the community and the business climate.

He said in the United States we took this for granted almost in the sense that we had our civic clubs, our Lions, our Rotary, our Kiwanis, Optimists, and on down the line—various civic clubs continually meeting and taking on the various community needs. When the public entities, the city council, the State or otherwise got out of line, these were the things that were discussed at those particular meetings.

There was a common responsibility for building the communities here in America.

I had been in Argentina some years earlier when they had roughly 400 to 500 of the American blue chip corporations located in Argentina and they had a dynamic flow of the economy. I wondered what had happened. He said they were down now to about 16 to 17. He said the demands made upon business were easily answered by accepting the demands, including the increases in prices with increased inflation and a runaway economy ensuing from there. As a result, they had a terrible economic mess.

I only allude to that because here in the United States, in a similar fashion during this particular year, you should find with $200 deficits literally every chamber of commerce, Federation of Independent Businesses, advisory councils, the Round Table, the National Association of Manufacturers, here in the Senate. These galleries should be filled, and they should be imploring us with telephone calls, letters and visits to get hold of ourselves and control ourselves at the national level.

They are not here today. They were here last year to show that there was an awareness. Rather than having things turn out better, with lesser deficits than predicted, less than $100 billion, now we run into $200 billion deficits. Things are more drastic than before, and already the signs of economic recovery indicate that it is perhaps retrenching. We are all keeping our fingers crossed as to whether or not we will have a complete economic turnaround.

The reason, of course, that they are not here is this is an election year. It is not my purpose in bipartisan presentation on behalf of the distinguished Senators from North Dakota and Mississippi to engage in the partisan litany. But I was on a bipartisan panel last Thursday evening before the Bond Club in New York. The former Secretary of the Treasury, John Connally, of Texas, was there. He was the captain of the Republican team—so we had the two sides ably represented. The bottom line of the captain of the Republican team, John Connally, was that Congress will do nothing; that the most serious problem we ever had confronting us was these deficits; and that, second, the Congress would do nothing. I had to agree with the distinguished former Secretary of the Treasury; that the deficits is the most important problem facing us.

I had to agree, also, that Congress would do nothing. He said we did not have courage, and we did not have a long enough term. He was recommending 8-year terms; something historically all of a sudden that happened to the Constitution; what we ought to have is Senators who serve for 8 years, had a long enough term, and had more courage. Then he went off, as they always do, on incentive; that we as Senators did not have enough incentive to run. So we had a bunch of nonincentived Senators now encompassing the U.S. Senate. Since we did not have any incentive, of course—alluding I guess to financial reward—we were not going to do anything.

I countered that we were not going to do anything because we did not have the incentive in that particular audience—The Bond Club. I told them flat out. It was the financial, economic minds and brains of this land there in New York City. It was the famous Bond Club. They had all of the investment brokers, the financiers, former Secretaries of Treasury, and others involved. While they had nice, charming meetings and seminars, with a story here, and running an advertisement in the newspaper from time to time, they know how to bring the pressure and interest on a subject. This year we have not been shown that interest. The country is fat and happy. There is no real alarm in the boondocks. So to speak, as I have traveled the 50 States over the last 2 years.

Mr. President, the reason nothing will happen, of course, is that those who normally have the greatest to lose in a way are the financial communities, banks and everything else of that kind which would ordinarily be here along with the Chambers of Commerce. As I was alluding to the Argentine comparison, you cannot expect the Main Street merchant, you cannot expect the farmer on his family farm, you cannot expect the ordinary student or the professor to organize a movement. But the financial communities are not here. Of course, this is an election year. We have a very, very anomalous situation. We are both into a particular political mode. Our Republican colleagues, who passed Reaganomics here a couple of years ago, are seeing signs that the Reaganomics economic plan is working. They hope it will continue to work. They hope there will be no high interest rates.

They will be able to get by the election. Of course, running as some are for reelection, they are running on the particular platform and program—that Reaganomics was an accomplishment of the present administration. The riverboat gamble described by the distinguished majority leader has now happened. We have seen some houses being built, some automobiles being bought. The Republicans say they ought to be reelected because rather than giving you what we had in the previous administration—12-percent inflation and 20-percent interest rates—we ought to be given another 4 years.

The Republican colleagues do not want to recognize the problem. They do not want to come at the finish line of election day, "Chicken Little, the sky is falling," and saying all of a sudden something needs to be done. So they are not here. No one is going to do anything. In contrast, our Democratic colleagues have their fingers crossed hoping against hope that it will not work, that the signs of the slowing down of the recovery will accelerate, and that in turn what will happen is the interest rates will start climbing. As the interest rates climb, come November the plan has not worked, and the people in disgust and despair then will throw the rascal out and put the Democrats back in the White House. We do not want to solve the problem. Certainly, it is not the Democratic cause to run forward and solve the problem that might get us into the White House if it continues to exacerbate. I like that word "exacerbate." I learned these wonderful words since I have been in Washington.

That is exactly what we see here in the U.S. Congress today. The Republicans do not want to recognize the problem, and the Democrats do not want to solve it. I say to my distinguished colleague from Mississippi, in a capsule that is where we find ourselves.

Now to the freeze itself: I would like to add a few other comments because freeze, freeze, freeze, everywhere a man cries freeze. There is no freeze, because in essence there is a misapprehension with respect to the so-called tax, tax and spend, spend.

You hear that is all we are going to continue to do. We have done it for 40 years. Why should we expect this Congress in an election year to repair the damage, or in an election year bite the bullet, or make the sacrifice, or stand tall, or whatever when it has been going on for 40 years of tax, tax and spend, spend. It has really been the responsibility of all the Congresses, in the 40 years since World War II. Why should this Congress be the stupid one that steps forward in 1984 just before an important national election and start solving problems.

We should because it is our problem. It is not the problem of 40 years of tax, tax and spend, spend. No. 1, with respect to tax, and tax, Republicans and Democrats both love tax cuts.

This is my 18th year in the Senate. In the 18-year period there had been only one general tax increase up until this administration. That one was the surtax in 1968 and for 6 months into 1969. We and President Johnson put a surtax on in order to pay for the war in Vietnam. In contrast, let us take the last decade of the seventies. During the seventies we passed seven tax cuts for a revenue hemorrhage loss of some $73 billion. The genesis of Kemp-Roth was to counter the redistribution of the wealth of the United States of America. The Democrats were leading every year. They had control of the Congress. Every year they would come up, and the title always sounded good: "tax reform bill;" "tax stabilization bill;" "reindustrialization." We are great with words of description.

In any event, every year we talked about leveling it out, closing loopholes, reforming the measure, making it more equitable. What happened was that our friend, Senator ROTH and Congressman KEMP said: "Look, if they are going to redistribute the wealth of America with a little bit here and a little bit there each year, we are going to give in. If you cannot beat them, join them. We will give them the family size.

"We'll give them the big, mammoth tax cut of 10 percent, 10 percent, and 10 percent—10 percent each year for 3 years. Then let us see how they like that; just straight across the board."

The distinguished Vice President, who addressed the Chamber of Commerce last night, called it voodoo economics. The chairman of the Governors Conference, the Republican Governor of Vermont, Governor Snelling, called it an "economic Bay of Pigs." The distinguished majority leader called it a riverboat gamble. But in any event, it was taken seriously and is now the law.

(Mr. WALLOP assumed the chair.)

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, would my distinguished colleague, since he is mentioning all of my great friends on this side of the aisle, want me to add a word or two to the Hollings-Andrews amendment or, as it is known in North Dakota, the Andrews-Hollings amendment?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I think we can do this briefly, because I know we are interested in hearing from Senator STENNIS, our great colleague from Mississippi.

I think we ought to be frank with one another, Mr. President, and with the American people. That is really what we are talking about today. We are not engaged in this debate because we need a budget. We are engaged in this debate because we have monstrous deficits which stand poised to devour our economy and kill our economic prosperity within a few short years. A halfway solution, which is called the best that we can get, the rose-garden solution—the petals are wilted by now, with everybody seeing it for really what it is—is not the way to go, Mr. President. For the sake of the future of our country, we have to attack these deficits with the best we can do, not the best we can get. There is a vast difference between the best we can do and the best we can get.

I do not have to tell you about the problems we have out in rural America, Mr. President. Farmers are impacted by these high interest rates more than anyone else. Industry is impacted, too.

The thing people forget is the fact that to finance these deficits, we are depending today on one-third of those deficits being covered by foreign investors. That means that we have to value our dollar higher by one-third than foreign currencies; we have to keep our interest rates abnormally high.

That is great if you want to ski in the Swiss Alps and it is fantastic if you want to eat in a fancy French restaurant; but it is not worth a darn if you want to sell a bushel of wheat overseas or if you want to sell an American-built tractor overseas.

My good friend from South Carolina, I am sure, Mr. President, saw what I saw in the Sunday Washington Post about the Caterpillar Tractor Co. and the fight they are having now with their Japanese counterparts. It pointed out that the president of Caterpillar Tractor, when he goes to work in the morning, the first thing he asks for is not what the productivity rate is, not what quality control says, but what the Japanese yen is in comparison to the American dollar, because the Japanese yen is down one-third in comparison to the American dollar in order to finance this horrendous deficit. There are 22,000 workers laid off in Caterpillar Tractor because of this disparity. That is why we have to address this deficit and do something about it.

That is why, of course, I am proud to join my distinguished colleague from South Carolina in proposing a plan that will have immediate and profound deficit reduction. This is not a business-as-usual downpayment, where promises inevitably fade with economic fortune. This is a balanced plan, Mr. President, which demands equality of sacrifice while, at the same time, it avoids an unreasoned and indiscriminate approach to budget cutting.

The rose-garden package, Mr. President, simply is not enough. A 150 billion dollars' worth of budget deficits sounds great, sounds wonderful—until you look at it and find that it is only $12 billion in the first year; it is only about $25 billion or $26 billion in the second year; and then, aha, yes, $100 billion in the third year. It reminds me of the old college story; "Yes, I will love you tomorrow."

That is the kind of promise we have, and it is not a promise that the American people are going along with. Even more important, it is not the kind of promise that the people who set interest rates are buying. That is why interest rates have gone up, Mr. President.

The heart of this debate is the question of defense spending. Our plan calls for 4 percent real growth in defense expenditures. I have talked with many experts in this area, including Members of this body sitting on the Committee on Armed Services. I am firmly convinced that in the defense of our country, we can seek no lower figure. In fact, it would be more costly in the long run to set aside defense programs that we have already initiated in order to meet a more immediate lower rate of growth. Yet some who agree that there is an urgent need for deficit reduction object that our plan does not call for defense spending cuts which are equal to cuts in social spending. In actual numbers, I suppose they are correct, Mr. President. In actual ability to reduce spending, we have extracted equality.

Equality is exactly why we have exempted from budget cuts those programs for the needy which can least afford to be cut. A plan which calls for equal amounts of defense spending cuts, social spending cuts, and tax increases does not have an equality of sacrifice; it merely has equality of numbers, with no vision into the real inequities of the Federal budget.

There is also criticism of our call for deferring tax indexation. I would be the first to agree that additional taxes are onerous; any taxes, for that matter, are onerous. Yet a few of us on this floor have voted to forgo the third year of the tax cut, have voted against a number of tax cuts because, Mr. President, the toughest tax today on the American working men and women, the toughest tax today on the American farm family, is the tax of high interest rates coming about because of these inflated budget deficits.

The simple fact is that most of the Members of this body have voted into law spending programs that were implicitly intended to be paid for with taxes. Three years ago, we cut taxes by 25 percent, on a gamble, referred to by some as a riverboat gamble. Whether it was a riverboat gamble or a prairie dog gamble does not make a whale of a lot of difference, Mr. President. It was a gamble and, quite simply, it did not work. We did not win that gamble.

Now that we are facing the disastrous consequences of our actions, I suggest the only responsible approach is to reclaim a small portion of that lost tax revenue until such time as we are willing to curb our irresponsible, but sometimes very necessary, spending habits.

This deficit reduction plan has a message to send to the American people. That message ultimately is that the U.S. Senate is now prepared to be a responsible governing body. That time has long passed, Mr. President. We have been delinquent in our duty, and the only way we can recapture the challenge the American people gave us when they elected us is to do something about it now instead of just talking about it. This package gives us the biggest net reduction in the immediate outyear deficit of any package that will be offered.

That is why I urge its support. That is why I am proud and privileged to join with my good friend and colleague from South Carolina and a number of other Senators in introducing this package—a package that is not easy, really. But it does address the real needs of our Nation and addresses it now. I appreciate my colleague yielding.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I appreciate the distinguished leadership of the Senator from North Dakota. He has been very conscientious about it. We have worked hard in that Budget Committee and this is presented in all genuineness and sincerity to really solve the problem. In completing the thought on tax and taxes because I want to fix the responsibility, I say to the Senator from North Dakota, it is our responsibility, this Congress. It is not the 40 years of Congresses, profligate Congresses, tax and tax and spend and spend, for the main and simple reason that I have just described by way of record that rather than raising we were cutting taxes and thereupon followed Kemp-Roth and rather than spending and spending we did have a discipline.

Now, let everybody fall out of the gallery or wonder about that statement, but there was always a discipline in the National Congress, all Congresses, against going completely overboard. If you go back to the end of World War II, to 1947, and you take all of the deficits from 1947 up to 1980, a 33-year period, the cumulative total deficit for that period would be $465.5 billion. But the deficits just for the 3-year period 1982, 1983, and this year, 1984 amount to $495 billion. So the problem is not one of 33 years or 35 or 40 years, the aura of futility that we are getting by with, that this Congress is getting by with—is by blaming it on previous Congresses.

I went as chairman of the Budget Committee to President Carter in November 1980, after his defeat. Here was a lameduck Democratic President. We had a lameduck Democratic U.S. Senate. In addressing the President I said, "Mr. President, you are going to leave a deficit bigger than the one you inherited from President Ford." And he said, "What did you say? Is that right? I said, "Yes, sir, it is going to be about $75 billion." He said, "Well, we are going to have to do something about that. What can we do?" And I was talking about reconciliation, which is a fancy budgetary description of a spending cut. I said, "If you can just help us along, we are working and ready to go in both the House and the Senate. We will put in this reconciliation bill and I think we can have some spending cuts." And we did. We cut the deficit back for the year 1980, the last year of President Carter, to $58.7 billion. It has been about $66 billion.

That is a high deficit, but there was a discipline. The Democrats were absolutely frightened that they would leave a record of having a deficit in excess of $66 billion.

That was only a little more than 3 years ago. President Truman, whom we are going to memorialize in another week, balanced the budget four times. President Johnson balanced the budget and gave Richard Nixon a surplus, if you can imagine such a thing as the Great Society giving President Nixon a surplus. But it occurred. The discipline has only broken in the last 2 to 3 years right here on the floor of the Congress. We are the ones responsible. And we are not doing anything about it because it is an election year. And business and financial and economic leadership of the country does not speak out loudly about this particular problem. That could be one of the fallouts from a prolonged Democratic Presidential campaign.

We had candidates out on that Presidential track and if they said anything critical about the economy or critical about Reaganomics or critical about high deficits, we had eight of us ready to pick up on what any business leader said and put it on national TV, and so you almost have a system of lockjaw. The business and financial and bond and stock market communities all have lockjaw. They do not speak out on this. They write a few little articles, they go to their business clubs, but they are not in the galleries. They are not pressuring for anything to get done and they are all talking in terms of "Let us first reelect President Reagan and then we will all get together next year and we will take care of it."

I want to comment on how that hits me as a matter of politics. If I were Governor of South Carolina, and I walked down the capitol steps and a TV reporter walked up to me and put that microphone under my nose and said, "Now, Governor, what are you going to do about the $400 million deficit"—which would be the comparable to the $200 billion national deficit. If a reporter asked me that on the capitol steps of Columbia, S.C.—what I was going to do about the $400 million deficit—and I reared back and said:

Oh, well, now, wait a minute. This is an election year and there are a lot of political costs to getting anything done in an election year but after my reelection, then I am going to get together a bipartisan group and we are going to really do something about this.

That reporter would look at me and say, "Governor, there is not going to be any reelection for you if you do not do something between now and November."

That would be the worst of politics. I could not get by with it. Every newspaper editorial would take me on.

But in Washington that is the best of politics. There are a lot of political costs, do you not understand. This is an election year and we have to get everybody reelected first and then we will get on to the business of the high deficits and then really begin the launching of new spending programs because this is a double speak. We talk about spending cuts but President Reagan came with spending increases. He asked for $50 billion more in defense, he talked about spending cuts and he asked for tax cuts. He said I want my indexing. It amounts to $6 billion the first year, but by year after next it is $31 billion and out to the 5-year budget projection where it is $65 billion. Mr. President, we do not have revenues to cut. You and I know that. There are no revenues to cut. We just go out and borrow the money and spread it around again.

So in January we received a Presidential budget that I think on the House side got one vote. I think there were 427 votes against and one affirmative vote. They did have a formal vote on President Reagan's budget. So we have the double speak. We talk about having spending cuts but asking for spending increases. We say we do not want to do anything about taxes but we are asking for tax cuts. And that is why we cannot get the public mind fixed on this particular problem.

Specifically, with respect to the different freezes, I wish I could join with my distinguished colleague from Florida, for example, on the Democratic alternative. First, the Republican alternative increases the deficit up to $204 billion. It does not even make any bones about trying to solve the problem. It becomes a part of the problem and exacerbates the problem.

There is that word again. I am getting pretty good at that one.

It really adds to that particular problem.

Now, the Democratic alternative goes up and down the highways and byways, but when I look at the bottom line, after all the descriptive language, it says $170 billion next year, next year and next year. It sort of levels off at $170 billion. I only allude back to what I said about the conscience we had not to exceed $66 billion. To put it coldly, I cannot run on a $170 billion deficit. I come from a State that believes in a balanced budget. I was the first Governor of the Southern States to get a triple-A credit rating back in 1959.

We have maintained that bond rating and credit rating since that time. It is almost a discipline among Republicans and Democrats at the State level that the budget shall be balanced. You pay as you go. We raise the revenues. If we want any new initiatives, we must afford those new initiatives. We do not offload onto the next generation.

It might give comfort to some, but I do not want to see my name connected to a $170 billion deficit. That does not solve the problem. That, according to the financial markets, makes you part of the problem.

There is no difference between a $200 billion and a $170 billion deficit when it comes to the interest rate and inflation and the impact on the economy. We are still out there borrowing; and now, at the $200 billion level, we are actually launching a new spending program of $20 billion. When I say a new spending program of $20 billion, you cannot avoid this until next year.

When you run that $200 billion deficit, you go out and borrow at 10 percent to finance that add-on to the national debt; and 10 percent of the $200 billion is $20 billion. It is estimated that in the next year, the interest cost add-on will be $23 billion. So it is a $23 billion new spending program.

If they had gone along with the Domenici-Hollings budget of 3½ or 4 years ago, we would have had a balanced budget by next year. We would be in the black, and we could take that $23 billion and use it for research in cancer, to repair cracks in roads and bridges, for quality education, and even for defense. We are not using those amounts for defense or anything else. We are just adding on that new spending program that compounds and really goes on to the next generation.

Ask the question: Are you better off than you were 4 years ago? My 60-year-old crowd says, "Yeah, we are doing fine. Everything is just grand. We are all going to get reelected. We are all going to stay in office."

We are spending $200 billion more than we are taking in. Obviously, some cars are being sold and houses are being built when you are spending $200 billion more than you are taking in.

The 60-year-olds, my generation, are saying that we are doing grand, and nobody cares. But our children and our children's children will find themselves in a gridlock in 3 to 5 years.

Right now, it is $150 billion, $3 billion a week—$150 billion of carrying charges on the national debt. That is $3 billion for nothing. In 3 to 4 years, it is going to be $200 billion.

I want somebody to look at the chart in the U.S. News & World Report. They have $288 billion as what we will get in personal taxes. We had income tax day the other day, and when we all paid our income taxes, they used $288 billion, and I used $293.6 billion, which I think are the figures of the IRS, in individual income taxes we paid the week before last. We are going to spend over half of that on interest costs—for nothing.

Can you imagine such a thing? A runaway government is what we have here. In 3 years, it is going to be $200 billion just in interest costs.

So Congress will meet, and we will provide for nominal defense, social security, and some health care; and, like the British Parliament, we will have a big wrangle about how to raise the revenues to pay the interest costs on the national debt. That is what we are providing for the next generation, and we should be ashamed. It is our responsibility. That is why we should vote for some kind of freeze to solve the problem.

I would like to go along with the Republican proposal, but it increases the deficit. the Democratic alternative still does not solve it. It is $170 billion—the same impact upon the financial markets.

The Kassebaum-Biden proposal is a 1-year proposition that cuts defense. It does not do much of anything with revenues. It just puts down a figure. It is not balanced. It is for only 1 year, and it does not solve the problem.

I heard last night from our Chamber friends, and I will get into that later, as to whether they endorse the Kassebaum open-year plan because they were adamant last year for a 7.5-percent increase in defense. If they endorse this, they have changed direction totally for a cut in defense.

Mr. President, I think this is a good time for me to yield to our distinguished colleague, the Senator from Mississippi. I appreciate his patience in hearing me out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, first, I thank the Senator from South Carolina. I really did not expect to proceed at this time.

As I understand the parliamentary situation, the Senate will recess at 12 o'clock. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. STENNIS. I will proceed at this time.

Mr. President, I am more concerned about the situation we are in now than I ever have been since I have been a Member of this body.

Mr. President, I was here when we were debating what became known as the Marshall plan, whereby we were proposing a new step altogether, that we were going to take money, billions of dollars, and send it as a gift to our former adversaries, those who had attacked us and with whom we had been at war. We were also going to send it to our allies in World War II. We were trying to rehabilitate the nations, the people of those nations. We wanted them to have a chance to get back on their feet, turning the wheels of industry again, making their own living, and restoring themselves to the family of nations that were self-sustaining, and had reasonable economy for their people. There was tremendous interest.

We were the kingpin of the world financially, in a way. We were the best-fixed nation in the world, moneywise. We had only 96 Senators then, but during those debates we met here day after day and had from 50 to 60 to 70 to 80 to 90 Senators present, listening intently, to those who had prepared themselves; listening over and over to the new developments, to the continuity of the idea, and welding here, on the anvil of debate, a plan that really put the world back on its feet economically.

Of course, we were interested, too, in building up some customers. That was one of the motives. But primarily it was to get things going again, to get the wheels turning again. We were in a position to do those things. We had the most influence in the money markets of the world.

Now, I am really confounded. Just a little over 30 years later, we find ourselves in such a situation that one of the chosen leaders of our Nation, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. Volcker, who was appointed by a Democratic President originally, served 4 years, and was reappointed by a Republican President, with his nomination confirmed by the Senate by a vote of about 80 to 16, pointed out in very graphic language, in a hearing on the Hill this year, that soon—and by "soon" he meant 2 or 3 years in the future—we would become a debtor nation, at the rate we are going.

Now that is what really woke me up. That is what made my mind up that I better lay aside these other things that I have been trying to do for the areas of business here and the bills that are to come, that I better do what little I could, and I really went to work.

Mr. President, let me say, also, that I wish to highly commend the members on our Budget Committee. They have been through plenty. I will not stop to name all of them, but I think we were blessed to have these men at these critical times in these crucial places. I am thinking about men like Senator DOMENICI of New Mexico, who is now chairman of that committee. I am thinking about Senator CHILES of Florida, who is presently the minority representative on that committee. I am thinking about the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), who developed and showed a remarkable intelligence, knowledge, perspicuity, and perspicacity with reference to the financial affairs of our Nation. I could go on naming others, and I compliment them all.

Maybe it gets rough sometimes as to what is said about the Budget Committee with its powers reaching out and replacing part of the duties and responsibilities of our regular committees, and I am a committee man, but I appreciate very much what has been done by these Senators, and they had the capacity to master and did master our services.

I have a prepared speech here, Mr. President, that is not long. I may take further part in the debate, I hope so, to some extent.

So I think that the remaining time now before there is a recess under previous order of the Senate I will confine myself to my written remarks and take up other things later.

Mr. President, let me say that as far as the things I point out here I assume my part of the guilt that goes with the neglect, and that is what it amounts to, of the preceding years. I am not trying to point to any culprits or blame them any more than I blame myself. That is not the question now.

We can go point out to where the President was in error, and so forth, and we can point out where we were in error. That is not what the people are interested in at all, not at all. They want someone who will come in here and tackle this problem and come up with some kind of improvement on the situation that will lead to further improvement.

This is the fourth year we have tried hard to improve our annual budget and substantially reduce the annual deficit and the national debt.

In this field things have not gotten better. But instead they have gotten substantially worse.

Let me mention now some of these facts that impress me and impel me to whatever action I can bring.

In 1964 we operated the entire Federal Government on less than $100 billion. For fiscal year 1985 it is estimated that the interest alone on the national debt will be $127 billion.

If that does not arouse and stir almost to anger any redblooded American, I do not know what it will take, and particularly those who stand in the positions that we do with entrusted power of the citizenship of our country to act. We are the ones, the Members of Congress, the President of the United States, who are the chosen ones for this particular period and we are the only ones who can move in under our system of law and try to bring about real meaningful corrections.

At the present rate, the national debt in 1989, that is just 5 short years away, will be $2.805 trillion—$2.805 trillion, however much that means. Now, these are figures from the Office of Management and Budget. They are official. They come from the administration as such, but they are official and legal and certainly cannot be challenged unless it is for a correction of reasonable error.

That sum is 52.4 percent of our entire gross national product. Think of that. Over half of the gross national product, the total production of our enterprises.

These figures, Mr. President, speak for themselves.

Now I fully considered some valuable comments by the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, the Honorable Paul A. Volcker, who has served one 4-year term and was recently appointed for another term by President Reagan and by this body, less than a year ago by a vote of 84 to 16, confirmed for another 4 years.

Now, many economists and financial people at large endorse his positions. In my own official duties, I rely on his knowledge, judgment, and integrity a great deal. There is nothing between us. I have never known him, nor had the privilege of knowing him until he came here to Washington. At my request I have gone to his office several times. I have found him to be highly responsible, knowledgeable, and modest, but by experience, he is the one in whom I put confidence, in his predictions and his estimates.

Chairman Volcker has said, for instance, that he favors a $50 billion reduction per year in the deficits for 3 years, and he predicted that a $50 billion cut, a reduction in the Federal deficit in the next fiscal year, would reduce the interest rates 1 percentage point. I will come back to that later. He said such action would suggest that the budget is coming firmly under control, and would ease upward pressure on interest rates.

I believe he knew what he was talking about. This gentleman has issued a timely warning that unless something is done within a few years we can become a debtor nation in the financial world for the first time in many, many years, since back in the early days of our country.

He put it this way before the House Banking Committee recently, and I am quoting him literally.

> The net investment position of the United States overseas built up gradually over the entire postwar period will in the space of only 3 years be reversed. The richest economy in the world is on the verge of becoming a net debtor.

Now that means that we are not supreme. That means we are not the leading nation in the world. That means in money matters, in the financial markets of the world, we are in doubt. We are in question. We do not have that solid integrity feeling behind our position that was once found when we were taking these leading positions that I referred to earlier.

As I have said, I was here during the Marshall plan, when there was that rehabilitation of Western Europe. And there was a plan for Japan and others, that was extended under the name of the Marshall plan. I was here when it was conceived, debated, finally passed, rigidly applied, and lived up to. Here we are, as I said a minute ago, a little over 30 years later finding ourselves really in an inferior position. I do not mean down in the gutter, but we are not in a superior position in the financial world.

And with our capacity, we just cannot—and I am not in the habit of predicting dire consequences that we are going to be overwhelmed and overcome, but unless we restore that position, considering the strength that we have, the basic strength that we have to do it, then we become a have-not Nation, we become a has-been Nation—call it what you will—and we are on the way down.

I am not saying that we are going to surrender, that we are going to yield to it, but I do realize that we are yielding now, we are postponing, we are not doing enough, almost a do-nothing program. And things cannot continue.

I am no economist, Mr. President, but trying to find out what has happened—what in the world has happened—I believe I know one basic reason that is perhaps controlling. For many years we have been living well beyond our means. We spend more and more above what we had. Most everyone else knew it but we did not realize it enough to act on the thought. We know it now, but we are too slow in trying, really trying hard to do something about it.

Next year, how it would be easier to start next year than now—true, the election will be over. Someone brought that in. But, what about the doubt, what about the suspicion, what about the opinion of fellow nations, what about the financial world's trust in us, in our ability to meet the problem, however great it may be?

We are not doing enough about it, Mr. President, I submit, under any interpretation, unless we really put our teeth into this problem and come up with something far reaching and definite and meaningful like what I call the Hollings plan does.

Now, in view of these facts pressing on us, which will get worse rather than better if we merely wait, what shall we do? I have decided we should by all means act now. We have no choice on that. The longer we put off dealing with this imbalance, the harder it will be to correct it. There is an opportunity to set in motion a long period of growth and stability, but to delay in making a substantial reduction in this deficit places the economy at great risk.

The budget year before the Congress for consideration now, fiscal year 1985, will be the third year of this current recovery period. By all historical precedents, this should be a year of falling deficits. Instead, the deficit will be near record levels: Up.

According to leading financial experts, if the Federal deficits continue, the possibility of higher levels of inflation, followed by a decline in economic growth, is highly possible and probable. It would be very difficult to restrain cost-of-living increases during a period of high inflation. The burden on the people will be far too great. Now, when inflation has cooled, is the time to act.

This budget year, the fiscal year which begins on October 1 of this year, is an opportunity which should not be missed to start on the budget problems. This is the year when we must make a concerted effort to reduce this deficit.

Now, the economy has been through a bleak period. A high price has been paid to beat down inflation. It would be a terrible waste to lose all that has been gained in the battle against inflation by continuing to spend beyond our means and set off another round of inflation. We know now what it would mean.

I believe that we are now at the jumping off place. And what shall happen if we let those things come about? We already know that we will have a return of that devastating evil of inflation. We already know that we will have a return of higher and higher interest rates. And what does that mean? We already know that that means the cutting off of sales of automobiles, of new starts in homes and countless other activities in our economy that caters to the necessities of the American way of life as we have learned to know it and to expect it.

It destroys the concept of stability and reliability and frugality. It destroys the opinion that has been held of us that we have the nerve, we have the ability to see a thing through and to make sacrifices and to make ends meet and keep things on a sound basis for our children and our grandchildren.

I have no doubt—I am not given to scare words if I could think them up, but I cannot think them up—but I have no doubt in my own mind that we are inviting these troubles that we have had in the last few years and inviting a renewal and a new start with a certainty and with consequences that we will have a more devastating round of inflation and things that go with it than we have had before.

We already know that unless we actually check these $200 billion annual deficits, we shall have higher and higher interest rates.

I am impressed with the Hollings plan, that it really tackles the situation, really tackles the problem and gets down to specifics, all problems and all causes, and comes up with a definite constructive, meaningful recommendation. The approach is across the board; that is, reductions apply at a small rate, apply across the board to everyone in sharing this burden, and a fair spreading of the load. And the load can be made, under that method, fairly thin.

It will be felt. I do not want to mislead anyone. But it calls on all groups to carry an equal part of the load according to their situation.

The Hollings plan for deficit reduction will have an early impact on the deficit. It approaches the deficit problem on an overall basis, calls for a sharing of effort. It is in this across-the-board approval of all shared sacrifices and early deficit reductions that makes this plan so appealng, appealing for results. And that is what we want. The amendment holds the defense budget authority growth to 4-percent above inflation for 2 years. Then it holds the growth to 3-percent above inflation through fiscal year 1989.

Now, I am not an expert in the field, but I have been on the Armed Services Committee a long time—since the beginning of the Korean war. The rate of military preparedness, in my opinion, may be stretched out or slowed down, considering the enormous rate in which it is traveling now, or postponed, some of them, the weapons, over future years without injury or serious impairment of our capacity for action.

Now I tried to check out every way I knew before I made that conclusion to this august body that I do respect so highly. This does not apply to every phase of our program, but the military can temporarily defer some of the funds for the sake of a dire emergency like we are facing now in our financial affairs.

I know the cost of weaponry is great. I have some idea about the need. I am confident that this reasonable stretch-out—for a few years, while we are catching our breath and catching up with reality—can be safely done under this idea of 4 percent increase above inflation for 2 years.

In summary, this is what the Hollings amendment plan would specifically do in addition to holddown defense spending grants to the 4 percent above inflation rate. It freezes the nondefense agency programs for 1 year, and holds the growth to 3 percent through 1989. It also freezes for 1 year the pay raises of all Federal civilian employees, military personnel, and then holds the payroll growth to a level not to exceed 3 percent through 1989. It freezes the cost-of-living adjustments for 1 year, and holds future adjustments not to exceed 3 percent through 1989. It freezes physician and hospital reimbursement for 1 year; delays cost-of-living adjustments to tax brackets until 1990; increases tax collection by increasing the tax audit helping the Internal Revenue Service; and directs the Finance Committee to report within 45 days after enactment changes in the law to increase revenues by $4.3 billion in fiscal year 1985; $7.1 billion in fiscal year 1986; $11.7 billion in fiscal year 1987; $19 billion in fiscal year 1988; and $28.7 billion in fiscal year 1989.

Mr. President, none of us like the flavor of increasing taxes. But sometimes it is necessary. We are in the predicament of having outflows greatly exceeding the income. I believe it is virtually unanimous among the financial experts that it is going to require an approach to this problem for both ends of the line, and going to require the changes in the income statute. We are not fooling anyone except ourselves, if we persuade ourselves to believe to the contrary. I emphasize, as the financial world knows, that we cannot get the economy on its feet unless we increase the revenues. That is what I am striking at here in connection with discussing becoming a debtor nation. It is unthinkable to me and I believe on analysis to all of us that we could let that happen. We are on the way down, sure enough, if we do.

Mr. President, I have figures here that show for every 1-percent increase in unemployment, there is an additional cost to the Federal Government of 25 percent per year; $13 billion of that is increased unemployment benefits; $13 billion is lost income tax revenue. It only adds further to the deficit and the national debt to do the same or fail to them which results in high inflation, high interest rates leading to recession and loss of jobs.

We know what that means. We are just out of the frying pan with those experiences. We would rather sacrifice something now or do without some things now, whatever you want to call it—pay the price is another way to describe it—and do those things now avoiding these evil consequences that we must avoid one way or another.

Mr. President, I thought about the proposition—I am not preaching a doctrine—that we are down, out, in despair, and that we do not have the ability to come back. We do have the ability to come back. I think we will come back. Our Nation will get adjusted, on the front where it belongs and partly through the same thing that has always made us grow and prosper; that is, growth, growth and hard work. We had the resources, national resources, will power, ability on the part of our people, and their willpower to make this growth become reality.

We have grown rapidly as a nation during these decades, and we are still a relatively young country. We still have those same resources—a tremendous amount, beginning with iron, coal, others, and coming on around to the human elements, too. Do not discount the American people.

Opponents in the Pacific in World War II discounted the American people, throught we would not fight back, and thought we would give up part rather than go through the cost of victory. Do not discount the American people, and their natural resources, their human resources, their willpower, their ability all the way around. We are going to come back. We will survive.

I remember Mississippi. I remember when we had boll weevils down in the South. They thought the boll weevil was going to wipe out the cotton crops. They did for 2 years. We overcame that and went on to higher production then we had ever known. I remember World War I. After it was over, we had a panic, to use that word. It was an extreme recession. But people fought right on. The automobile business was born about that time. We came out of the big depression of the 1930's. I was practicing law by that time, and was intimately connected with the debacles that we had with extreme loss of everything people had. The drought, the wind in Oklahoma, all those things—we came through all of that.

We came back stronger than we had ever been before. We fought World War II not alone, but we furnished a lot to it. I believe it was said that we fought that war on borrowed money. What we had to borrow was borrowed at a rate of 2.5 percent. Let the record bear that out fully. Yes. We are still a resourceful people. We are determined. We have the manpower and the other things that go to make up success. But we have got to have commonsense enough, nerve enough to turn around, and do the hard things. That is what this amendment does.

I commend the author again for his resourcefulness, and the gentleman on our Budget Committee, as well as others. I have not been on it but others who worked on it deserve tremendous credit. But what we have to do is get together, have a vote. It will not be unanimous, of course. But there has to be a majority that will carry this thing because of its positive features.

It will be politically popular, maybe not now, but years ahead. In years ahead, it will be looked to with pride and appreciation. My time is virtually up.

I thank the Chair.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the hour of 12 noon having arrived, the Senate will stand in recess until 2 p.m.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 12:02 p.m., recessed until 2 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. LUGAR).

AMENDMENT NO. 3036

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the amendment of the Senator from Maine will be considered.

The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, there is an hour on this amendment. But I think it is likely that we can finish much quicker than that. I would urge Senators to confine their remarks to the essentials.

The Senator from Maine has already indicated, I believe, that it will not take very long on his side. I would hope the managers on this side would follow his good example.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader for his remarks. I will accommodate him, and those other Senators who are interested in a prompt resolution of this matter.

Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from Maine.

The Senator from Maine has brought to this body a most inequitable situation which I probably supported, but cannot remember, in the budget restrictions before. I compliment the Senator for permitting us to have an opportunity to demonstrate that many of us in this body realize the necessity to keep the judicial salaries at a pace with at least inflation. Though there are ample criticisms of the judiciary, I am one of those who has said many times that it is not fair to do what we have done.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that I be made a cosponsor of the Senator from Maine's amendment. I thank the Senator sincerely for bringing this to the attention of our colleagues. I hope that our colleagues will support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The name of Mr. SASSER was also added as a cosponsor by unanimous consent.)

The Senator from Maine is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. President, the Senate had the opportunity yesterday afternoon to discuss the particulars of the amendment offered by me, Senator MATHIAS, Senator THURMOND, Senator BENTSEN, and Senator BOSCHWITZ which would extend to the members of the Federal Judiciary the same pay adjustment received by other Federal employees on January 1.

I would like now to just briefly review the important points for the benefit of those Senators who were not present yesterday.

As of January 1, the salaries of officers and employees of the Federal Government were increased 3.5 percent in accordance with the pay plan submitted by President Reagan last summer. Under the provisions of Public Law 98-270, which was enacted only last month, Federal rates of pay have been increased another one-half percent retroactive to January 1.

That is for a total of 4 percent for all Federal employees except Federal judges.

Members of the Federal judiciary received neither pay adjustment because of an amendment to a continuing resolution passed in 1981. This amendment provides that Federal judges are not entitled to any salary increase, except as may be specifically authorized by act of Congress. The Comptroller General has ruled several times, most recently in connection with the 3.5-percent pay adjustment under the President's plan, that section 140 of Public Law 97-92 is permanent legislation and that absent specific authorization by Congress, Federal judges are not entitled to across-the-board pay increases given other Federal employees.

That is where we stand today. My amendment would constitute the required authorization for Federal judges to receive a pay increase equal to that afforded other Federal workers this year. That proposition, on its fact, is modest and equitable.

It is modest, if we consider the scope of who is affected under my amendment; namely, there are roughly 700 Federal judges, including Justices of the Supreme Court, judges of the Federal Appeals Court, Federal district court judges to U.S. Tax Court judges; 700 Federal judges. The cost of the amendment? The Congressional Budget Office estimates the cost at roughly $1.7 million. I should also point out that in compiling its baseline assumption for the budget resolution, CBO included a pay adjustment for Federal judges. Therefore, this amendment's adoption will have no effect on the deficit when contrasted with the budget resolution.

As a policy matter, I also believe the scope of the amendment is modest. The amendment authorizes a pay adjustment for Federal judges for only 1 year. It in no way repeals or alters section 140 of Public Law 97-92.

The amendment is also equitable. The question may arise in this debate as to "Why Federal judges? Why are we singling out judges for special consideration?" It is an excellent question, Mr. President, one which lies at the heart of my amendment. Without passage of the amendment, judges, and judges alone, would be excluded from a pay adjustment under the provisions of this bill.

My amendment, far from singling out Federal judges for special consideration, does, in fact, just the opposite. It includes judges with other Federal employees for a pay increase retroactive to January. Judges will get nothing more, nothing less, than other Federal workers under my amendment.

Finally, the Senate may be asked to consider my amendment in light of pay rates for Members of this body and the House of Representatives. The question of our own pay is, of course, one of the most difficult questions with which we must deal. It makes no sense in logic for Members of this body to believe we somehow improve our circumstances by denying the Federal judges an increase given other Federal employees. Or that we elevate our discussion relative to Members' pay when we include the issue of judges' pay.

For all of these reasons, Mr. President, I believe this Senate should support my amendment so that the highly deserving individuals who compromise our Federal judiciary—700 men and women entrusted with the most serious responsibilities—will not be singularly excluded from an otherwise across-the-board pay increase retroactive to January.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is on his way to address the issue. He should be here shortly.

May I ask the distinguished Senator from Maine a question?

Even with the Senator's explanation—because some of us have been busy, have not had a chance to be here, and have not been able to read the Record—there still appears to be some confusion.

Would the Senator tell the Senator from New Mexico again, whether or not the judges would be increased 3.5 percent without the Mitchell amendment, and they will go to 4 with it, or did they get totally eliminated in the redrafting that occurred on the earlier reconciliation bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. Unless this amendment passes, they get nothing because the provision added in 1981 to the then continuing resolution provided that Federal judges cannot receive a pay increase. I quote from that provision. "Except as may be specifically authorized by act of Congress." The Comptroller General has ruled several times that that requires specific authorization by Congress for any increase to be received by judges. As a consequence, Federal judges receive neither the 3.5 percent that was provided in the President's recommendation, nor the 0.5 of 1 percent that was added last month.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND), had indicated a desire to speak on this amendment. He is, however, opening a hearing at this moment and cannot leave. He has authorized me to say that he supports the amendment and urges other Senators to do the same.

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the Mitchell-Bentsen-Mathias amendment providing Federal judges with the 3.5 percent pay adjustment retroactively to January 1984. This adjustment has already been received by other Federal employees.

This summer the Quadrennial Commission on Legislative and Judicial Salaries will begin meeting on recommendations for legislative and judicial compensation levels. This amendment, however, would grant Federal judges only that amount of pay increase that other Federal employees have already received. It is only fair and just that these men and women who serve in such extremely demanding and critical roles receive the compensation that was afforded other Federal employees by Executive order in January. Until the Quadrennial Commission makes its recommendations to the President early next year, I believe we must provide Federal judges with this pay adjustment.

I am aware that in these times of high deficits and spiralling Government spending we must be mindful of the way we spend our dollars. I also believe, however, that it would be highly inequitable for this body to use Federal judges as the starting point for a revised fiscal policy. I would stress that this is only a pay adjustment that every other Federal employee has already received, including Members of this distinguished body. I realize that the issue of salary increases for Members of Congress is a very sensitive one, and that we have voted to rescind last January's pay increase for ourselves. But that measure is not public law.

There can be no argument that Federal judges serve a vital function in this country. It is through the opinions that they write and the rulings that they make that the Constitution is enforced and upheld, and that the rights of individuals are protected. Unlike other professionals, Federal judges do not enjoy incentives or bonuses for increased productivity or professional expertise. Their sole source of income derives from the salaries they receive from the Federal Government.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, I must note that it is incumbent for us to be able to continue to attract and retain highly competent and motivated individuals to the Federal judiciary. We cannot expect the best and the brightest of the legal profession to remain in or join the ranks of the Federal judiciary if we cannot, at the minimum, guarantee them that they will be treated on par with other Federal employees. As we wait on the recommendations of the Quadrennial Commission, I believe we must grant the Federal judges the pay raise already received by other Federal employees.●

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I know of no other requirements for time. I believe we are prepared on this side to vote.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I hope the majority leader would put in a quorum before we do that, because we have a Senator on this side who is counting on a vote at 2:30 p.m.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have Senators who need to leave. That is the reason I was trying to precipitate it a little bit. I assure the minority leader I shall be generous in accommodating the length of the rollcall as far as I can. Of course I shall.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is 2:20 p.m. We have checked on our side and there are no other speakers. We are prepared on this side to go forward with the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield back his time?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do, Mr. President. I am prepared to vote at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. ABDNOR), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. EAST), and the Senator from Alaska (Mr. MURKOWSKI), are necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Illinois (Mr. DIXON) and the Senator from Colorado (Mr. HART), are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who wish to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 67, nays 28, as follows:

So, Mr. MITCHELL's amendment (No. 3036) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—AMENDMENT NO. 3041

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, earlier I had a conversation with the minority leader about the possibility of establishing a time certain to vote on the Hollings amendment, which is now pending, after the disposition of the Mitchell amendment.

I wonder if the minority leader is in a position now to consider a request that I might put to provide for an up-or-down vote on the Hollings amendment at 5:30 p.m. and that the time between the time we recommence considering the Hollings amendment and 5:30 p.m. be equally divided.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have discussed this with the distinguished Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) who is on the floor. He has indicated, I believe, that he would be agreeable to this approach.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I do not know how many speakers they have on that side. The Senator from North Dakota, Senator ANDREWS, would know on that side of the aisle how long they wish to talk in opposition. When you say divided, then we are going to end up with about an hour's time and I know six that want to talk on this side. I think we could do it by 5:30 p.m.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I may say I discussed this with our caucus today and with Senator ANDREWS. He feels that we could do it easily in the time provided. I do not think there will be many speakers on this side. I do not think there would be any difficulty.

I see the Senator from North Dakota is here. I yield so that he may respond.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I appreciate the leader yielding. I certainly want to accommodate the movement of this legislation through the Senate. If we are going to divide the time between that side and this side, I would be glad to yield some time that came to this side. I have said essentially all I have to say on this. I would be glad to yield some of that time to Senator HOLLINGS. I would say an hour on this side and 1½ hours on that side would probably be a fair breakdown.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, could I ask the distinguished chairman of the committee, the manager on this side, if that would suit him.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the hour on this side would be in opposition and I would say to my friend I do not think I would use it all and to the extent that I did not, I would yield it to him; 1½ hours on his side and 1 hour on mine.

Mr. HOLLINGS. All right.

Mr. EXON. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have not made the request yet. Just so Members can reserve, I make that request. Let me state it for clarification.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Senate resumes consideration of the Hollings amendment at not later than 3 p.m. today, the time between 3 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. be divided as follows: 1½ hours under the control of the distinguished mover of the amendment, Senator HOLLINGS, and 1 hour under the control of the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI; and that at the hour of 5:30 p.m. the vote occur on the Hollings amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, only for the purpose of stating for the record that this side has checked by telephone with offices of Senators and there is no objection.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. EXON. Reserving the right to object, was the arrangement made for 1½ hours on this side, for the proponents, and an hour on that side in opposition?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Right.

Mr. EXON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, while the Hollings amendment is now pending under the order previously entered, do I understand there is a D'Amato amendment that will take a minute or two?

Mr. DOMENICI. There is a D'Amato-Moynihan amendment that will take 2 minutes. Both sides have conferred on it and I assume we will accept it.

Mr. BAKER. That was why I provided that the time between 3 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. would be divided. If the Senator wishes to proceed in that manner, who is the author of the amendment?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I am offering it for myself and Mr. D'AMATO.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for the Senator from New York to be recognized for the purpose of calling up an amendment and the debate and action on that amendment will not extend beyond the hour of 3 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3042

(Purpose: To require the disposal of certain lands at Montauk Air Force Station, East Hampton, N.Y., for park and recreation purposes)

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and my distinguished colleague, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York (Mr. Moynihan), for himself and Mr. D'Amato, proposes an amendment numbered 3042.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

"SEC. . The Administrator of General Services shall assign to the Secretary of the Interior for use as a public park or recreation area, portions of the Montauk Air Forces Station in East Hampton Township, Suffolk County, New York, totaling two hundred and seventy-eight acres that were declared surplus to the needs of the United States Government on December 21, 1981.

"SEC. . The Administrator of General Services shall assign the land identified in the first section of this Act to the Secretary of the Interior within thirty days of enactment of this Act. Within thirty days of said assignment, the Secretary of the Interior shall, in exchange for the transfer of the fee title to one hundred and twenty-five acres of the real property owned by the State of New York at Fire Island, New York, to the Secretary of the Interior, convey the property to the State of New York for public park or recreation uses in accordance with section 203(k)(2) of the Federal Property and Administrative Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 484(k)(2)."

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the amendment that I offer today with my colleague from New York, Senator D'AMATO, is identical to the legislation we introduced on April 25, 1984, S. 2595. This amendment would compel the Administrator of the General Services Administration to relinquish to the Secretary of the Interior, 278 acres of the Montauk Air Force Station in Suffolk, N.Y.; land the GSA declared surplus to the needs of the Federal Government more than 2 years ago, on December 21, 1981. The Secretary of the Interior will exchange the land for 125 acres of State-owned parkland on Fire Island.

This is not the first time I have brought this matter to the attention of the Senate. Last year, I introduced S. 2041, which simply would have directed the Government to do that which a 35-year-old statute authorizes and encourages. The Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 allows for the free transfer of surplus property to States and local governments for park and recreational use. Unfortunately this policy changed under the current administration, and the GSA opposed such a transfer for the Montauk property. This policy, however, is inconsistent with the intent of the law. Instead GSA has sold similar properties to the highest bidders, and in fact, GSA attempted to do just that with the Montauk Air Force Station.

This amendment will insure that a marvelous tract of recreational land will become part of the Montauk Point State Park, in accordance with the desires of the elected officials and citizens of eastern Long Island. And permit to me to mention, the Secretary of the Interior supports this proposal. Secretary Clark wrote to Ray Kline, Acting Administrator of GSA, that—

Keeping such environmentally significant property as Montauk Point in public ownership is most important, especially where the public can enjoy and appreciate it through the superlative development program proposed by the State.

The Department of the Interior will be compensated, by receiving a stretch of beach property worth perhaps three times as much as the Montauk tract. This kind offer from the New York State Office of Parks, Recreation and Historic Preservation will close a long-time gap in the Fire Island National Seashore.

The General Services Administration notwithstanding, there is complete agreement that this precious land should belong to the people of New York and used for recreation. My amendment will insure this happy outcome.

The Secretary of the Interior is most anxious to do this. I am authorized to state for my friend, and Senator D'AMATO's friend, Orin Lehman, commissioner of the New York State Office of Parks, Recreation, and Historic Preservation, that he is most anxious to bring it about, as well.

I ask unanimous consent that certain material pertaining to this matter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY LEGISLATURE, COUNTY OF SUFFOLK,
Riverhead, N.Y., March 8, 1984.

Hon. DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: This is to advise that at a regular meeting of the Suffolk County Legislature held on February 28, 1984, the following motion on the Sense of the Legislature was taken and approved by a majority of its members:

Sense of the Legislature resolution supporting exchange of Montauk Air Base properties for Fire Island Seashore properties.

As Clerk of the Legislature, I have been requested to forward notification of this action to your office.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM H. ROGERS,
Clerk.

SENSE OF THE LEGISLATURE RESOLUTION SUPPORTING EXCHANGE OF MONTAUK AIR BASE PROPERTIES FOR FIRE ISLAND SEASHORE PROPERTIES

Whereas, the General Services Administration (GSA) has placed the properties at the Montauk Air Base, Southampton, New York, up for public auction and has received bids in connection therewith; and

Whereas, such public auction may result in the acquisition of said properties by private interests which may develop such land for residential and/or commercial purposes; and

Whereas, the Secretary of the U.S. Department of the Interior has offered to transfer 277.6 acres at the Montauk Air Base to the State of New York, to be used for State Park purposes, in exchange for a transfer from the State to the Federal government of 125 acres at the Fire Island Seashore in lieu of the above-mentioned public auction; and

Whereas, this proposal will preserve the open nature of the land at the Montauk Air Base and constitutes fair exchange of value between the State and Federal governments, now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this Legislature hereby supports the proposal of the U.S. Department of the Interior to transfer 277.6 acres at the Montauk Air Base to the State of New York in exchange for 125 acres at the Fire Island Seashore in lieu of a public auction of said properties; and, be it further

Resolved, That the Clerk of the County Legislature is hereby directed to file copies of this resolution with the Long Island delegation to the U.S. House of Representatives, to the U.S. Senators from the State of New York, and to the Secretary of the U.S. Department of the Interior.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 6, 1984.

Hon. GERALD P. CARMEN,
Administrator, General Services Administration, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CARMEN: The concern of the state of New York and its Congressional delegation regarding the February 8 sale by GSA of the surplus Montauk Air Force Station has been brought to my attention. I also understand that the State of New York has proposed a mutual conveyance of 125 acres of State owned land for addition to the Fire Island National seashore and the federally owned 282 acre Montauk property for addition to the Montauk Point State Park.

The Montauk property is surrounded on three sides by the State Park, has significant natural features and a fragile ecology. I am sure it could be developed by the state to serve important public outdoor recreation needs. The 125 acre State of New York property is identified in the Fire Island National Seashore Land Protection Plan as the last remaining piece of land needed to complete the acquisition requirements for the Seashore. For these reasons, I believe such a mutual conveyance is appropriate and advantageous to both the Federal Government and the State of New York.

The National Park Service informs me that the State of New York will soon submit an application for public benefit discount conveyance of the entire Montauk Air Force Station surplus property to replace their current application for only 35 acres. The Town of East Hampton has written the National Park Service withdrawing its application in favor of the State. I would appreciate you making no final decision on the disposition of the Montauk property until I am able to evaluate the State of New York's revised application.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM CLARK.

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE,
Washington, D.C., January 30, 1981.

Hon. DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: This is to provide you with information concerning property disposal at Montauk Air Force Station, New York.

Attached is a copy of Disposal Report No. 511 being submitted to the Senate and House Committees on Armed Services. The report describes the property in detail and indicates the circumstances of disposal.

We hope this information will be useful to you. If additional facts on this matter would be helpful, please let us know.

Sincerely,

JOHN G. SCHROEDER,
Colonel, USAF, Chief, Program Liaison Division, Office of Legislative Liaison.

Attachment.

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE, DISPOSAL REPORT NO. 511, JANUARY 30, 1981

Submittal Pursuant to Section 2662, Title 10, United States Code.

1. Name of Installation: Montauk Air Force Station, Montauk Communications, Facility Annex, New York.

Using Service: Air Defense/Tactical Air Command (USAF).

Former Use: Radar Station.

Land Area: 314 Acres Fee, 10 Acres Easement. 103 Buildings, including 27 Appropriated Fund Family Housing units, totaling 203,131SF.

Cost: Land, $125,000; Improvements, $10,050,000, Total $10,175,000.

Proposed Action: Report the property to the General Services Administration (GSA) for disposal.

Authority for Disposal: Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended.

2. This reports an Air Force proposal to dispose of all Air Force controlled facilities and land at Montauk Air Force Station, New York, and its off-base Communications Facility Annex. The station is located on the eastern tip of Long Island, New York.

3. Land for the radar station was acquired from the Army on what had been a portion of former Camp Hero, a Coast Artillery post. Land for the off-base communications annex was acquired in 1959. The main installation was activated in 1950 as an aircraft control and warning radar site in the developing air defense system. The station operated height finder and search radar in support of the 21st Air Division's air defense mission at Hancock Field, New York, The proposed disposal results from the radar station's function, but not the site, being transferred to the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) as part of the Joint Surveillance System (JSS). This combined surveillance will meet both FAA's civil aviation requirements and the Air Force's detection and reporting requirements for the North American Air Defense Command.

4. This property has been screened with the Departments of the Army and Navy, the Defense Agencies and Services, the National Guard Bureau, and the U.S. Coast Guard (DOT), with negative results. It is planned to declare the installation excess to the requirements of the Department of Defense for disposal through GSA. A condition imposed on disposal of the off-base Communications Facility Annex is that the Air Force continue to use that facility until the Regional Operations Control Center programmed for Griffiss Air Force Base, New York is activated in late 1982. The Report of Excess will contain the proviso that the net proceeds from sale of the family housing will accrue to the Family Housing Management Account, Defense. The Air Force does not contemplate acquiring any property at or near this location in the foreseeable future. It is certified that the property is not suitable for exchange for other real property authorized to be acquired for military purposes.

5. This disposal has been approved by the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Manpower, Reserve Affairs, and Logistics).

[From Newsday, Feb. 14, 1984]

REJECT THE BID FOR FEDERAL LAND AT MONTAUK

The Reagan administration's decision to sell 278 acres of surplus federal land at Montauk was wrong from the beginning—and now that the sale has been held, it's clear that the price was wrong, too. The highest bid was $1.3 million lower than the administration's $3.25-million estimate of the property's fair market value.

The acreage, surrounded on three sides by Montauk State Park, is ill suited for development, and it's now zoned only for park use. It contains valuable fresh-water marshland, has little groundwater, and its soil is heavy with clay, making wastewater disposal difficult.

The General Services Administration should reject the bid and begin negotiations with New York State to exchange the Montauk property for 125 acres of state-owned land within the federally owned Fire Island National Seashore.

The GAS went ahead with the sale despite the opposition of Interior Secretary William Clark and the intervention of U.S. District Judge Leonard Wexler, who ruled the day before the auction that if the sale proceeded, no title transfer could take place until a hearing had been held. That hearing has yet to be scheduled.

GSA Administrator Gerald Carmen has the power to refuse the $1.9-million bid. "If the government were going to buy 125 acres on Fire Island, $1.9 million would be a down payment," said Rep. William Carney (C-Hauppauge). "I will suggest very strongly to Carmen that he aggressively pursue swapping that land."

That's good advice; for everyone's sake, Carmen should heed it.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the amendment offered by myself and my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from my State. This amendment is identical to legislation we offered last week. It would transfer jurisdiction over an old Air Force base at Montauk on Long Island, N.Y., from the General Services Administration to New York State for use as a park and simultaneously, it would transfer a park at Fire Island currently administered by the State, to the Department of the Interior. This is a fair and even swap of State land for Federal land.

I believe that Senator MOYNIHAN and I have fashioned a very reasonable compromise in this matter. The General Services Administration had opposed our earlier efforts in this area which would have transferred the Federal land to New York State without any compensation to the Federal Government except, of course, for the knowledge that the land was being put to its optimal use.

Our current proposal, however, will transfer to the Federal Government land that, by all accounts, is worth more than the land for which it is being exchanged. In fact, the Department of the Interior is eager to acquire the Fire Island parcel and has gone on record in support of that acquisition.

The parcel of land at the abandoned Air Force base has been the subject of lengthy negotiations between the local government and various local citizens groups and the GSA. These negotiations have bogged down, however, because the town government did not believe that any portion of the parcel should be used for private development.

The town and State subsequently initiated a lawsuit to prevent the sale of the land. That suit is currently being held in abeyance while the GSA prepares an environmental impact assessment.

As these negotiations have progressed, however, the Department of the Interior also has become interested in the land: The State of New York had filed a request with them to have the land considered as a suitable site for a park. Mr. President, I think it is especially worth noting that the Interior Department issued a press release last Thursday stating that the GSA ought to accede to the request of State and local officials and make the area a park.

I believe that this history clearly demonstrates that, but for a few bureaucrats, everyone involved with this problem believes that the area is most suitable for park usage. It is for that reason that Senator MOYNIHAN and I are urging that this amendment be accepted. I urge my colleagues to support us in this endeavor.

Mr. President, I am delighted to have had the opportunity to work with my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from New York, in bringing about this magnificent result. I commend the senior Senator for his perspicacity and for his interest in preserving the delicate balance of fragile lands on Long Island. And also to make available and keep open to future generations this magnificent park and recreational area.

Indeed, this is a reasonable compromise which will add to the parklands of both New York State and the Federal Government. These precious resources on Montauk Point can never be replaced.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I emphasize that this is a matter that my distinguished colleague and I were together on from the beginning and I am happy to state the Federal Government, except for one small portion, has been working together on from the beginning.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, we have had an opportunity to review the Moynihan-D'Amato amendment. Obviously it is not exactly the kind of amendment that belongs on this budget bill that is here, but we have been convinced that it is the right thing to do and that it will be helpful to the Senators and the State of New York.

As a consequence, we have no objection on this side. I understand that the distinguished Senator from Florida on the minority side has reviewed it and has no objection. With that, I join in the motion that we approve the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for debate has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN).

The amendment (No. 3042) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. D'AMATO. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3041

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. My understanding now is that the Senate returns to the Hollings amendment, the Hollings-Andrews amendment. Is the Senator correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct, the Senate returns to the Hollings amendment. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I want to thank the distinguished Senator from Mississippi. He has made an informative statement about the conditions we have worked ourselves into. He gives us a sense of hope, and a sense of purpose. But as Senator STENNIS has stated, there is going to have to be a sobering up, a stopping, looking, and listening by us as a body to get hold of ourselves and control these runaway deficits so that we can give hope to the next generation.

The distinguished Senator from Nebraska, as a former Governor, has been giving real leadership throughout on our Budget Committee at every particular turn to try to hold these deficits down, and practice fiscal responsibility at the Federal level, which he did as a Governor at the State level. He understands, and knows it better than anyone I know of in this particular Chamber. We yield to him as a cosponsor. I am really following his leadership.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ARMSTRONG). Who yields time?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield such time as necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair. I thank my friend and colleague from South Carolina.

Mr. President, I hope that every Member of this body, before we vote on the matter before us, will take time to stop by and take a look at the charts that are on display here. They are very self-explanatory. It is clear that the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, cosponsored by myself and the Senator from North Dakota, is the only—I emphasize the word "only"—proposition that is before this body that really does anything about deficits. I simply say that all of the figures on this chart are CBO figures.

Oftentimes in this body, we try to compare apples with oranges and oranges with apples. These are factual figures. We have bitten the bullet. We are recognizing the fact that this country is not going to be able to go on with $200 billion deficits, plus or minus $10 billion or so, forever without doing something about it.

I simply say that the President's Rose Garden approach is not a downpayment on the deficit, as has been loudly proclaimed in the press; in fact, it is not even a bandaid. It clearly shows that, even the Rose Garden approach of the President, which I understand is very near obtaining half of the votes in this Chamber, according to the CBO will not—I emphasize the word "not"—reduce the budget deficit at the end of 3 years.

When we talk about these propositions, we should emphasize not only what again is the deficit in its amount, but also what happens to the budget deficit at the end of each year. It does not just go away, as you know, Mr. President; it is transferred at the end of each year over to the national debt. At the end of this fiscal year, we shall find that the national debt has nearly doubled in the last 4 years. I cite that only as a reference point. Most of the discussions that will take place here today, I suspect, will be on the deficit, where the annual deficit will be at the end of a certain period of time.

Mr. President, this is not a time to find fault; this is a time to seek remedy to the catastrophic situation that faces the economy of this country. Somebody out home last week said to me that the real problem is that too many people in the United States do not realize the difference between a $20 billion deficit and $200 billion deficit. It is about time—and, hopefully, the discussions on this and other proposals to be offered will rivet home the necessity for change in the direction this country has been moving in with regard to irresponsible spending programs.

Supposedly, in some sections of the economy in the United States today, we are seeing an economic recovery. You can pick up any newspaper, you can hear it in every newscast. I can tell the Senate that the economic recovery has passed by completely one of the basic sectors of our economy. That is agriculture. Never since the great days of the 1930 Depression have we seen a time when agriculture is in the difficult situation it is in now.

This economic recovery that supposedly is going on has been caused, in the opinion of this Senator, by Keynesian economics running completely wild, Keynesian economics that have been attacked by certain conservative groups in this country from its very inception, yet those same conservative economic groups are saying today, "We are all for Keynesian economics; it is a wonderful, great thing." It has been embraced by some of the conservative Members.

I do not know whether the Senator from Nebraska is a conservative or moderate—I am not a liberal—but I certainly have a record in my home life, in my business, and in my entire career in public service as being one who always balanced the budget when I had control. I have not had control, obviously since I came to the U.S. Senate, or things would be run a lot differently than they have been.

I simply say in this regard, Mr. President, that for the last 3 years, each and every year, this Senator has joined with others on this floor in sounding the alarm for the difficulties that were obvious to anyone who wanted to take a look at the facts. But we were shunted aside and Keynesian economics has continued to run wild.

There are three reasons, Mr. President, in my opinion, for the economic recovery that is not going on in some sectors for our economy—three reasons.

First, history shows us that whenever we have been on a wartime footing economy, the good times have rolled. Does anyone question that we are not on a wartime economic footing today? That is one reason.

Second, we always let the good times roll when we have massive tax cuts. There cannot be any question that we have had massive, huge tax cuts, titled toward the wrong segment of our society, in the opinion of this Senator, to the more wealthy in this country. But certainly the good times have rolled partially because of the tax cuts and the infusion of that money into the economy.

Third, if you look back through history, you will see that the good times have always rolled when we had massive deficits—the Federal Government spending but not paying for it, not balancing income with outgo. And the good times have always rolled in the past when that has happened. I simply put out that never before in history have we had a situation such as we have had in the last 3 years, where little, if any, attention has been paid to these massive deficits. Never before in our history have we begun to match the deficits that we have piled up in the last 3 years, and never before in our history have we amassed the huge national debt that we have amassed in the last 3 years.

Mr. President, 4 short years ago, in 1980, the Federal budget deficit was projected to be under $200 billion. My friend from South Carolina and I, with other Members on the floor, are members of the Budget Committee. Ed Muskie was chairman of the committee at that time. I remember well when he was pointing across that room late one evening and said, "If we just work a little harder now, we can balance this budget, because we are only $19 billion to $20 billion away."

Where are we today? Over $200 billion.

I recall the great efforts expended by the Senate Budget Committee, aimed at whittling down that deficit so our committee could submit a balanced Federal budget to this floor. Today, deficits are projected to be near $200 billion for many, many years to come. In my mind, the projected deficit is 10 times as large as it was in 1980. It is at least worthy of 10 times the effort to eliminate it. Instead, the steady stream of $200 billion deficits is treated with a shocking lack of action.

Between the end of World War II and the beginning of this administration, deficits as a percentage of our gross national product never exceeded 4 percent. In 1983 the deficit was 6.1 percent of GNP and is expected to remain in the 4- to 5-percent range through the end of the decade.

The accumulated national debt has nearly doubled from $791 billion in 1981 to over $1.4 trillion today. By the end of 1986, it is expected to top the $2 trillion mark.

As yearly deficits add to the debt, the proportion of Federal resources devoted to interest expense necessarily increases. Interest expense is the fastest growing part of the Federal budget. In 1971 it comprised 7 percent of total outlays. In fiscal year 1985 it is at 13 percent and by 1987 it is expected to devour a full 15 percent of the budget.

This year's deficit alone will make next year's budget $20 billion more expensive than the previous year; $20 billion could fund the entire medicaid program. Increased interest costs since 1981 have more than offset the savings from cuts in social programs, many of them very painful.

The Federal Government's enormous appetite for credit has kept interest rates much higher than they need to be. Real interest rates, the difference between the nominal interest rate and inflation, is at record high levels. Historically, the gap between interest rates and inflation was less than 2 percent. In 1983 it was an astounding 7 percent.

In turn, the high real rates of interest attract foreign capital to this country like a magnet, pushing the value of the dollar to record levels. While a super-strong dollar is great for American tourists abroad, it is devastating for export-sensitive industries such as agriculture. Last year produced a record $69 billion balance of trade deficit, and there is relief in sight. Ambassador Brock, the U.S. Trade Representative, has estimated that figure to increase to $100 billion at the end of this year. The Department of Commerce estimates that the 17-percent decrease in exports from 1981 to 1983 cost American workers 1.3 million jobs.

A few of us have recognized the evils of deficit financing for quite some time. The record shows that we did not just preach, but we offered serious legislation to courageously attack the problem. Mr. President, I can assure you that this Senator is no "born-again deficit cutter." As a small businessman in Lincoln, Nebr., I learned that income must match expenditures or financial disaster will result.

As Governor of the State of Nebraska, I learned how difficult it can be for the executive and legislative branches to work together to produce a balanced budget as required by our State constitution, and it required a great deal of effort, but, Mr. President, in each and every year it was done. And we can do it here if we have the courage.

As a U.S. Senator for over 5 years, my greatest disappointment has been the Federal Government's inability to bring its budget under control.

The very President who once said he would "fight to the last blow to balance the budget by 1984" recommended a budget in February with $200 billion deficits for each of the next 5 years. Despite calls for a constitutional balanced budget amendment, which I support, this is the first administration not to attempt to balance the budget within its 5-year plan.

In the past 2 years, I have come to this floor to support alternative budgets which take an across-the-board approach to deficit reduction. Today Senators HOLLINGS, ANDREWS, and I offer a comprehensive across-the-board plan to put the Federal budget on an accelerated glide path toward balance. This bipartisan freeze is a good plan which makes serious but achievable deficit reductions. It is a plan which actually balances the budget using sound and realistic economic assumptions as prepared by the CBO.

Mr. President, I cite once again the blue line on the end which shows deficits plunging from the $200 billion range down to $26 billion in 5 years, and I say that there is no other plan that would even come close to doing anything like that.

This package concentrates primarily on spending cuts, saving $450 billion in spending over 5 years. Because the revenue portion of this package is significantly less than the spending cuts, the plan guarantees that increased revenues go toward deficit reduction rather than new spending. It is also a plan which controls entitlement program growth and allows an acceptable level of growth in necessary defense expenditures.

This $800 billion deficit reduction package over 5 years gives the Senate its only real opportunity to make the meaningful deficit reductions which will send a strong signal to the financial markets to reduce interest rates and will spur long-term economic recovery. We can hope for no improvement in interest or exchange rates unless we attack the deficit.

The country is bobbing up and down in a sea of red ink. Whether our economy drowns or swims to safety, depends on what we do now. To wait until after the national elections to make serious deficit reduction is not only an example of cowardice, it shows callous disregard for the economic well-being of the very people who sent us here to represent them.

It is time to stop nibbling away at these corrosive deficits and, instead, take a large bite out of them. Only a comprehensive, long-term budget plan like that being presented now can do the job. I urge the Senate in the strongest possible terms to vote for the Hollings-Andrews-Exon plan to restore our Nation to fiscal sanity.

Mr. President, I would like to have printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks letters that I have received from the National Association of Realtors and the National Association of Home Builders which address and support the plan that I have just outlined.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, these two organizations represent highly sensitive, interest-sensitive, industries. They have extensive research analysts who look at the different proposals that come out. The proposal now before us is the only one that these and many other organizations and individuals are supporting.

So I simply say that before the vote is taken on this proposal about 5:30 today, I hope my colleagues will look at the proposal, understand it, and be prepared to support the matter before us.

I yield back to my friend from South Carolina.

EXHIBIT 1

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF HOME BUILDERS,
Washington, D.C., March 29, 1984.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the 120,000 members of the National Association of Home Builders, I am writing to urge rapid action on a deficit reduction package. After reviewing a variety of options which have been presented, we would support the bipartisan "freeze" proposal sponsored by Senator Hollings, Senator Andrews and Senator Exon. We believe that a one-year freeze on all domestic discretionary and entitlement program increases represents the fairest way of spreading the burden across-the-board. Similarly, the 3% rate of growth in defense spending represents a reasonable attempt to hold down spending without crippling our national security.

We would urge that the increased revenue portion of the plan similarly focus on broad-based, across-the-board "shared sacrifice" as opposed to the Finance Committee's approach which takes at least 20% of the increased revenue from the real estate sector of the economy.

We are deeply concerned about recent increases in interest rates which threaten the continuation of economic recovery. We are pleased to see various alternative budget proposals which offer greater deficit reduction than the three-year $150 billion "down-payment." And we share the view of Senator Chiles that such competition can lead to "a bidding war to see who can cut the deficit the most."

We urge you to act responsibly to reduce the deficit substantially in FY '85. We support an approach which is fair, across-the-board and represents the spirit of "shared sacrifice" in the Hollings-Andrews-Exon plan. We believe that this is the only plan which has been proposed which would provide for a budget near balance in five years.

A budget reduction package of $285 billion over three years and $800 billion over five years is politically attainable . . . and makes good common sense. We cannot wait until next year to take such a step in order to keep the economic recovery on track.

Get on with the "competition"—the American people . . . and the American homebuyer will be the real beneficiaries.

Sincerely,

PETER D. HERDER,
President.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS,
Washington, D.C., April 5, 1984.

Hon. J. JAMES EXON,
U.S. Senate, Hart Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR EXON: The National Association of Realtors is extremely concerned about the threat to continued economic growth in housing and the entire economy imposed by the continued enormous deficits. We continue to urge significant deficit reduction now through spending reductions in all categories: defense growth should be held to the 5% real growth level agreed upon by Congress last year; real domestic discretionary spending should be frozen; and the rapid growth of entitlements should be slowed. Any tax increases necessary to help lower the deficit toward balance should not discourage savings and investment.

We offer support for the deficit reduction plan you are sponsoring since it calls for across the board spending reductions. Of all proposals being offered it is the only one which promise to bring the budget to a near balance by 1989. This result would be a dramatic improvement over the $326 billion deficit now being predicted for 1989.

We are concerned, however, that the plan encompasses the tax increases included in the Finance Committee bill and calls for an additional $50.9 billion to be recommended by the Finance Committee. We urge you to oppose tax changes which discourage savings and investment. Some provisions of the Finance Committee bill, if put in law, such as increases in the cost recovery by 33% from 15 to 20 years would effectively reduce the growth of jobs and family income. Moreover, the rollback of ACRS for rental residences and commercial structures proposed by the Finance Committee bill asks housing and real estate alone to bear 25% of the total tax bill, twenty-five times greater than the burden on all industries.

Requiring the Finance Committee to report $50.9 billion additional tax increases could have the effect of putting housing or other investment in greater jeopardy unless you make clear your intention to encourage savings and investment.

To suggest, as I have in this letter, that your proposal contains flaws is not to damn it with faint praise. We understand that your support of the Dole package is based on a support of the aggregate number only, a position we too support, and that you, as well as we might oppose components within the Finance bill. We are merely trying to point out, as we have consistently done throughout the deficit debates of the last five years, that there are two basic ways to provide jobs and economic growth:

(1) Through the stimulation provided by new, excessive government expenditures and deficits;

(2) By providing the private sector with sufficient incentives to save and invest in the capacity to grow on a more long-term and stable basis—clearly this approach is preferable.

With that understanding, the National Association of Realtors supports your effort to reduce deficits.

It is in the national interest that a significant deficit reduction plan be adopted now. Interest rates are already rising—we cannot wait.

Sincerely,

DONALD H. TREADWELL,
President.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Nebraska.

The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. TSONGAS) wants to be heard on this matter, and the distinguished Senator from Arkansas (Mr. BUMPERS) wishes to speak at 4 o'clock.

While we are waiting, I say to the Senator from Nebraska that I think there has to be a way to get attention. The Senator has done a splendid job.

I do not want to insult anybody. I have tried some harsh language. The word "deficit" is an accounting term. All of us suffer from deficits in our families and personal accounts, so we do not become alarmed by it.

I reiterate that the deficits from the end of World War II, 1947, until 1980, a 33-year period, were only $464.5 billion; and the deficits for the 3-year period 1982, 1983, and 1984, the 3 years my friends on the other side of the aisle have been in charge of Congress, were $495 billion.

So I refer to the profligacy of this Congress and the one before it—wild extravagance. I had to get a better word. We may get out of their chairs some people who are listening on their radios, and maybe they will come to the floor and defend themselves. According to Webster, the definition of "profligacy" is "completely given up to dissipation and licentiousness." That is Congress—"completely given up to dissipation and licentiousness." That is far better than the word "deficit." "Deficit" just does not get anybody's attention. I have tried for 2 years on the highways and byways, and you see where I am. I am back here.

I hope the distinguished chairman of our Budget Committee can tell us the wisdom of the Rose Garden strategy for about 10 minutes of his time, while we are waiting for Senator TSONGAS and Senator BUMPERS.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will be pleased to use 10 minutes.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I want to hear the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, because this will be the best act off Broadway this year. I know how he feels. I know how responsible he is and how he has to carry this one. It ought to be very interesting, so I am going to watch.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I say to my good friend that he described it as the best act off Broadway. I want him to know that there is no way I can follow him, so I do not know what I can call his remarks. I have no name to describe it in terms of his eloquence.

I would prefer at this time to take a few minutes to describe the Hollings-Andrews-Exon plan. We have a KGB. This one is the HAE plan.

First, I should like to suggest a couple of things about it. Very simply, it is said that this really reduces deficits significantly. There is no doubt about it. How could it help but do that? It raises $87 billion more in taxes than any other proposal around. It freezes indexing, and then still needs more money. It does not provide those additional taxes, so it says to the Finance Committee: "You find the other $20 billion or $30 billion. We don't know how you're going to do that."

That is easy, I say to my friend, for whom I have the greatest respect. You reduce the deficits nicely when you increase taxes $87 billion more than that we just passed, after a week's debate, which the Finance Committee of the U.S. Senate took months to do.

So there is part of it: $87 billion more in taxes. I am not saying that is good or bad. The distinguished Senator from South Carolina has his views, and I have mine. I do not think we should do that at this particular time, No. 1.

Second, I do not think it is going to happen, under any circumstance, at this particular time. But there may be people who want to vote for it, nonetheless, because we would like to reduce the deficits, and there is one nice way, and that is $87 billion worth of it. There are no easy ways to do that.

I recall very well about 3 years ago when we in the Budget Committee said that social security is almost broke, just about bankrupt. The two Senators who have spoken so eloquently were there in our Budget Committee. I recall that neither supported the budget resolution that said we had better fix social security. We said it is $40 billion insolvent. We reported a budget resolution that required $40 billion worth of solvency over 3 years.

It did not take 30 minutes for the people of the United States to be informed that the Republicans in the Senate Budget Committee were cutting social security $40 billion.

Do you know what else happened? It was said that there are 36 million of elderly folks in this country; they then added up the savings and divided it by the number of elderly, and concluded, "You are cutting the social security fund, and the number is $1,110.00 over three years." It did not take 25 minutes for that to go out across this land—cutting social security.

Let me tell you an interesting thing. We were right. That fund was $40 billion insolvent, because 18 to 20 months later, a bipartisan commission fixed social security, and they did not cut anybody. They deferred COLA's for 6 months. They found that it was $38.3 billion worth of insolvency. We were pretty close to being right.

They fixed it in this very excellent bipartisan commission and said, "We are taxing people some more, and all the money is going into social security and it is taken care of." They did that, and we voted for it. I guess it was the third major reform in the history of social security.

So that everyone will know, using the same logic and the same approach, this proposal will cut social security, after all the things we just did. We attempted to reform it, and I thought we did reform it. According to what I understand, nobody wants to balance the budget on social security or on social security recipients. This proposal will cut social security over what we just fixed in that reform, so that the average retired couple will lose $1,848 in benefits. The average disabled worker with a family will lose $2,100 in benefits.

That is all in social security.

I remind the Senate, though, that if we are interested in Federal retirees—I notice the Senator from Nebraska is on his feet. I am going to speak for another 10 or 12 minutes. I have been listening attentively, and the Senator from Nebraska will have an opportunity to respond.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a statement?

Mr. DOMENICI. I wish to finish.

Mr. EXON. Will the Senator yield for a statement?

Mr. DOMENICI. I will just finish mine and then I will yield in maybe 5 minutes.

I shall move over to the Federal retirees and leave social security for a minute. As to Federal retirees, there are $2,976 in benefits lost and military retirees loose $2,472 compared to the current law.

I do not state those because I wish to say this plan is something we should not under any circumstance ever consider. I have too much respect for both Senators who have spoken and others who support it.

But I do suggest that everyone should know that we are not talking about a vague budget resolution with tentative targets that may or may not be complied with by committees later on.

This is a bill. We intend that this go to the House of Representatives in conference, and what is done here is to literally change the social security and retirement laws of the Nation so that the recipients are reduced in terms of their entitlement. And I think that is a fair way to say it, that they are reduced in terms of their entitlement by the amounts that I have stated.

Now I really am not going to talk a great deal more. I hope everyone understands that the $87 billion in taxes plus a 1-year freeze on the entitlements that pay people's pensions, social security, disability, plus 2 years thereafter at a special COLA level when we add that up, we sure reduce the deficits. If that is what the Senate wishes to do here today, in a substantive law, not a budget resolution, then I want them all to understand that is what we are doing.

There are some other aspects to it. Defense is reduced somewhat over the leadership package, but clearly not in a freeze manner.

The Senator from South Carolina and I started too far back on defense to say that we can freeze it and it will not hurt anything because we are the ones, if I recall, that said before President Carter went out that we are going to raise defense and we are going to do it, and we will put it on a 5-percent growth trend line. In fact, I say to my friend, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) I told President Carter a number of times when we talked about the budget in the outyears on defense, he was pretty low. Go back and look at it. We made them raise defense a real 5 percent even when we had the 11-percent inflation. We made them raise it 16 percent at one point. We were afraid that America was in serious risk of military preparedness, and this was a number that permitted it to grow substantially as it must.

We cannot start weapons systems in this country because we are ready to compete and provide this country and the world with deterrence and peace and just turn that off and on like a water faucet. I mean, we start eight or nine new systems and say let us freeze it. While we freeze half, finish some, with the buys done 2 years out of 10, and people will say it is not going to cut anything; we are just going to freeze military.

This does not do that. I am going to say that in all honestly it provides a significant increase, slightly less than the leadership package, but in that regard certainly livable.

With reference to the appropriated accounts, it is not as stringent as the leadership package but clearly evidences the kind of fiscal responsibility that we are going to have to exercise around here if we are going to get where we have to go.

Now having said that, I wish to repeat that I think the Senate should know precisely what is in a package. If anyone needs more detail on the taxes, I think Senators who are involved in this particular plan can give it to them.

I suggest, however, that clearly it does away with indexing for 3 years and it says we do not know where the other money is going to come from but we want the Finance Committee to change the tax laws to raise additional revenue, and I do not have any argument with that, except that is normally the way we do it in a reconciliation and not a substantive bill.

But they are not trying to hide the fact that there is $87 billion more than is provided in the Baker leadership plan over the next 3 years. There is something in it that I am a little concerned about. There is some withholding requirements on independent contractors and royalty recipients, and I do not really know the extent of it, but I would just say we went through a huge debate here on further withholding, and I guess we had to do away with that tax on withholding because of the public pressure on the banks withholding and dividend withholding.

I do not know that portion in this amendment with regard to independent contractors and royalty recipients, whether that would be the kind of thing that would be considered to be harmful as the previous dividend withholding requirement was assumed to be.

That is about all I have to say to the Senate. We have substantial time, if any Senator wishes to address this issue in any regard. I do say to my good friends, and they are my good friends, on the other side, I have no way of explaining things that I feel strongly about other than as best I can and in my typical manner, and I surely did not intend anything other than a straightforward explanation, and if they do not want me to call those COLA changes cuts, I will do whatever they like. I will say a reduction in entitlements, however they wish me to say it. But clearly I think the numbers that I have given are the result and will result if this plan were adopted.

How much time did the Senator from New Mexico use?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used 13 minutes and has 47 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS and Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank my friend from South Carolina.

I wish to say I tried to save time to interrupt my friend from New Mexico. He misinterpreted my standing. I stood so that I could hear his words of wisdom a little bit clearer. I was not at all upset with what he had to say. I never, ever get upset with what my friend from that great State down south has to say.

So if he thought that I was objecting to what he said, I wish him to stand corrected.

Mr. President, I listened to the chairman of the committee very closely, and I first wish to tell him that whatever he had to say about a $40 billion reduction in social security that was not said by this Senator, and I hope he knows that. I would have thought maybe people who did not know the background who might be reading this or sitting up in the gallery might have thought that this Senator went out and said that. He did not.

I think the chairman of the Budget Committee knows that while he and I do not always agree, I do not know of a case where he has ever taken advantage of me politically or that I have ever taken advantage of him, but I simply wish to say and hope that the Senator from New Mexico will agree that, whatever he had to say about what certain people did, did not include the Senator from Nebraska.

Is that correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct. It was not he who construed the reform required to make social security solvent as a cut. It was other Senators. The record is clear. But it was not the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I thank my friend from New Mexico for that.

I simply point out that if the Senator fron New Mexico was complaining about certain statements that were made then, that he thought were inappropriate, then it might be fair to say that in the statements that he just said on the floor with regard to the plan offered by the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from North Dakota and myself, he criticized those I think in basically the same vein and fashion, but then I understand politics. I have been in it a long time also.

I simply wish to say, Mr. President, that we got out of the social security difficulty by not only freezing some COLA's, but we also got out of that problem by significant tax increases.

I simply say that I hope that sooner or later people who claim to be conservative leaders on both sides of that aisle will stand up and tell the people that we have to have a combination of tax increases and spending cuts, a combination of the two if we are ever going to do anything about this deficit.

In fact, no less authority than the Director of the Office of Management and Budget testified in public to the Budget Committee this year that the U.S. Government was in effect in chapter 11 bankruptcy. And if the Federal Government is in chapter 11 bankruptcy, then I think it is time that we have the courage to face up and do something about it.

I think, though, the point that the chairman of the Budget Committee makes is probably a good one. If you will look at all of the other plans, including the rose garden plan that the chairman of the Budget Committee is supporting, I think he would concede and he would agree that according to the nonpartisan, nonpolitical Congressional Budget Office, there is none of those plans that makes any reduction at all or any significant reduction in the budget at the end of 3 years except the plan before us.

So I simply say that what we are trying to do is not take the easy way out, not to fool the American public that this is going to be done without sacrifices on the part of all. And it has been my experience with Nebraskans, who have their heads screwed on right, that they are all willing to make some sacrifices so long as it is fair and equitable.

I would simply emphasize that the plan before us cuts spending in billions of dollars, considerably more than it increases revenue.

I yield back to my friend from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank my distinguished colleague. I yield now to my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, I am at the same basic level with the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Nebraska, I think I am ready to proceed with my remarks.

Mr. President, the deficit is the No. 1 economic problem this country faces today. It is the chief culprit in the untypically high interest rates that we have been experiencing and it threatens to crowd the private sector out of financial markets, thereby undermining future economic growth and prosperity. If Washington does not take the deficit seriously, Wall Street does. Financial markets have been unstable and nervous since the beginning of the year, waiting to see what we in Washington will do.

In many ways, the deficit is a king pin, which, if knocked down, would take many problems with it. Reducing the deficit would certainly result in lower interest rates which in turn would favorably affect the exchange rate and with it our trade deficit. At home, lower interest rates would encourage the capital investment that we need to modernize our plants and equipment and realize the productivity gains necessary to improve our competitiveness at home and abroad.

I think the time to act has now come. We were elected to represent our constituents. Mine are telling me to reduce the deficit. We were also elected to serve the Nation as a whole. It is time to take these responsibilities seriously. The Nation, the economy will best be served today and in future years by a serious effort to cut the red ink.

That is why I support the bipartisan budget offered by Senators EXON, ANDREWS, and HOLLINGS. According to CBO estimates, the package will reduce the deficit by $268 billion over the next 3 years. That is nearly three times the reduction offered by the administration as a "downpayment." The time for downpayments is past. We need to pay off some of the principal as well.

Our plan is a fair one—it would affect virtually all sectors and programs equitably and responsibly. It freezes all social and entitlement spending programs for the next year, with the exception of those social programs targeted for the most needy of our society—SSI, food stamps, health care, and veterans—which would be allowed to expand to the extent that the number of eligible clients increased. I believe this is a necessary and important feature particularly because of the rapid increase we have experienced in the past 3 years in the number of families in poverty.

The plan also takes a responsible approach to defense. It provides a 4-percent real rate of increase over the next 2 years and 3 percent thereafter for the rest of the decade. These increases are high enough to maintain combat readiness and continue modernization of our forces. In fact, given the huge increases for defense already in place, the DOD budget will have grown at an average annual rate of 6 percent in real terms throughout the 1980's. All together, our plan cuts spending by $425 billion over the next 5 years.

On the revenue front, substantial gains are realized by postponing for 5 years the tax bracket indexation. I have long been opposed to this indexation policy because I would rather see Congress correct the problem of bracket creep due to inflation through legislative action rather than an automatic formula. Most importantly, this allows a greater degree of flexibility for coping with difficult economic circumstances. The postponement of indexation, together with the Senate tax bill passed last month would raise total revenues by about $350 billion over the next 5 years. In total, our plan would cut the deficit by two-thirds over that period and by 1989, instead of facing triple-digit budget shortfalls, the annual deficit would have fallen to $16 billion.

Mr. President, the budget deficit is a clear and present danger. It is undermining the health of our economy and the credibility of all of us as elected leaders. Let us accept our responsibility and make this bipartisan budget our choice in dealing with the deficit.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article written by Michael K. Evans in the March 19, 1984, issue of Industry Week be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"CROWDING OUT" ISN'T FAR DOWN THE ROAD

(By Michael K. Evans)

The term "crowding out" has become somewhat overused in recent economic discussion. It refers to the situation in which an increase in interest rates—caused either by excessive borrowing or insufficient saving—causes business investment (as a percent of gross national product) to decline.

Normally, the capital-spending ratio bottoms out in the first year of recovery and then begins to rise again. Either interest rates fall by then and/or profits, stock prices, and capacity utilization rise.

The ensuing investment boom is then financed—for a while—by an increase in corporate savings and a reduction in the federal government deficit, which by its nature is—or at least used to be—countercyclical.

But once government spending begins to catch up with the increase in tax receipts, the competition for funds intensifies and interest rates begin to rise again until they tend to reduce capital spending, housing, and inventory investment.

Yet, for some reason, there are some economists who still believe that these basic suppositions (supported by historical data, see graph) can be suspended during this business cycle and that interest rates will somehow fall in an apparent denial of the laws of supply and demand.

If anything, rates ought to rise more rapidly in this cycle because of two unusual factors. First, the government deficit will not decline very much as a proportion of GNP, certainly much less than normal for the later stages of a business cycle. There are several reasons for this. First, personal-income tax rates will be indexed, starting in 1985. Second, defense spending continues to rise more rapidly than usual. Third, all the cuts that can be made in social-welfare programs have already been accomplished. Fourth, interest payments are growing so rapidly that they are more than wiping out any modest cutbacks in social-welfare programs. Fifth, the tax base is eroding faster than ever because most middle-class taxpayers have now been pushed into the 40% to 50% marginal tax bracket. Yet, in spite of these reasons, we hear nonsensical talk that the budget-deficit ratio will shrink sharply in the next few years.

The other unusual factor is the projection of net foreign investment, which is more or less the inverse of the net export deficit. Generally speaking, our net exports are quite strong during a recession—since the U.S. economy is usually more depressed than the rest of the world—but then they decline as the recovery moves into high gear. The reduction in net exports translates into more dollars coming to our shores, which to a certain extent ameliorates the credit crunch. However, this time the trade figures are starting off from a horrendous deficit, and with the weakening of the dollar imminent, the trade deficit will bottom out at its current rate of about $100 billion and then will improve only slightly in 1985 and 1986. Hence, foreign money will be fleeing our shores.

The total investment ratio this year is expected to be about 14.5%, which is about 2.5 percentage points below normal for this stage of the business cycle. However, 1.5 points of that gap have been temporarily closed by the influx of foreign funds. The remaining shortfall is split about evenly between capital spending and a rather modest level of 1.75 million housing starts expected for the year. Hence, crowding out is already in evidence and will become much worse when foreign investment declines. But how far will interest rates have to rise to clear the market?

It probably takes about a 2-point increase in the long-term bond rate to reduce the investment ratio by 1 point. If this is the case, then the 2-point decline in this ratio we have predicted by the time of the 1987 recession would be caused by long-term interest rates increasing about 4 points from their present levels to their peak sometime in 1986. Thus will crowding out return with a vengeance.

Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, this is an interesting situation we find ourselves in because it seems like there are two worlds that we live in, one the world of politics. And I am struck by how much of the discussion that takes place is a concern for interest groups. Somehow the impression is given that, if the economy goes to hell in a hand basket, particular interest groups will somehow not be affected. That not only violates any sense of rationality but, if you think of it in nautical terms, if you have got a hole in the floor of a boat, the idea that anybody is not going to get wet just simply defies logic.

I was at a conference 2 months ago in Europe. And the Europeans are very concerned about the United States because if our economy slips back into a recession, they are going to be affected by that as well.

Their comments basically were along the lines of the following: That we have so much going for us in terms of natural resources, in terms of the education base, the high technology sweep that we see in my State and others, and why is that the only thing we lack is leadership on the deficit?

Now, part of that, of course, was addressed to the President. You remember the President's comments about balancing the budget in 1982 but certainly by 1983. Well, history will write the legacy of Ronald Reagan as the deficit. And if I were Ronald Reagan I would be terrified by what historians are going to say. Historians do not spend their time watching candidates on television. They have the lamentable procedures of reading the record. And the record of Ronald Reagan on deficits is worse than anyone could have presumed.

If I had taken my colleagues back to 1972 and I said I am going to ask you a question and I am going to give you two pieces of information. Piece No. 1: In 1984, we will have deficits that approach, and will exceed over time, $200 billion a year. That is information No.1. Information No. 2: You will have a Secretary of the Treasury who will say there is no linkage between high deficits and high interest rates.

Those are the only two things I will tell you. Question: Who is the President? George McGovern or Ronald Reagan?

No one in 1972 would have said Ronald Reagan. If you said that they would have tied you up and carried you off. It was inconceivable that this person could give us these kind of deficits. And yet, in fact, that has happend.

We are not going to get any leadership from the White House. So the question is: Is there another place in the Government of the United States where there is leadership? And it seems to me rather obvious that Senators HOLLINGS, EXON, and ANDREWS have demonstrated indeed there is. The question is now one of, will we follow?

The Europeans, in their comments in talking about leadership and courage, had a rather curious reflection upon where America has come. The sacrifice that we have been through to be the Nation that we are and here we are talking about deficits that threaten our economy and we are caught, and we are caught in inaction.

What we are talking about on the Senate floor is a downpayment. It would be curious to go back and look at all our campaign literature about leadership. You know the old expression, "Tell me where my people are going so I can lead them."

Well, in terms of the long-term survivability and health of our economy, we only have to do one thing and that is deal with the deficit. There are other issues, obviously, that are important but they are secondary in my mind to this issue.

What is so difficult about supporting the amendment offered by my three colleagues? First of all, it is the most dramatic in terms of the impact on the deficit. Those people who want more defense, you have 3 percent real growth in there. There is some sensitivity to the social programs. But overall it deals with the deficit. Now what is so difficult about that? I do not, frankly, think it is.

And somehow the idea that one is vulnerable if you vote for this, I would just suggest the vulnerability is on the other side. To have run for the Senate and to be here and to, in essence, walk away from some very tough votes that are in the national interest, I do not think is good politics. And I think that could be sold.

The final point I would make is that I intend to support, as well, the bipartisan freeze that Senators KASSEBAUM, BIDEN, BAUCUS, and GRASSLEY have introducted. Part of, I must say, my support of these two is somewhat selfish; that I am not going to be a Senator next year and I am going to be out in the private sector; that I do not have a Government salary that I can depend on. So if the economy goes into a decline, I will be one of those people out there who will be affected by it. So I have learned, since I decided to retire in the last 3 months, something about the frustration of those out in the private sector who look to us to do something as we sit here twiddling our thumbs.

The final comment I would make is this. Part of the reason that I think the Democratic Party is in trouble in this country—and I have been saying this for a number of years now—is that fundamentally the Democratic Party is very good on issues of justice, social justice, that kind of thing, and very good on the issues of war and peace. When those are the issues before the country, Democrats generally prevail. The weakness that we have is that we, as Democrats, have never convinced the country we know how to run the economy; that Demo-cats are viewed as people who care less about how well the economy is doing and spend all of their time worrying about how you distribute the golden eggs. The goose's health is irrelevant. There is somehow some kind of tooth-fairy view that the economy will do well no matter what happens. And there is a basic disrespect for Democrats.

You know, the funny thing about it is, we deserve it, because it is true.

When I was on the House side, I remembered that the late Bill Steigers had an amendment that dealt with the capital gains tax, reducing it. I voted against it. Do you know why I voted against it? Because I was a Democrat. I considered the ethic in the House among my fellow colleagues that this was probusiness and, therefore, since it is probusiness we are against it. So I voted against it. That bill which I did not support did more for the economy of my State than anything I did as a Congressman.

And there is a lot of that still lingering, the notion that concern about economic growth is a Republican instinct, that Democrats are uncomfortable caring about economics.

I think the reason we are not ahead of Ronald Reagan in the polls is not through any great skill of the President. I mean what, for example, would you say his foreign policy achievements were? I mean you would really be hard pressed. Grenada?

Grenada has the same number of people as Lynn, Mass. If I went into Lynn and deposed the mayor, do you think anybody would say it was a great achievement? They would think I was crazy. No. The President's major accomplishment beyond personality skills is the default of the Democrats on economics. No one believes when push comes to shove that Democrats care about economic growth and will do the tough things to make things work. Our colleagues give us a chance. We should be grateful. If the Democratic Party were ever to show real concern—not rhetorical concern—about the deficit and did something about it, then I think we would do very well in November and do very well in the Novembers that follow that.

I feel very strongly about this. The reason I do can be laid to two matters.

I know this is a terrible thing to admit, but my father was a conservative Republican businessman. I should get this out of my system before I leave. He thought Spiro Agnew was just wonderful, and that Richard Nixon would go down in history as a great American President. Needless to say, we had our disagreements at the time. But the funny thing about my father was that he was a nice guy. I grew up believing that you could be a businessman and still be a decent human being. That would almost disqualify me from membership in the Democratic Party.

The second major reason is that I grew up in a city in economic decline. I saw my father's business get wiped out. I still live in that city. The fact is that most of my colleagues have never really experienced economic hardship, and feel that economic decline is sort of an academic issue. If you grew up the way I did, it is not. So when I look at my home city that has an unemployment rate of about 5 percent because of high technology and other things that were done, I think that is good. Democrats should be proud of it. The one thing we can do to sort of bring that about throughout the country more than anything else is to deal with the deficit. I commend my friend from South Carolina, and my friends from Nebraska and North Dakota. They are doing us a real service, and I hope that we have the commonsense to support them.

I yield back to the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, before I yield to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, let me thank my friend from Massachusetts. He has made a very dramatic statement. There is no question that he has analyzed it. He has voted as a private citizen could, would, and should vote. He states very candidly that next year he will be out and working. In that sense he will be very, very much concerned about interest rates, unemployment, and everything else of that kind. He brings into sharp focus the Achilles heel of the Democratic Party. I could not agree more.

I state this advisedly. There is no one I respect more. I ran on his ticket in 1968. I was running for reelection for the U.S. Senate; our friend from Minnesota, Senator Humphrey was running for the Presidency. He could and should have been the President. We had gotten rid of Richard Nixon. My friend, Pat Brown, the Governor of California, had run him out of California. He had even stated—that is, Nixon—"you will not have me to kick around any more." That was his public statement.

We as Democrats recreated that monster. Senator Humphrey had all the high ground on arms control. He started the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. It was his bill; and, certainly on feeding, on housing he knew the problems. He was a city mayor. On urban renewal he certainly was respected; education; certainly with respect to student loans; and everything else; legal services. He had the high ground on the social programs.

But I was running in a race, in 1968 and I was always having to explain the problem because my constituents had the perception that the Democratic nominee, Senator Humphrey, was not going to be able to handle the economy. He was a spender. We reincarnated that fellow Nixon, and brought him back to political life. In 1972, standing right here was our good friend as a Senator, the Senator from South Dakota. Again, he had the high ground on all the social issues but he was going to mail everybody $1,000. I told George, "You frighten me."

Of course, we continued Mr. Nixon. In 1980, the only question, Senator, was could the economy stand 4 more years of 12-percent inflation and 20-percent interest rates? I was in a State where my distinguished senior colleague went around talking about the movie star, and that we had to have John Connally. You could not find a more loyal and leading Republican. But the Republican Governor, Jim Edwards, and the Republican Senator STROM THURMOND, were running all over saying you could not have the movie star. You had to have Connally who knew how to handle these things. Why? We Democrats, Senator TSONGAS, put Ronald Reagan in the White House because of the fact which you mentioned—handling the economy. It has been true. We had 12-percent inflation, 20-percent interest rates. I know it. I was running for reelection at that time. We lost the last three out of four races.

The Senator from Massachusetts is right on target. I think it would behoove us to get back into the saddle of Government as a party and as Senators by showing collectively—that is why I am delighted to have Republican support for this particular amendment—that we can handle the economy at the national level as leaders from around the country do as city mayors, and as State Governors.

James Madison over 200 years ago foresaw the difficulty of this particular time. He said Government is none other than the best reflections of human nature. If men were angels, a government would not be necessary. And if angels governed men, you would need no controls over the government. So he had the task in formulating a government to be administered by man over man, and a government with the capacity to control government, and thereafter oblige that same government to control itself. That is what we flunked and failed to do. We are not controlling ourselves. We did not last year. We did not the year before. Seemingly, we are not going to do it next year. We are always saying let us wait until after the election.

I could not thank the Senator from Massachusetts more for his wisdom and candor in setting forth the problem that confronts us.

I yield now to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, a cosponsor of our amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I am pleased to speak in support of the efforts of the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from Nebraska, and other Senators to deal with this very serious deficit problem. Any attempt to constrain increases in spending is subject to attack. It is for that very reason I believe that the job of controlling these increasing expenditures each year is so difficult for the Congress and the administration to come to grips with.

Mr. President, since coming to the Senate I have been impressed with the urgency and sincerity with which all of us express our concerns about the deficit. Also, I have been impressed with how we can agree upon the need for us all to get together to do something about the deficit. But the problem is, that is about all we have been able to agree upon. We spend the rest of our time trying to score points off the other party, or playing to various constituency groups rather than sitting down to hammer out the kind of compromise that is passable and will get things done.

We are good at having it both ways. We all get out and vote against things we do not think need more money. We vote for the programs that we do think need more money. The problem is, of course, that when the cuts we vote for do not pass, we do not adjust our demands for spending elsewhere.

Most of the comments and suggestions that I have heard for reducing the budget play to some absolute solution which is guaranteed—at least in this body based on my observation—to never receive a majority.

The suggestions range from wholesale abolition of departments and programs—suggestion like no more foreign aid, abolish the Department of Energy, abolish the Department of Education, cut entitlements to the bone—on the one side, and on the other side, no increase in defense spending at all. There are several problems, at least two major problems, with these absolute approaches. First, they do not get us around to solving the problem; second, we cannot pass them.

What we have seen in the budget standoffs of the Reagan years is a great deal of posturing, with the implicit and sometimes explicit message being given, "Don't worry, we can solve this budget deficit problem without affecting you. It will come out of someone else's taxes, someone else's benefits, some one else's public services." But I think we all know that does not work.

The President has not been as successful as he would like in rewriting the last 50 years of American history. Those on the opposite side of the argument have had to accept cuts in social programs, as well as substantial increases in defense spending. The fact is that despite the rhetoric, there is a basic consensus that has appeared between the Congress and the President on spending. This consensus has been arrived at through the budget and the appropriations process. Through the accumulation of decisions, through the votes cast on individual issues, we have decided where cuts will be made, where we will hold the line, and where increases will be allowed. The irony is that the President and the Congress have not been that far apart in overall spending levels. Where we have disagreed is in the mix. But those decisions have been made and they have been agreed to by the President.

I believe we need to build on this hard-won consensus to attack the deficit this year in the only practical way that we can attack it seriously. This amendment does that. It imposes a 1-year freeze on the discretionary spending levels, with the exception of defense. It imposes a 4-percent increase on defense spending, an amount which is dramatically smaller than that proposed by the President.

This is realistic, Mr. President. It is not ideal, it is not exactly what I would prefer, but it is realistic in this Congress this year. It recognizes the widespread agreement that our defenses need improving. Contrary to political charges that will be made this year and for many years, it does not cut the actual dollar amounts received by such groups as the elderly, the needy, the sick. It reflects the agreement in this Congress that these programs have already suffered substantial reductions and should not bear any more. Those battles have been fought over the last few years, and Congress has decided on its answer, and we do not need to expend more energy and time unnecessarily aruging those issues again.

The Hollings-Exon-Andrews freeze recognizes that we cannot attack the structural deficit without dealing with taxes. The proposal would instruct the Finance Committee to report measures which would raise $350 billion in revenue increases over the next 5 years.

I know, Mr. President, that this is a proposal that does not draw applause from anywhere. No one wants to have their taxes raised. But I have to stress again that if we do not balance the burden of deficit reduction as fairly and as practically as we can in this Congress, we shall never succeed.

We must agree that if we decide to expend a certain level of resources to do the things that we as a people believe will make our country safe abroad and prosperous and compassionate and just at home—and that is what we all seek—then we should be willing to pay for the Government we create.

Mr. President, I do not believe that our Government spending programs are perfect. It is not my intention to forgo my responsibility to make those programs more efficient and to cut them where necessary and to support increases where I believe it is important to make investments for the future such as in the area of education. I shall continue to do my best to see that Americans get the best they can for their tax dollars. But I believe we have to get started with deficit reduction this year. We have to work within the political reality that exists on spending issues. To do otherwise is to contribute to the delusion that the deficit can always be cured if only the other fellow can be made to pay.

Mr. President, in his small book on the Vietnam war, John Kenneth Galbraith had a statement which I believe is worth repeating. He said in that book that when all the people agree, the politicians cannot be far behind. I believe that statement is appropriate in this case.

This amendment represents a tough but honest and fair approach which I believe the American people would agree to. This amendment deserves the support of my colleagues. I urge them to vote for it.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPECTER). Who yields time?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I yield now to my distinguished colleague from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from South Carolina. I commend him, the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from North Dakota, and others who have joined together in offering this bipartisan proposal.

This is, I think, a truly bipartisan proposal. It is an American proposal. As I talk to people in my State, they send me a very strong message that they are tired of the partisan bickering, they are tired of the finger-pointing, they are tired of one party trying to cast blame on another for the deficits, the budget problems we now face. They are sending us a loud and clear message. That is, get on with solving this problem now. Do something to get these deficits under control before they destroy the economy of this country.

I think if there are a few words that we could take out of the American vocabulary this year they should be the words, "Wait until after the election." None of us was elected to this body or to positions of responsibility and public trust to wait until after some election to deal with the problems at hand. There are always some 468 Members of Congress within 2 years of some election. We need to get on with solving the problems now. We need to get deficits under control before it is too late. Our country is walking on a high wire without a net underneath it.

We all know what is going to happen if we do not take substantial action under the trendline on which we are now operating. The national debt of the United States is projected to reach almost $3 trillion by 1989. Every Member of this body knows that if we were to allow the debt to continue to skyrocket in this fashion, long before that time, the Government of the United States would be taking two-thirds of all the available credit in the country just to finance this kind of debt. That would leave only one-third of the credit or less for everyone else—the farmer, the small businessperson, the young couple who want to buy a home, all of the other people who need credit. It would set off an auction, set off a bidding war for that little bit of credit that would be left. It would drive interest rates absolutely through the ceiling.

Already, the stock market is responding on a daily basis to rumors of increases in interest rates. The leading economic indicators are beginning to slow down. And even now, other sectors of our economy are already paying a heavy, a disastrous price for the huge deficits which we are running.

Because of our high deficits, the dollar has been overvalued compared with other currencies in the world. We have had to allow a massive influx of foreign investment and foreign dollars into the United States. Our trade deficit this year will be over $100 billion, and it is again attributable to the huge deficits which we are running. There is not a farmer in the United States who is not already paying the high price exacted by these huge deficits as we have seen our exports plummet and the value for our agricultural products fall. It is estimated that over 2 million people in this country have lost their jobs because of declining exports brought about by the trade imbalance which has been caused by these huge budgetary deficits.

We had testimony before the Finance Committee just 2 weeks ago that if the trade imbalance continues at the current rate, it will take only 30 months to make the United States a net debtor nation for the first time in its history. That would mean people in other countries would own in essence more of the United States of America than we would have investments in the rest of the world. What a tragedy it would be for a nation with our vast resources and strengths to be dependent on the whims of those in other nations with other aims and with other goals for our economic well-being and our economic security.

We cannot afford to wait until after an election. We cannot afford to wait to deal with the problem while interest rates start back up substantially under the pressure of Government borrowing. We cannot afford to have another year in which we add so much to the national debt. Every single American worker would have had to have saved $2,000 last year and loaned every penny of it to the Federal Government just to finance what was added to the national debt last year alone.

We cannot afford to continue along that path without courting disaster. I applaud the bipartisan group of Senators which has come together to offer a proposal that asks all Americans to join together in sacrificing in the short run to come up with an American solution. This proposal will more dramatically reduce the deficit over the next 3 years and over the next 5 years than any other proposal about which we will have an opportunity to express our views.

Under this plan, For example, using the accounting of the administration, the deficit would be reduced some $316 billion over the next 3 years compared to only $144 billion under the administration plan. If we use CBO accounting, the figure for deficit reduction is $268 billion versus $89 billion under the administration plan. In 5 years we could reduce the deficit $800 billion, bringing this country to the brink of a balanced budget, if we pass this bipartisan proposal.

So I say, Mr. President, let us not wait until after the election to do our duty. Let us not continue to court economic disaster by running deficits that are going to raise interest rates through the roof and cripple our economy, bringing it to a grinding halt. Let us not continue to run deficits that devastate the export sector of this economy; that threaten to make the United States of America a net debtor nation for the first time in its history within the next 3 years. Let us not underestimate the understanding, the intelligence, and the patriotism of the American people. The American people know that their Government cannot continue year after year to live so far beyond its means. The American people have enough belief in this country and enough love for their country to be willing to sacrifice, as long as that sacrifice is fairly shared, to get our country back on the right track again.

We who have been elected to positions of leadership must not be guilty of underestimating the intelligence, understanding, and patriotism of those who sent us here to do a job. They sent us, as I have said, Mr. President, not to wait for some signal from political leaders, not to wait until after some election, not to wait until our own personal political interests have been met. They sent us here to do a job. They sent us here to do an American job. This is an American plan and it ought to be adopted.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I thank our distinguished colleague from Oklahoma. He has been a tremendous help last year and the year before and we will keep on plugging to see if we can bring about a sense of responsibility.

I now yield to our distinguished colleague from Arkansas, a cosponsor of the amendment.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for yielding these few minutes for me to speak on this measure.

I am one of the 16 Senators, I believe it was, who supported a similar amendment the Senator from South Carolina offered last year. We are going to do better than that today. How much better is anybody's guess.

Mr. President, for the next 3 or 4 days, depending on how long it takes us to deal with this bill, every person on this floor is going to speak at some time or other lamenting the deficit. Everybody is going to talk about how terrible the deficits are and what it is doing to the interest rates, what it is going to do to our grandchildren, but the truth is this place is paralyzed with fear. This is a drastic measure the Senator from South Carolina is offering. It deals with entitlements. It deals with indexing. It deals with discretionary spending. It is not going to be easy, especially for those who are up for reelection this fall, to go home and tell our constituents, particularly those interest groups, why we supported this amendment. I suspect there will not be enough votes to pass this amendment. And what a tragedy. What a travesty.

I have never known a candidate since I have been in the Senate—I will take that back; there may be two or three—who lost because they demonstrated some courage in this body. I have seen politician after politician finally, ultimately stiffen his spine and do what had to be done, and then soar in the polls.

Mr. President, we are in an election year and the promises are flowing on both sides. The truth is this deficit is going to be the issue. These deficits and the economic apocalypse that is absolutely certain to come if we do not deal with it, and the nuclear apocalypse that is going to come if we do not scale down the arms race, are the only two issues that can be legitimately discussed in this fall's campaign. The only honest promise you or I or any of the Presidential nominees can make is that the future holds a lot of sacrifice, a lot of burden, a lot of sweat and a lot of tears. You are not going to bring under control a trillion-and-a-half dollar debt or a $2 trillion debt by lamenting it on the floor of the Senate.

Yesterday I went down to speak to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. HOWARD BAKER, our distinguished majority leader and a good friend and a very able man and a fine man, and I spent 20 minutes each trying to persuade them to vote Democrat or Republican this fall. And to tell you the truth, with that a group I do not fare too well against HOWARD BAKER. But I tell you, I said to those people, "four years ago when President Reagan said, 'Are you better off?' that was the dynamite, litmus test question that catapulted him into the White House and gave the Republicans control of the U.S. Senate." I said, "If I were to repeat the question to that particular audience today, 'Are you better off now than you were 4 years ago?' there would be a resounding yes," because the economy is red hot, people are making money as never before. But if you were to follow that question up with a more sobering question: " 'Do you think your children and your grandchildren are going to have a better, more secure future as a result of what has happened in the past 3½ years?' then at least people would have to pause and reflect on that." I said in that speech and I have said in other places, "If you think you are going to deal with the deficits without raising taxes, you are simply saying, 'I love the deficits.' " If you think you are going to deal with the deficits by saying we can continue to increase defense spending 100 percent every 4 years, then you are not serious about controlling the deficits. If you think we are going to grow our way out of this, you are the only economist in the United States who has said that.

I am not speaking as a partisan Democrat. I am saying what Milton Friedman has said. I am saying what even George Will and William Safire are saying. I am saying what the President's chief economist, Marty Feldstein, has said. Yes, I am even saying what the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee has said. And Henry Kaufman, too.

When Henry Kaufman says interest rates are going up, bonds are sold or bought by the billions of dollars worth, based on his predictions. Henry Kaufman and Paul Volcker say that if you think you are going to deal with this deficit by cutting out social spending—why, if you eliminated every dime that could remotely be classified as social spending in the deficit, you still would have a $60 billion deficit.

I know it is easy to go home and say: "I would have voted for it, but there is this little thing in there. I did not quite know what to do. But I came down on this side or that side because there was this little provision in there. You have a 62-page bill, and one line in there really troubled me." That is the way we justify our votes back home.

This amendment postpones indexing. There is a good argument to be made for indexing. I have never supported it. I am sorry the Senator does not postpone it for 3 years. That is $51 billion. Are we postponing it for 5 years?

Mr. HOLLINGS. As each year goes by, yes.

Mr. BUMPERS. We will have to deal with it each year?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Right.

Mr. BUMPERS. I know the statistics on a 3-year postponement of indexing, $51 billion.

The other night when we debated indexing, it was brought up by Senator CHAFEE, and we had figures showing that the median family of four, under indexing, over the next 5 years, would save $1,500 in taxes. But if you reduce the interest rate in this country by 1 percent—and $51 billion in deficit reduction might just do it—the same family, paying on a home that cost them $50,000, would save $2,000 in interest on the mortgage.

So just the postponement of indexing alone, if it reduces interest rates by 1 percent, means $500 more to the average family over the next 4 to 5 years than what they are going to get out of indexing.

Mr. President, the thing I like best of all about the Hollings amendment is that everybody shares. Everybody assumes a part of the burden. Nobody is let loose scot-free. If that is not part of our national character, I do not know what is.

I have heard RUSSELL LONG say a thousand times on the floor of the Senate: "Don't tax me, don't tax thee, tax that man behind the tree." That is the reason why our tax code is now to the point where it has very little popular support and confidence in America. People do not really understand a flat tax rate. All they know is that they do not like what we have.

So when you are up for election this fall, here is a chance to tell your people that you are really serious, that this is not make believe. Do not worry about what your opponent is going to say about you.

That is the reason why we have a tough time voting around here. Everybody looks at it and says, "How could my opponent use that?" Here is a chance to go home and say, "I know this is true, but I voted for an amendment that shared the burden. The social security recipients, everybody, shared in trying to get this country back on track."

There is not one Member of the Senate who does not know we are going to suffer an economic collapse if we do not get control of the deficit. At a time when we are going through a 7-percent growth rate, the hottest growth rate since 1966 or 1962 we still have a $180 billion deficit. If you cannot deal with it now, how are you going to deal with it next year, when every economist in the country says the economy is going to turn down?

So here is a chance to vote for your children and their future. Do not vote for it just hoping it will be defeated. Vote for it because you believe in it and you feel confident in your ability to go home and explain it to your folks.

I did not initially oppose the Vietnam war. I am ashamed that I did not turn against it earlier than I did, sitting in a small town in Arkansas, watching the evening news. We were confused. We thought democracy was on the line, freedom all across the world was on the line.

Do you know when I turned against it? When my two sons became old enough that I was going to have to explain it to them, and I tried to explain to them why they might have to die in Vietnam. I could not explain it to them; and I thought, "If I can't explain it to them, I'm not for it." So I turned against it.

That is one of the reasons why I ran for the U.S. Senate, I was so despairing of that war. The reason I stay in politics is that I love the politics of hope, and I am hoping the U.S. Congress, somehow or other, when the chips are down, as they are now, will do the responsible thing, so that the Members can go home and tell their children, "Today I did something for your future."

I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. President, the distinguished Seantor is right on target. It seems to me that we would be satisfied to do a good job, I say to the Senator. I think of the old school, the distinguished senior Senator from Mississippi. We used to get reelected the hard way. We earned it. You had to do a good job in the legislature in order to get to Lieutenant Governor. Then, as Lieutenant Governor, you had to do a good job to become Governor. Then, you had to do a good job as Governor in order to be sent here.

Now that is out the window. You can forget about doing a good job. That is not the issue or concern here today. Were that the case, we would all vote for this. I think if we had a secret ballot, we could pass this quickly.

They do not know how to explain it over there to the President. That is what is bothering them.

What we have learned is pollster politicking. What you do in national office, I say to the Senator from Iowa, is that you take a poll, find out what the issues are, and then the pollster will say, "Having found that out, identify, but do not solve." That is where you divide voters and begin to lose.

So the favorite gimmick among Democrats and Republicans, both sides of the aisle, is, "I am concerned." If you ask about deficits, "I am concerned about the deficits." "I am concerned about Central America." "I am concerned about the Mideast." But do not go with a plan that will solve the problem.

I came around and tried to identify, tried to do something. I showed my concern. This is a real solution; and as the Senator indicated, it is a sacrifice. It is not easy. But it is certainly a desirable one at this particular hour, because next year, with the interest rates, the countercyclical funds, food stamps, and unemployment compensation beginning to trigger, you cannot cut those, and then we do not want to raise taxes.

A minute ago, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico mentioned $87 billion. He says sure we could do it if we would get $87 billion in revenues and new taxes.

That is easy for me. We have listed these amounts that came from the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 2 minutes have expired.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Let me just yield whatever time necessary.

How much time do we have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Three minutes and fifty-four seconds.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I might have to get some time from my distinguished colleague here on the other side of the aisle.

But in a capsule, if we had taken a 10-percent tax cut that we had last July, less than a year ago, and reinstated it, we pick up $183 billion. That is where we have been losing all the revenues.

With respect to indexing alone, over the 5-year period, that is $165 billion, not just $87 billion. Over 5 years we lose $165 billion.

I am limited by time. The Senator from New Mexico talks about cutting social security. No one is cutting social security.

The last word to be said on this particular debate is it is time we in public office quit treating social security recipients as welfare recipients. They resent it. They should not be demeaned. And they are not entitled to a cost of living adjustment.

I have been elected three times to the Senate when they did not even have COLA's in 1966, 1968, and 1974. We only started them in 1975.

We did not have COLA's under the Great Society. Our friend President Johnson thought of every way in the world to spend money, but he never thought of COLA's.

And the recipients have not paid for a COLA. They have not been taxed for it.

Right this minute, the other Senator was saying a moment ago we raised taxes and we have frozen entitlements. And we did a third thing. We dipped into the general revenues to the tune of $16.9 billion for social security for this year alone.

We are now making it a means tested program. The trust capacity has been destroyed. We are not only paying out from the general revenues but we are going to begin next year taxing social security. And we are going to change it into welfare then.

I know the senior citizens. I have gone to them all over this country. As long as it is a shared sacrifice, they have children and they have grandchildren, and they will go along so long as it is a shared sacrifice and we are not balancing the Federal budget on their backs, and we are not. We are not cutting their benefits. We are just not giving them an increase for 1 year for their part of the sacrifice. We are holding up on discretionary spending, holding up on tax spending, holding up on defense, and all the rest. They will do their part, rather than offload this debt onto their children and grandchildren.

So is it reducing their entitlements? No. They are not entitled to it. The average social security recipient gets all the money he paid into the trust in 18 months.

So they should be told the truth. Even with the increased revenues now they are not paying for it. They are not entitled to it and they should not be treated as welfare recipients.

If I have another minute I withhold that time, and then I will go begging to the distinguished senior Senator, the chairman of our Budget Committee, for additional time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, from our side, I say to my good friend from South Carolina, the only Senator I know who wishes to speak is Senator DOLE, after I finish here. He needs maybe 10 minutes or so. I will get hold of him and ask him if he can come down.

I am only going to talk for about 5 minutes and then I will yield another 10 or 15 minutes of my time.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I will be happy to check with a couple of other Senators who have not gotten here yet.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will yield to the Senator. We will probably, combined, need about 20 minutes.

And we have how much time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six minutes and thirty seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. I think at least 20 minutes, or more, we will yield to the Senator from South Carolina, I say to my friend.

Let me make just two points, and then leave it in the hands of the Senate.

To tell the truth, I think I have been as much for reducing deficits as anyone. But I can tell the Senate in all honesty I am not sure that if I were king of the world here—I told the story once what my little daughter told me one morning when I was trying to get their attention. They were 6 years old, and I was talking to them one morning. There was a teachers' convention so they were home, and I stayed late and did not come down here at 7:30 a.m. I was getting their attention, and one of them looked back at me and said: "Daddy, you is no king; you is just a Senator."

Even if I were king, I am not sure that I would take, and I did the numbers here—if I am wrong, correct me—I do not know that I would take $71 billion out of the social security to balance this budget. I am not sure I would do that. I say that in all honesty. That is for 5 years what this proposal does to a social security plan that we just finished reforming, that we just put the taxes on for, that we are just told in probably 1 more year it will be solvent for a long time. I am not sure I would take $71 billion and say put that on the debt. I do not know what we want to call that. I think it is a $71 billion reduction in social security divided up, as I said here a while ago. I think it is an $1,800 reduction for an average retired couple. I think it is a $2,100 reduction for a disabled worker. But I am not sure that I would take almost $71 billion out of an entrusted fund for which taxes are imposed and say here today that I know enough about the next 5 years that I am going to take that big a chunk of money and apply it on this debt.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. If I could finish two points, and then I will be glad to yield.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is one.

If the Senator wants to do it on 3 years to compare it with whatever else we are doing, it is almost $32 billion. Let me round it out. It is $31.9 billion in social security over 3 years that we are taking out of the trust fund and saying even though it is there we are not going to pay it to these people; we are going to reduce their benefits. I am going to round that to $32 billion over the 3 years.

Let me say medicare I know is in big trouble, but I am not sure that I know enough today to reduce by some kind of freeze on medicare over 5 years at the rate of $18 billion. I say in all honesty that I do not know that I know enough about how to straighten up this fiscal policy to just come along and say today for 5 years we are going to take $18 billion out of medicare by cutting it or reducing it or whatever we are talking about here. That is a reduction over current law of $18 billion.

I remind the Senate also that is entrusted money. I know that by 1992 it will be in trouble if we do not fix it. Maybe by 1995 it will be in big trouble. But I think everyone should know that is $18 billion reduction in medicare. Then we have these other entitlements, the predominant ones being Federal pensions, both military and civilian. Those are the principal ones, and we reduce them by $40.2 billion, some of which are entrusted, some are not.

That is for starters on the cut side, and then over 5 years we would today by one act, by one vote, we would increase taxes $352 billion; over 3 years, $132.5 billion. I tell the Senate I am for multiyear budgets. I have been one who has argued regularly with the administration about looking at 2, 3, 4 years, but I can tell the Senate in all honesty I am not at all sure if I were the benevolent dictator that I know enough about this American economy to put on $352 billion in new taxes now in a permanent manner saying we are just going to fix everything, get rid of indexing, do these other things, and we are really going to have a humming economy. I am just not sure of that.

As a matter of fact, to tell the truth, I am not going to give my speech here today. I think I will save it for other packages. But I do not think this economy is in such bad shape. As a matter of fact, I think we have to reduce the deficit, but I do not have a great anxiety about it that we better do it tomorrow morning or this world is coming to an end.

As a matter of fact, we have some things in pretty good shape that were in pretty bad shape 4 years ago. We had inflation at 14 percent; it is now 4 percent. We had interest at 21 percent; it is now 12.5 or 13 percent. Yes; it has gone up a little bit, and I am worried about it. We had a dollar falling off the table then, and it is now strong. We had a Defense Department that did not have enough money to pay its personnel and they were on food stamps. We have doubled their pay. Maybe that is extravagant to some.

Those are four pretty good things we have done. And we have a deficit left. There is no question about it. We should fix it. But I just think to sit here today and say to the Senate, let us fix it all right now and let us take almost $71 billion out of social security, when we just had the reform, and let us take $18 billion out of medicare, and let us take the other entitlements and take $40 billion out of that, I really think when Senators get to thinking about that we are not going to do it; but it is not because they do not have any courage, and it is not because they are not fearful of the deficits.

To tell the truth, with all the respect I have for the proponents, I do not know that the Senate should be putting on a $485 billion deficit reduction package in law here today and say that is going to fix the American economy.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I have been here and I did not use much of my time. I am going to send a message for Senator DOLE. He wants to speak and we are going to reserve some time for him.

But I would be delighted to answer some questions from the Senator from North Dakota or my good friend, Senator HOLLINGS. I have an appointment in about 5 minutes, so if you will make them brief, we will answer them brief.

Mr. ANDREWS. Could I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Senator HOLLINGS was first.

Mr. HOLLINGS. By way of explaining, because there is really inflammatory language being used, taking the money from the trust fund, and Senator knows and I know, that this amendment does not disturb any moneys in the social security trust fund.

Mr. DOMENICI. No; I know that.

Mr. HOLLINGS. It is not taking money off the trust fund.

Second, I am sending for a copy of it now, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana—I will never forget it because we were both concerned—made the statement at that particular time, and I ask the Senator if that was not correct, that he said over the next 3 years it would cost the general revenue $61 or $62 billion out of the general revenue for that so-called reform you are talking about. That is why I have checked and that is why I have the accurate figure from the CBO and the social security trust fund. That is why I quoted the $16.9 billion this year, fiscal year 1984; that we are taking from the general revenues to put into the trust fund, $16.9 billion.

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Medicare is not covered in this freeze. You cannot freeze that right now. You said we were freezing funds of the medicare. I will correct that later when you give me the time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, since the Senator from New Mexico has the floor, let me just correct this. I do not want to overcorrect, because I am not suggesting that anybody is taking social security money and absconding with it. I am suggesting that when we wanted to make social security solvent and we spoke of raising $40 billion to make it solvent, what did we hear? "Don't balance the budget on the backs of social security." And we needed $40 billion to make it solvent.

Now, all I am telling you is that it is solvent. And you are taking $71 billion and saying, "Don't pay benefits; keep it in the general fund to reduce this deficit."

You are not taking it. It is there. It is just that they are not going to get it. You can call it what you like—a cut, a reduction, an entitlement that is not going to be realized, whatever you like. I am merely telling you that this is how you get the deficit reduced, $70.8 billion out of social security when nobody is even telling us that it is insolvent.

The other big item is $352 billion in taxes imposed now for the next 5 years. Now, that does reduce deficits, I say to my friend, if it does not do some other things along with it. It surely will reduce the paper deficits as you read them.

Now, my friend had a question.

Mr. ANDREWS. I do have a question, Mr. President. I listened to my chairman's remarks with a great deal of interest. Now, I will admit that things get awfully cold in North Dakota, Mr. President, and they are warm down in New Mexico.

But if I heard my good friend correctly, I think he said that we were trying to do this all at once. My gosh, Mr. President, there is a $181 billion projected deficit for next year out there. This rose garden package—and those blossoms are pretty well wilted and faded away when we take a look at that—only cuts $12 billion out of that deficit. Now, maybe that is movement, but it is surely a turtle.

Now, ours cuts $37 billion. That is no Kentucky Derby winner. That is not doing it overnight. That is not doing it quick. But it is a whale of a lot more responsible, Mr. President, if you want ot get this deficit under control or starting under control in that first year if you want to impact the interest rates.

Our farm families. Mr. President, are not very happy with these interest rate projections that we see. Our homebuilders are not very happy.

And, certainly we end up freezing social security. I would rather not do that. But we are not cutting anybody.

And if my colleague and good friend and the chairman has any suggestions on how you do it and still keep 4 percent for defense and how you do it any better than we are doing it, and if my colleague really thinks that reducing a $180 billion projected deficit by $37 billion is doing it too fast, gosh, that is kind of smoky mirrors. That is a little bit "Alice in Wonderland." I wish we could do it faster.

So I hope, Mr. President, that my colleague recognizes the need is there and the need is now and if we are going to address that deficit in that first year, instead of more promises, promises, promises in that third outyear, we are going to have to do something about it now. And if that is excessive speed, it is excessive speed. But I suggest it is not speed, as I say, that is going to win that Kentucky Derby this weekend. But at least our turtle is moving while the Senator's seems to be pretty well bogged down in sand. And the goal is to reach that final point of getting these deficits more well-defined and under control.

I hope that my colleague and good friend would join us in that effort to get these deficits more swiftly under control.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me just suggest two more things, then I will yield the floor.

First of all, I will argue the package that the Senator referred to as the rose garden is not really the issue here. The issue is not the rose garden or any others. The issue is your package, the issue is the Hollings-Andrews-Exon package referred to as the bipartisan package to reduce the deficits.

I do not know how bipartisan it will be when we get to vote, but it is bipartisan in its sponsorship at this point and that is enough to call it that. It has been called American here today by those who proposed it. I guess it is. If we pass it, I think it probably is American.

But let me repeat, I honestly do not believe that the U.S. Congress, this President, this President if reelected, or one of the other individuals running to become President, that they are going to pass a 5-year plan that takes $70.8 billion out of social security with no reform, that just says we are going to freeze it or cut the COLA's where there is hardly anything left and we are going to take $70 billion out of that program for senior Americans that is solvent and the only reason you would be doing it is because of the deficit.

I just do not believe anybody is going to do that. I think we are going to have to do some major reform in all these areas. But I think the Senate ought to know that that is what it is and they ought to know that on medicare it is 18 billion dollars' worth.

And I do not know how you are reforming it. I wish I did know. I do not know how you can find that kind of money by just saying we are not going to pay doctors or hospitals are going to be frozen for a while. That is a huge amount of money.

The rest of the entitlements, $40.2 billion over 5 years, and we know how to do that right now. I just do not think that is going to happen.

Having said that, I understand my friend from Missouri would like to speak. And I would ask the Senator to hold the floor for the Senator from New Mexico for a few minutes and then if Senator DOLE desires to speak, we can give the rest of the time back to those who are the sponsors of the amendment.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, at the outset let me say that I intend to vote against the amendment that has been offered by the Senator from South Carolina, basically because I think that it increases taxes more than I would be willing to increase taxes—as I understand it, $89 billion—and also that it would cut defense spending below what the administration and the Republican leadership in the Senate agreed to. My guess is, although I could be educated on this, that that would be too deep a cut in defense spending.

But I want to say this to the Senator from South Carolina: I think what is happening right now on the floor of the Senate is a watershed. I think that it is a very significant occasion because what we have had is a bipartisan effort to face up to the serious nature of the budget deficit and a bipartisan effort to take on the untouchable in deficit reduction, and that is the growth rate of the entitlement programs.

I do not have a list in front of me of the cosponsors of this amendment, but it is my understanding that, in addition to the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from Arkansas spoke on behalf of this amendment, and the Senator from Oklahoma, Senator BOREN spoke in favor of the amendment.

It has significant and very highly respected Democratic support for the concept which has been politically poisonous to date; that is, dealing with the entitlement programs.

Mr. President, I do not know how it is possible mathematically to get the deficits under control without doing something about entitlements. This is something we in the Congress are going to have to face up to as quickly as possible. This year with the fact that an election is coming, realistically it is not going to be done until after the election. But it is going to have to be done. But I simply want to review the bidding on the entitlement question, because I remember so well 3 years or so ago when President Reagan suggested doing something about social security. I can remember what happended on the floor of the Senate. I can remember how that proposal was turned into a major political issue. I can remember the distinguished minority leader standing at his desk talking about Republican efforts to cut social security. I was a candidate for reelection in 1982. I am told—although I do not know—that the National Education Association ran a phone bank in one of the congressional districts of our State in which they said, if you vote for the reelection of JACK DANFORTH to the Senate and GENE TAYLOR to the House of Representatives, you will lose social security. That is how it was used politically. It was used in a very partisan way.

I have on my desk a mailing which was received by one of my constituents in Kansas City, Mo. This man is a senior citizen. He is incapacitated. He suffers Lou Gehrig's disease. He is at home. He is on a respirator.

It is a long letter from the Speaker of the House, TIP O'NEILL, and is five pages long. Then it has a little form to send in. The form is headed "Campaign To Save Medicare-Medicaid." It says on the form,

> I want to help stop the Republicans from gutting critically needed health assistance programs of older Americans. Only the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives was able to protect and save social security from Republican attacks. Now is the time for the same Democratic majority to stop the Republicans from taking their budget axes to Medicare and Medicaid.

Then the letter, which is single spaced, and five pages long, says, among other things—I will just read one paragraph, Mr. President:

> • • • right this moment, my Democratic colleagues and I are in the midst of a crucial fight to block the Reagan Administration and New Right Republicans from callously slashing the benefits and services of what is literally the life's blood of our elderly—Medicare and Medicaid.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this letter from Speaker of the House O'NEILL, a form letter, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> DEAR FRIEND, hardly an American could have missed the enormous battle waged here in Washington last year to save the Social Security system. And when Congress placed this all-important program on a sound financial foundation for future generations, headlines and TB reports proclaimed "Social Security Saved!"
> Well, sad to say, the battle is not yet over.
> What millions of Americans do not realize is that our battle to ensure the health and economic security of older Americans is only half-won. Because without adequate health care insurance, the economic protection that Social Security provides to millions of elderly people is hollow and meaningless.
>
> And right this moment, my Democratic colleagues and I are in the midst of a crucial fight to block the Reagan Administration and New Right Republicans from callously slashing the benefits and services of what is literally the life's blood of our elderly—Medicare and Medicaid.
> We are vehemently opposed to their vicious proposed cuts of more than $1 billion in Medicare and the new cuts of more than $1 billion in Medicaid. And I am personally appealing to you to enlist your immediate help in preventing Medicare and Medicaid from being gutted. Just as the Democratic-controlled House prevented the Reagan Administration from destroying Social Security, we must now save Medicare and Medicaid. And I urge you to help us right now, by making a contribution to the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee's Campaign To Save Medicare/Medicaid.

If you could see some of the letters I receive from older Americans throughout the country, I am sure you would be as appalled as I am with the stories all too many of them tell.

Here are honest, upstanding citizens, who have worked hard—many even fought hard in our nation's wars—to keep America strong. They have given this great country their entire lives. Their only crime is that they have gotten old and sick.

Some letters cry out how, even under current Medicare and Medicaid programs, critical health needs go untreated . . . an 80-year-old woman needs eyeglasses, but the fuel bill is overdue . . . a grandfather needs a heart operation, but cannot have the operation and pay his rent.

And with over 30 million people in this country without any medical insurance, the frequency of such tragedies is all too common.

In spite of this, Ronald Reagan and the New Right Republicans advocate a utopian kind of self-responsibility. In their country-club mentality, they seem to think that every American can somehow find the money to pay for enormous medical bills, hospitalization, and physicians' services. And in their ruthless attempt to cut to the bare bones domestic services, they totally ignore the real facts. The average American over age 65 has a total gross yearly income of only $9,700! The Republicans could not care less that low-income, elderly Americans are already spending at least 16% of their annual income on medical care!

If passed, the Republican plan would substantially increase the financial burden of medical care for older citizens. Reagan has proposed over $1.9 billion in cuts to Medicare in the 1984 budget. More than 50% would come out of the pockets of the elderly.

I, for one, am not going to stand by silently and let the Republicans add intolerable medical expenses to the budgets of millions of older Americans already struggling just to get by. And I don't think you will stand by either.

That's why I'm writing to ask you to join with me and the Democrats in our Campaign To Save Medicare/Medicaid.

Medicare was first instituted under Democrat Lyndon Johnson in 1967. Medicare fulfilled the earlier commitment of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who founded Social Security, to provide the security of guaranteed medical health care. Tens of thousands of senior citizens are alive today thanks to advanced medical technologies, such as kidney dialysis, provided through Medicare. But the opportunity for a longer, healthier, and more satisfying life is being denied to many other older American because of Reagan's "get tough" attitude toward older citizens.

As soon as Ronald Reagan took office, he attacked Medicare by cutting millions of dollars in funding and by asking low-income elderly citizens to pick up the burden of even heavier medical expenses.

If Reagan gets his way, hospital costs alone for the average older American would increase more than 80% in just one year!

Medicaid was first proposed when Democrat John F. Kennedy was president and later passed into law by Democrat Lyndon B. Johnson. Medicaid took an enormous burden from families who were faced with the need to provide long-term residential care for elderly parents.

But once again, President Reagan and his New Right political allies have taken the budget axe to Medicaid during the last two years.

These Republican budget cuts would be as catastrophic to our nation's elderly as the original Reagan proposals to gut Social Security. And just as we fought off those attacks together, we must now save Medicare/Medicaid.

Over the years it has been the Democratic Party that has guarded Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, and other critically needed programs.

With the health and economic security of millions of older Americans under attack by the Reagan Administration, we Democrats have set as our number one priority the goal of saving Medicaid and Medicare.

And believe me, there's a lot at stake for all of us. Medicare and Medicaid together account for over $80 billion a year in federal health care expenditures.

Members of your family have probably already benefited greatly from these two programs which pay for a large part of their hospitalization, their physicians' fees, and medical necessities, such as prescription glasses and wheelchairs.

With so much at stake for all of us, here's our battle plan for our campaign to save Medicare/Medicaid.

1. First, the political staff of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee has started working up strategies to guarantee the election of a Democratic House in 1984 that will stand for, work for, and fight for strong and improved programs in both Medicare and Medicaid.

2. Next, Democratic leaders in the House are scheduling a series of hearings on the future of Medicare and Medicaid. But we're also going to appear on radio and TV talk shows and write editorials for the newspapers. We intend to make the survival and improvement of Medicare and Medicaid a top political issue in the 1984 elections.

3. Third, we must bring our battle to save Medicare/Medicaid into the homes of millions more Americans like you—people who care; people who will not turn their backs on the nation's elderly.

We must seek their help through letters like this one asking for their personal support in making our Campaign To Save Medicare/Medicaid one of the very top issues of the coming campaign. And we must also urge their financial support to make sure Democrats are victorious.

Believe me, the ballot box is the most important weapon we have against those who would destroy or weaken health care services for older Americans.

But to elect and reelect candidates who will champion the defense of Medicare and Medicaid will not be easy.

In the 1982 midterm elections, the three Republican campaign committees outspent the democratic committees by nearly 8 to 1. Their spending, in fact, was the largest in the annals of American politics. And their immense financial influence threatens to destroy our two-party system of government.

Of course I know we Democrats can never match them dollar for dollar. The Republican Party has always been and will always remain the party of wealth and privilege.

But to defend the future of Medicare and Medicaid on which so many older Americans critically depend, you and I must close the money gap. Next November we must be able to send to Washington more Democrats who will stand up and fight for health care services for older Americans.

But we face heavy opposition. The Republicans, now in control of both the Senate and the White House, will spend lavishly to gain control of the House . . . the last remaining govenmental opponent of their cruelly indifferent public policy for our older citizens.

You and I must not turn our backs on millions of older Americans who have planned their retirement and their monthly budgets on their trust in the good faith and commitment of our federal government.

Just as Americans have a legitimate right to expect their monthly Social Security checks, so they have an equally legitimate right to expect that their government will continue to protect them against the high costs of hospitalization, surgery, and the long-term care required after a devastating illness.

Growing old and getting sick is a natural part of life. Citizens should not be penalized and burdened with medical bills beyond their ability to pay.

But unless we act now, the Republicans following President Reagan's lead will penalize and burden older Americans for the natural and inevitable results of aging and illness.

The only way you and I can make sure that insensitive politicians do not undermine or dismantle Medicare and Medicaid is to elect Democrats who will stand for, work for, and fight for a strong, secure health program for older Americans.

We need Democrats in the House of Representatives who will place Medicare and Medicaid at the top of their list of priorities—not at the bottom.

As Speaker of the House, I know from firsthand experience that the threats to Medicare and Medicaid are real and imminent!

I urge your help in our Campaign To Save Medicare/Medicaid.

Your emergency membership contribution today of $15, $20, $25, or more will help us expand this campaign and win this fight.

I am doing all I can every day to protect the health needs of older Americans. But more help is urgently needed now. Please let me know that the Democrats in the House of Representatives can count on your help in this battle to save and improve Medicare and Medicaid services and benefits.

Age and illness befall every one of us. And that's why the stakes are so enormously high for every one of us.

Sincerely,

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I believe that something has to be done to check the rising cost of medicare. I believe that something has to be done to check the uncontrollable rise in the entitlement programs; and that without that action, there is no possibility of having a responsible budget.

Some people say, well, let us cut defense spending. Fine. But no responsible suggestion on defense spending would get a deficit below, say, $150 billion a year.

Anything more than that is wildly beyond the mainstream of debate on the subject of the defense budget. Some people say we should raise taxes. I am sure we are going to have to do that. All of us have proposals. Most of us have proposals which have some increases in revenue. But there has to be a limitation, Mr. President, as to what we can do on the tax side of the ledger.

What we are going to have to do is put together a package which will include something on defense, something on taxes, and something on the entitlements. Let us face it. Without that there is no possibility of having a responsible budget.

The people of my State believe that the Congress of the United States is acting irresponsibly. They are willing to face up to the necessity of reducing the size of the deficit provided everybody is treated fairly. People of all ages, Madam President, people who are retired, people who are elderly, people who are of all ages and all groups are willing to do their part provided they are treated fairly.

But I say to the Senate today that one thing that is going to absolutely prevent the possibility of responsible action on the budget, is the question of the entitlement programs continues to be demagog for political purposes; that is if it continues to be made into such a political issue that nobody can vote for anything without fear of political death, then the Congress is going to be immobilized.

I compliment the Senator from South Carolina for breaking the ice. It is statesmanlike. With proposals like this, I understand why the Senator's Presidential campaign may not have exactly led the parade. While I have difficulties with the tax and defense proposals of this proposal, the Senator from South Carolina has shown the way in indicating that the politically poisonous subject of the entitlement programs can be addressed in a responsible and bipartisan manner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HAWKINS). Who yields time? Does the Senator from Missouri yield time?

Mr. DANFORTH. Madam President, I am not aware of anyone in opposition to this amendment who desires to speak at this time. Senator DOLE, I understand, is on his way to the floor.

Does the Senator from South Carolina want to speak on his time?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes; I would like to put some things in the RECORD, if I am allowed a minute. I appreciate your courtesy. I thank the distinguished Senator for his generous references to me. I wonder. When we talk about the cuts in defense, Senator, we are not cutting defense. This present fiscal year, right this very minute, we are experiencing a 3-percent real growth 1984 over 1983. If we pass the pay supplemental, we will then have a 3.5-percent real growth for 1984. This particular bipartisan amendment calls for a 4-percent real growth of a larger defense budget figure.

In reality, instead of cutting defense—yes; from the President's request it is a cut—it is a $24 billion increase. In a way, it is a little larger than desired for this particular Senator. But I was trying to fashion the amendment to do exactly what you say; that is, get into the realm of debate where we were.

The distinguished Senator from Kansas has a follow-on amendment where there is an absolute flat freeze on defense. In other words, it is $24 billion less than this particular amendment.

I thought that unrealistic. I thought it was unwise with respect to our 3-percent commitment to NATO. I thought it was unwise economically, trying to keep the defense programs current so we would not have to retrench on any particular program.

I ask unanimous consent at this point to include in the RECORD the tables that would provide specific details about the Hollings-Andrews-Exon bipartisan budget reduction plan and a talk I recently gave on the topic of budget freeze. I ask unanimous consent that they be included.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BIPARTISAN BUDGET FREEZE PROPOSAL

MAJOR POINTS ON NATIONAL DEFENSE

Provides 4 percent annual "Real Growth" in fiscal year 1985–86 and 3 percent in fiscal year 1987–89 with CBO economic assumptions.

Provides 5.5 percent annual "Real Growth" in fiscal year 1985–86 and 4.5 percent in fiscal year 1987–89 with Administration economic assumptions.

Reduces Congressional Baseline Defense totals for fiscal year 1985–87 established in fiscal year 1984 Budget Resolution by $22 billion. Reduces President's new Defense totals by $26 billion.

President's revised Defense totals add $4 billion to Congressional baseline.

Historical defense spending totals:

Annual real growth in total defense spending, fiscal year 1981–84	8.9
Annual real growth in defense procurement, fiscal year 1981–84	17.2
Annual real growth in defense R&D, fiscal year 1981–84	11.9

Holding defense spending to 4 percent in fiscal year 1985 would still provide for annual real growth of 7.7 percent (fiscal year 1981–85) and meet the NATO commitment.

Bipartisan proposal provides for annual real growth through fiscal year 1989 of 5.7 percent per year for 1980s under CBO economic assumptions.

Bipartisan proposal provides for annual real growth through fiscal year 1989 of 6.5 percent per year for 1980s under administration economic assumptions.

FREEZE, FREEZE, FREEZE

Everywhere men cry "freeze" but there is no freeze. This is to be expected. David Brinkley recently said, "We have been spending with abandon for 40 years and there is no reason to think that Congress will change this election year." Perhaps we could dispel this air of futility if we understood that for years we have maintained a discipline against "tax and tax and spend and spend." Today that discipline has been broken. We are in serious trouble.

All politicians love tax cuts. For the twenty year period 1960–1980, we had one general tax increase. In contrast, we passed seven tax cuts during the 70's for a revenue loss of $731 billion. The thrust of Kemp-Roth supply side was "if you can't beat them, join them." If the Democrats insisted on redistributing the wealth of the country with niggling tax cuts then the Republicans would take care of the rich with a 30 percent tax cut. Discipline against large deficits had been maintained since World War II. For the 33 year period between 1947 and 1980, the total cumulative deficit was $465.5 billion. The cumulative deficit for the three years 1982, 1983 and 1984 amounts to $495 billion. Our trouble didn't begin 40 years ago but just now. Each year you run a $200 billion deficit you in essence launch a new spending program of $20 billion for interest costs—$20 billion that could be spent for cancer research, cracks in roads and bridges, education, etc.—$20 billion for nothing. The national debt grows, and interest compounds. Today we are spending $3 billion a week to finance the national debt. Before long Congress will be meeting and after taking care of defense, Social Security and health costs there will be an annual struggle to raise taxes to finance the national debt. We won't be able to provide for anything else.

The reason there is no freeze is that the Republicans want to run on the Reagan tax cuts and hope they can get past the election before interest rates rise. Democrats, knowing that the deficits will cause a rise in interest rates, hope that this will happen before the election causing the Republicans to be thrown out of office. One side doesn't want to see a problem, the other doesn't want to solve it. Neither side wants to face the necessary sacrifice and discipline before the election so both sides engage in the political charade of "freeze" plans that identify with the problem without a solution.

To do the job, the freeze must:

1. Be Bipartisan. The Republicans and Democrats each have the power to cancel the other in the Congress today so that any freeze must be bipartisan;

2. Be Politically Attainable—one that could pass the House and the Senate;

3. Eliminate the Deficit in 5 Years. Unless there is a realistic five year plan, the financial markets will not respond. We must show that we can control the uncontrollables and that the Federal budget will be back in the black in five years;

4. Be Enacted Now—next year is too late. A freeze today could be impossible later. When inflation reignites, touching entitlements will be out of the question. If recession hits, restraining counter cyclical spending will be impossible.

The Republican freeze increases the deficit instead of cutting it. The House Democratic freeze maintains the deficit at a $181 billion level and probably higher. The Senate Democratic freeze maintains the deficit at a $170 billion level. The Kassebaum freeze is only for one year and its total freeze for defense would require a cut in readiness and maintenance of the troops.

The Hollings-Andrews-Exon freeze is bipartisan and politically attainable in that it has just been attained. We are saying, "Let's take this year's budget which was signed into law just five months ago and live with it another year." Is that so difficult? Is that so different from what most families, businesses, unions, state and local governments have had to do during the last four years? We say NO. We say it's about time Washington caught up with the rest of the country. Our proposal will freeze cost-of-living adjustments, discretionary spending and civilian pay for one year followed by 3 percent increases for the next four years. Programs for the nation's needy—supplementary security income, food stamps, Medicare, Medicaid—are exempted. Our plan allows a 3 percent real growth in defense. A total freeze is politically unrealistic—and damaging to defense. The 3 percent maintains the readiness of our troops and our NATO commitment. Our proposal cuts spending $450 billion. On the revenue side, our plan provides $350 billion over 5 years to be raised by a delay in tax indexing, a stretch-out of building depreciation from 15 to 20 years, full basis adjustment for investment tax credits, a minimum corporate tax and other measures included in the Finance Committee bill. The deficit is reduced in five years to $8 billion.

This bipartisan freeze is severe. But the economic forces afoot in the Federal budget are so devastating that it has to be traumatic to get the the job done. A down payment is just a cop-out. Our plan calls for sacrifice but it's a shared sacrifice. We have been on a spending binge too long. Now is the time to put America on a diet and give the future a chance.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Pending the arrival of Senator DOLE in the Chamber, I might also comment on social security. The distinguished Senator from Missouri, on the Finance Committee, will understand that it is not solvent in the sense that we are now taking from the general fund this year. Those on the Finance Committee know we will be taking again next year.

The so-called reform plan had the word saying "reform," but what we did was to borrow from the general revenue. We ran out of the health care fund. We had been borrowing from there. Now we jump the borrowing over to keep it all going, with the so-called increases, from the general revenues. Senator LONG will be on hand in just a moment. I am trying to jog my memory. I believe he used the figure in excess of $60 billion which we would be borrowing from the general revenues in order to pay social security. So we are not taking from the trust fund.

One letter was read about medicare. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Missouri. We really have demagogged the social security issue all over the country. I have traveled the country and everywhere we went different candidates were running for office who stood for social security and would save it, and wondered who really opposed it and were trying to cut it.

I did not know of any movement on either side to cut social security.

We do have damagogs. But we do not cut medicare. We do not cut the medicare funds.

With that, I see that the distinguished Senator from Nebraska also has a small inclusion for the RECORD that he also wants to present, if the Senator will yield. I will yield so the Senator from Nebraska may proceed.

Mr. DANFORTH. Madam President, I yield to the Senator from Nebraska. The only problem I have is that I understand Senator DOLE may be coming to the floor and may like to speak. When he arrives, I hope the Senator from Nebraska will yield to him.

Mr. EXON. Of course. I thank my friend from Missouri.

Madam President, there has been a lot of talk here today, much of it not about the merits or demerits of this bill, but politics.

I say to my friend from Missouri what I said to my friend from New Mexico earlier. This Senator does not play the games that he alluded to in his campaign. If it was my party that was behind that, I apologize. It was not this Senator who played the type of games that the Senator from New Mexico indicated were played 2 years ago on the social security issue.

Concerning the letter that the Senator read from TIP O'NEILL, I have several letters of that general nature by prominent Republicans, some holding the highest offices in this land, which I do not believe would meet the test of fairness in terms of what the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Nebraska would think was right.

Obviously, the Senator from Missouri was quite touched and probably hurt by the unfairness of the campaign waged against him.

I would not be surprised if some of us might not find a like circumstance coming up this November. I think the stage was set pretty clearly for that by the chairman of the Budget Committee and inadvertently, perhaps, by the Senator from Missouri.

I would like to say that there has been some talk here about this terrible tax increase. I would simply say, Madam President, that the first 3 years, $137 billion over a 3-year period, would just about, or a little bit more, cover the two main increases in our bill, national defense, which I suppose we are all interested in, the increase for national defense, and the increase in interest on the national debt.

Somewhere along the line those who support defense must arrange to pay for it.

A great hue and cry went up on the other side when the House said we should have a tax for national defense. I simply say that the Hollings-Exon-Andrews bill in the first 3 years, with the $137 billion figure alluded to by the chairman of the Budget Committee, would just about take care of the increase that our bill allows for national defense and interest on the national debt, two things that we cannot get out of, in the opinion of this Senator.

I was quite discouraged, Madam President, to again hear talk by my good friend, in whom I have great respect, the chairman of the Budget Committee, talking about attacks on entitlement programs. There is no attack on entitlement programs in this particular bill. We try to treat everyone equally.

I am quite surprised that the Senator from Missouri is not with us on this, because he has been with us on similar plans that did about the same thing as this, only for a shorter period of time.

I was also quite disappointed, Madam President, frankly, at the attitude expressed by the chairman of the Budget Committee about entitlement programs.

On three or four occasions I have personally heard the chairman of the Budget Committee, the Senator from New Mexico, get on the air—and I said, "There is a man of courage"—and say "We are not going to attack the deficit program until we take a look at entitlements." He said that over and over and over again, until today.

There is a lot of politics going on, a lot of politics being played. I see a lot of smiles on faces of staff members, who had part and parcel of this. I only say to you, Madam President, that we can make political attacks and we can play politics. But that is not going to solve the deficit. This is a fair and reasonable proposal. I would hope that for once we could put partisan politics and elections aside and do what is right for this country.

I am disappointed that we are not getting more support so far from the other side of the aisle, despite what the Senator from New Mexico said, that this is indeed a bipartisan plan. How many votes we will get on the other side I do not know, because that side is already locked into the rose garden patchwork plan that is not going to do anything.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Will the distinguished Senator yield 1 more minute?

Mr. DANFORTH. I yield.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the revenue proposal table be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Possible alternatives include repeal of excess bad debt allowance for banks, increased minimum corporate tax, full basis adjustment for investment tax credit, and other base broadening measures.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Madam President, what we propose to do is not out of thin air and not in contradiction to anything being considered by the Finance Committee. In order to be realistic, we went to the Finance Committee. We took the pending Finance Committee Reconciliation Act to date. Then, unlike the Finance Committee, since there has been a split in the committee, we did delay indexing. We added on the Congressional Budget Office estimate of improved taxpayer compliance.

Then we took the different revenue measures that were suggested by different members of the Finance Committee and their staffs, namely the bad debt allowance of banks. Some of these were to be considered. Not to hogtie, because we could not, the Finance Committee, but to consider some things they had been proposing. The minimum corporate tax, the full base adjustment for the investment tax credit, and all the rest.

When my distinguished colleague from Kansas, the chairman of the Committee on Finance (Mr. DOLE) comes in, I know he might say I am trying to foresee—he will say, you give us these billions and billions, and where are we going to get them from? These proposals come from the Finance Committee. We are not taking it out of whole cloth and giving it an unrealistic assignment.

Now that the distinguished Senator from Louisiana is here, I say I shall never forget his poignant statement at the time the so-called social security reform package was adopted. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana and I voted against it. I believe the figure used at that time by the Senator from Louisiana was some $60 billion over a period of 3 years or 5 years that was to come out of the general revenues in order to pay for social security.

I called the social security office and the CBO. They both agreed that this year, 1984, the figure is 16.9 billion. But cumulatively, was there not some $60 billion figure, I ask the Senator from Louisiana, coming from general revenues in order to pay social security?

Mr. LONG. Madam President, I shall be glad to review the matter and give a more complete statement on it, but as I recall it amounts to about $68 billion over the period of 1983 through 1989, over this period, by gimmicks, tricks, and sleight of hand, about $68 billion of printing press money was put in the social security fund. It worked out exactly the same as if you said, "Let's simply adjust the figures. The general fund is $68 billion deeper in debt, and the social security fund is richer by $68 billion."

One device that was used was to put money in the trust fund before it is collected. When the Secretary of the Treasury collects the social security tax, he puts it in the social security fund. Rather than have him put it in the fund when he collects the money, we said, "Let him estimate how much that is going to be and put it in in advance." By doing that, this social security fund gets the money a month sooner than it would otherwise.

It works out just exactly the same as if you had simply taken an amount equal to 1 month's tax payment and put that in the social security fund, without having collected the tax.

That one trick picks up about 8 percent of 1 year's social security tax collection. That is a lot of money, quite a few billion dollars.

Then there were various other ways to transfer general fund money to the social security fund. For example, we have been paying benefits based on World War II military service even though they did not pay social security tax. Previously, we just charged the general fund for the cost of the benefits. Last year we changed this to pay the money into the Treasury that we would have collected if we had put the tax on the servicemen for all those years before 1956.

Mr. HOLLINGS. There you go.

Mr. LONG. All these devices work out just exactly the same as if you were simply ordering that the Treasury print and add to the Federal debt $68 billion of cash and put that in the social security fund.

In fact, you do not even have to print the money; you just put the number of the balance sheet. But it all works out the same as if you had printed the money, put the Government $68 billion in debt over a period of years to help pay for the program.

I shall be glad to provide the Senator a memo saying in detail what these various gimmicks were. You can say that we are paying for the benefits that have been provided the servicemen in years gone by and things like that, but what it all amounts to is just taking the money out of the Federal Treasury, saying the Government is just that much deeper in debt, and adding it to the social security fund, so the social security fund is hereby solvent and the Federal Government is hereby that much deeper in debt.

Mr. HOLLINGS. There you go. We are deeper in debt.

I appreciate the distinguished Senator's clarifying that point. The reason it is significant is that the chairman of the Budget Committee was talking in terms that someone would think we would take $70 billion. Rather than taking $70 billion from the trust fund, what we have done is really add it to the general revenue, $68 billion. We are not taking anything from the trust fund by this particular amendment. That is what frustrated me.

We are cheated by going ahead, for seeing, as the Senator says, gimmicks. We have paid farmers already. I hope they are living because they have the money and if they do not plant next year in accordance with the moneys advanced them this year—this is the most shameful, or shameless, or whatever, Congress I have ever seen. We are just doling money out to farmers, social security recipients, $200 billion generally to the public that we do not even have and do not seem to be worried about it.

I can tell the Senator right now, it just distresses me that, somehow, somewhere, we cannot get the attention of the American people.

Mr. LONG. Madam President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes.

Mr. LONG. It falls into the same category as an item we did in the Finance Committee some years ago when the Senator from Louisiana was chairman. We just ran out of ways to save money, so we simply said we would move forward the date on which a certain payment was due. By moving that date forward, that meant that money would be paid in one fiscal year rather than the other fiscal year. That improved our situation in the budget year by several hundred million dollars by just moving that date. That was not a very honest way to improve our situation.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I think the Senator from Missouri is trying to get our attention.

Mr. LONG. If I can just complete this statement—then the next year, under Mr. DOLE's leadership, the committee was again in difficulty. If found itself hard put for money in the new budget year so it just moved the date back where it came from and picked the money up all over again. One year you improve your situation by moving the date forward, and the next year, you improve your situation by moving the date back where it came from and there is quite a bit of that same type of legerdemain in the social security bill.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the Senators from Missouri, New Mexico, and Louisiana.

May I have the yeas and nays on the amendment, please Madam President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DANFORTH. Madam President, I should like to point out that it my understanding of the Hollings amendment that it does alter the proposal before us in that it cuts defense spending more than—I would say the increase in defense spending is less than the Budget Committee's proposal. In addition to that, it would raise more revenue than the proposal that is before us. But I think that the thing that is really important to emphasize is that this proposal, as I understand it, does have a freeze on medicare.

Mr. HOLLINGS. No; it does not freeze medicare, Mr. President.

Mr. DANFORTH. It is my understanding that within the amendment itself, under the provision, "Medicare Freeze," that is found on page—apparently the pages are not numbered—but there is a section called Medicare Freeze.

In addition to that, it is my understanding that it does freeze cost-of-living adjustments for entitlement programs for 1 year. Then, for an additional 2-year period, it places an additional cap on the growth. So it does deal with the entitlement issue.

I think, therefore, that what this amendment recognizes, although the numbers are not what I would prefer, is that a mix is necessary, that some additional revenues, restraint in defense spending, and doing something about the entitlements is a mix which is necessary if we are going to get the deficit under control.

For that reason, I commend the Senator from South Carolina, even though I shall not be voting with him, for the political courage necessary to face up to the problem of the entitlement programs and what to do with them.

(The name of Mr. NUNN was added as a cosponsor, by unanimous consent.)

Mr. SASSER. Madam President, any vote to cut the looming Federal budget deficits facing this country this year and for future years entails significant sacrifice. This vote is no different.

The plan offered by the Senator from South Carolina, Mr. HOLLINGS, the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. ANDREWS, and the Senator from Nebraska, Mr. EXON, is tough medicine. Given the depth and scope of the current deficit dilemma we find ourselves confronted with, tough medicine is needed.

This budget plan represents an integration of two extremely important concepts which are essential to the current debate: First, it is comprehensive from the standpoint that it reduces the Federal deficit by some $315 billion over the next 3 years; second, it embodies the notion of shared sacrifice in that everybody is asked to pay the price for sustained economic growth for the future.

I voted for the plan only reluctantly due to the nature of the social spending constraints contained within. In particular I refer to the 1-year freeze on social security cost-of-living adjustments. While the freeze is not an actual cut, it does represent holding the line on these adjustments for 1 year. The Government's commitment to the elderly is one of the most profound commitments we have to make. It is my belief, however, that had the Hollings-Andrews-Exon plan been adopted, we would have secured a stable economic growth path which would have fully protected the fiscal integrity of the social security trust funds.

It must also be remembered that the budget reconciliation we are considering would only be binding for 1 year, and given encouraging economic performance we would have the opportunity to revisit these actions next year.

In summary, I felt that the drastic nature of the economic problems facing the Nation warranted drastic action, and drastic action now, not after the November elections. This vote in no way reflects a change in unwavering commitment to the security of one of the Nation's most valuable resources; our elderly citizens.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I commend the Senator from South Carolina for his work on deficit reduction. I agree with the basic thrust of his amendment, which calls for very substantial deficit reduction through a program of shared sacrifice. I agree that we must take action or else we risk generating higher interest rates which will cut short economic recovery. For my State of Michigan, stalling out the recovery would mean having the unemployment rate stay at a plateau of 11 percent, which is a higher rate than was reached nationwide during the depth of the recession. We cannot permit this to happen.

However, my general agreement with the approach of the Hollings amendment does not include its provision which would freeze for 1 year the COLA's for social security recipients and others who are receiving Federal retirement benefits. This provision represents asking many of those who are most in need to take too large and sudden a step in the march toward deficit reduction. Due to the parliamentary situation, it was impossible to amend the Hollings plan prior to its being voted on. However, I have consulted with the Parliamentarian and was advised that if the Hollings plan is adopted, then it would be possible to amend it. I have informed the Senator from South Carolina that I would at that point seek to offer an amendment to modify the 1-year COLA freeze. If this amendment to the Hollings plan were not adopted, then I would not support the Hollings plan on final passage.

Deficit reduction is essential. So is being fair. I shall continue to work during this debate to achieve both of these goals.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I cannot support this amendment, much as the Senator from Kansas would like to cut the deficit by $314 billion. We have to live in the real world, and there is just no reality behind these numbers. The Hollings budget raises taxes by more than is possible or desirable and asks us to vote for a COLA freeze that is sure to be vetoed by his own party in the House. Moreover, Mr. President, the centerpieces of this budget—repealing indexing and freezing COLA's—have already been rejected or have received little support this year.

The Hollings budget claims to reduce baseline deficits by $314 billion over the next 4 years, including $135 in tax increases, $172 in spending cuts, and $36 billion in interest savings.

The amendment would raise $135 billion in taxes by: First, accepting the Finance Committee package of $48 billion; second, delaying indexing 5 years—$54 billion; third, imposing a 10 percent withholding on independent contractors and on royalty payments; and forth, an unspecified increase of $23 billion by issuing the Finance Committee a reconciliation instruction.

Delaying indexing 5 years is tantamount to repeal. We have fought this battle before; a short time ago, a similar indexing delay was defeated by a vote of 38–57. Yet, this failed amendment is the centerpiece of this budget.

It is interesting that Senator HOLLINGS would offer an extension of withholding. We could have used his support in the vote on withholding last year but the Senator from South Carolina opposed the Dole compromise on withholding.

This amendment accepts the Finance Committee package on revenues; yet a similar-tax reform, base-broadening package of 2 years ago, TEFRA, was opposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Then there is the unspecified tax increase of $23 billion. Apparently the sponsors of this amendment ran out of ideas, so they are laying it on the Finance Committee. This is another demonstration of the unreality of the budget. The Senator from Kansas, as chairman of the Finance Committee, would have liked to raise another $23 billion, but $48 billion was as high as we could go. I dare say that the Senator from South Carolina would oppose many of the provisions necessary to raise another $23 billion. If he has some ideas, I would suggest he spell them out instead of passing the buck to the Finance Committee.

This budget lacks credibility. Of $137 billion in revenue, $77 billion come from delaying indexing and an unspecified tax increase. Neither is going to happen.

Neither is the freeze on entitlements going to happen, not until it is endorsed by TIP O'NEILL.

The Hollings-Exon-Andrews budget would yield $7.3 billion in savings in medicare by freezing hospital payments; but our finance committee bill gives more than that, $10.4 billion, in fact. And we believe that we have done so in a more efficient and equitable fashion.

This amendment would reduce social security spending by $28 billion over the next 3 years, or a reduction of $1,850 for an average retired couple over this period.

When you strip away the items on the Senator's wish list, you are left with the Republican leadership budget. This underscores why I am supporting the leadership budget—it is not perfect, but it is the best that is going to happen this year.

Plans that make larger savings sound great, but they make those savings by either raising taxes substantially more than $48 billion, freezing entitlements, or making deep cuts in defense. None of these is in the cards this year.

Madam President, the Republican leadership budget is the only realistic possibility this year. If it is defeated, the likelihood is that there will be no deficit reduction in 1984.

Madam President, is there 1 minute remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One minute remains.

Mr. DOLE. Again, I commend everybody who wants to reduce the deficit. I think it is great to make these speeches on the floor, but when you go into the committee of jurisdiction to get the votes, they are not there.

The House had a little freeze—it was not even frozen, a semifrozen proposition. It got 108 votes. That is controlled by the Democrats.

There is not going to be any freeze passed by the Congress. We are walking into a trap, the House just waiting for us to vote a big freeze over here. Then they say, "Ha, ha, there they go again."

So if you want to defer indexing for 5 years, who is going to lose? Seventy-eight percent of the tax increase for deferring indexing would fall on taxpayers earning less than $50,000 per year. Twenty-two percent of the cost of the repeal of indexing would fall on taxpayers earning more than $50,000. I hope next year we can continue this bipartisan spirit. This year let us go ahead and pass something that we can get support for on both sides. I hope we will defeat this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. DURENBERGER) and the Senator from Alaska (Mr. MURKOWSKI), are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. DURENBERGER), would vote "nay."

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Illinois (Mr. DIXON), the Senator from Colorado (Mr. HART), and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. DIXON) would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who wish to vote?

So Mr. HOLLINGS' amendment (No. 3041) was rejected.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I do not know what is going to happen next, and until I can find out, we cannot go out.

I do not know how to proceed except with a quorum call, but let me warn Senators that we have not necessarily had our last vote. I hope we can work something out, but it is not yet done.

Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am happy to report that the authors of the Kassebaum-Grassley-Biden-Baucus amendment have said that they will offer that amendment tonight. In exchange, I have assured them that we will not proceed beyond the point of simply offering it, and making it the pending question.

As soon as it is offered, reported, and made the pending question, it will be the intention of the leadership of this side to put us in a brief period for morning business, and to go out promptly. Based on that, and with great gratitude, I wish to announce that there will be no more RECORD votes today.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF POSITION ON AMENDMENT NO. 3034

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I wish to announce that I was necessarily absent yesterday during the rollcall vote on amendment No. 3034. Had I been present, I would have voted "nay," and I ask that this be made a part of the permanent record.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am advised that the Kassebaum, et al., amendment is on its way to the floor to be introduced. It is not yet here.

To conserve time, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to proceed with morning business with certain routine matters not past 6:30 p.m., with no limitation as to time so that the minority leader and I may speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the material that I am about to cover appears to have been cleared on both sides for action by unanimous consent. Let me go through it now and state the requests for the minority leader and other Senators.

ORDER TO PLACE HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 537 ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate receives from the House, House Joint Resolution 537, a joint resolution designating the Brigantine and Barnegat units of the National Wildlife Refuge System as the Edwin B. Forsythe National Wildlife Refuge, it be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER TO PLACE HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 275 ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate receives from the House, House Concurrent Resolution 275, to commend Colombia for drug enforcement, it be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR STAR PRINT OF REPORT NO. 98-400

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Report No. 98-400 to accompany S. 2582 be star printed to reflect the following changes which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CRITICAL AGRICULTURAL MATERIALS ACT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, if the minority leader has no objection, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate calendar order No. 262.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2733) to extend and improve the existing program of research, development, and demonstration in the production and manufacture of guayule rubber, and to broaden such program to include other critical agricultural materials.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry with an amendment.

On page 11, after line 20, insert:

TARGET PRICES AND EXPORT INITIATIVES

SEC. 16. (a) This section may be cited as the "Target Prices and Export Initiatives Act of 1983".

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 107B(b)(1)(C), 105B(b)(1)(C), 103(g)(3)(B), and 101(i)(2)(C) of the Agricultural Act of 1949, the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe that the established price for the 1984 or 1985 crop of wheat, corn, upland cotton, or rice shall be such price as the Secretary determines to be appropriate, but in no case shall the price be less than the minimum established price for the 1983 crop of the commodity.

(c) Effective for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1984, and September 30, 1985, the Secretary of Agriculture shall use not less than $300,000,000 of funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation for export activities authorized to be carried out by the Secretary or by the Commodity Credit Corporation under the provisions of law in effect on the date of enactment of this section, notwithstanding the fact that the activity may not be included in the budget program of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The Secretary shall carry out the program authorized by this section through the Commodity Credit Corporation. The authority provided in this section shall be in addition to, and not in place of, any authority granted to the Secretary or the Commodity Credit Corporation under any other provision of law.

(d) Section 4(d) of the Food for Peace Act of 1966 is amended by—

(1) striking out the second sentence of paragraph (3);

(2) amending the second sentence of paragraph (4) to read as follows: "All funds received by the Corporation in payment for credit extended by the Corporation (A) under the provisions of the Target Prices and Export Initiatives Act of 1983 and section 135 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982, and (B) using the revolving fund, including interest or other receipts on investments and credit obligations, in financing export sales of the types specified in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be added to and become a part of such revolving fund.";

(3) striking out "1982" in the third sentence of paragraph (5) and inserting in lieu thereof "1985";

(4) striking out paragraphs (6) and (8); and

(5) redesignating paragraph (7) as paragraph (6).

COTTON

SEC. 17. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in order to acquire a sufficient amount of upland cotton to carry out the payment-in-kind program established by the Secretary of Agriculture for the 1983 crop of upland cotton, the Secretary shall solicit bids from cotton producers, without specifying any limit on the amount of the bids, for sale to the Commodity Credit Corporation of cotton pledged by such producers as security for nonrecourse loans made under section 103(g)(1) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1444(g)(1)). Until sufficient cotton to carry out the payment-in-kind program for the 1983 crop of upland cotton is acquired under this procedure, or until a reasonable bid period opportunity has been determined and made available by the Secretary, but in no event less than two weeks, no bid shall be rejected unless it exceeds the amount (on a percentage basis) of the highest bid received and accepted by the Secretary under the same procedure for feed grains. The Secretary shall give any producer who has previously submitted a bid the opportunity to nullify such bid if the producer agrees to submit another bid under the terms of this section.

The title to be amended so as to read: "An Act to improve research and development in the production and manufacture of guayule rubber and to broaden the program to include other critical agricultural materials, to provide discretion to the Secretary of Agriculture in the establishment of target prices, to extend agricultural export initiatives, and to provide equity in the payment-in-kind program for certain producers of upland cotton".

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the Critical Agricultural Materials Act of 1983, H.R. 2733, extends for 5 years the authorization for appropriations for existing programs of research, development, and demonstration in the production and manufacture of guayule—pronounced why-you-lee, and broadens program authority to include other nontraditional agricultural materials as well. This bill continues the promotion of the development and commercialization of a domestic natural rubber based on the cultivation of guayule.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of H.R. 2733 be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. HELMS. I urge the support of H.R. 2733 since it provides the impetus to develop the capability for the United States to produce native latex and reduce the 100-percent dependency we have for natural rubber. The natural rubber supply for this country comes totally from foreign sources. Presently the United States imports annually 800,000 metric tons of natural rubber at a cost exceeding one-half billion dollars per year.

Mr. President, Federal involvement in guayule research has spanned the last two decades. Guayule was produced in California during World War II when foreign supplies of natural rubber were cut off. However, production ended once foreign rubber again became available. During the Korean war, cultivation programs began in Texas, but were ended after the war.

Increased efforts in this area were renewed in 1978 when Congress passed th Native Latex Commercialization and Economic Development Act of 1978. My distinguished colleague, Senator DOMENICI of New Mexico, took a leadership role in this effort and I commend his efforts to establish a national policy for the development and demonstration of economically feasible means of culturing and manufacturing guayule for the extraction of natural rubber.

However, Mr. President, the full capacity of the program has never been reached and the United States still remains totally dependent on foreign sources of natural rubbers. H.R. 2733 will send the message from Congress that we intend to see this dependency reduced.

Most of the natural latex produced in the world comes from tropical plants which are not suitable for growth in the United States. Yet guayule, which is a member of the sunflower family and native to North America, produces significant amounts of natural rubber, and its development could introduce a domestic source for natural rubber. Research on the commercial development of guayule suggests that the United States may be able to produce 30 percent of its domestic rubber needs from guayule. This legislation furthers this endeavor.

In addition, Mr. President, H.R. 2733 broadens program authority to include other nontraditional agricultural materials. We have the potential to develop new uses for many ancient crops which hold commercial promise as renewable sources of critical materials. Plants such as meadow foam, crambe, buffalo gourd, gopher weed, and jojoba—pronounce ho-ho-bah—are but a few known to produce feedstocks, industrial hydrocarbons, plastics, fertilizers, and lubricants.

Furthermore, modern technology and continuing research are opening new doors that will allow us to produce more and better food and fiber products. It is interesting to note that just a few decades ago soybeans and sunflowers were considered nontraditional crops. Thinking ahead, it may be, for instance, that concentrated protein from the tobacco plant may be the wonder food of the next decade.

Mr. President, private capital investment cannot be expected until it can be shown that such crops can be grown profitably. The future in this area is encouraging, and we have yet to reach our full capacity. For example, the commercial development of guayule could encourage growth of jobs and small industries in our Southwest. Similar activity with other plants can provide these opportunities nationwide.

Research in both the public and private sectors is appropriate for developing guayule into a viable crop to supply an alternative natural rubber source for this Nation. Public support should be directed toward basic genetic materials, disease and general pest resistance, improved cultural practices, and providing information on seed production practices, harvesting, and storage procedures.

The private sector can engage in applied and developmental guayule research to improve large-scale planting and harvesting techniques, new storage technology, processing, and ultimately the commercialization of guayule as a finished natural rubber product.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include as part of the RECORD, two letters that were received in support of H.R. 2733. These letters are very encouraging and provide insight on this new frontier in agricultural research and development. I am convinced that with proper research, production data, and feasibility studies, private industry can and should be encouraged to pursue new uses for ancient crops, and new crops as well, that are found to have a promising future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 2.)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I urge adoption of H.R. 2733. This bill will continue efforts to develop farming systems which conserve our resources, develop new crops and new uses for existing crops, and better agriculture-related research and development programs. Additionally, H.R. 2733 can favorably contribute to our national economy and security, our national defense, and our foreign trade balance.

EXHIBIT 1

SUMMARY: H.R. 2733, CRITICAL AGRICULTURAL MATERIALS ACT

H.R. 2733, A bill to extend and improve the existing program of research, development, and demonstration in the production and manufacture of guayule rubber, and to broaden such program to include other critical agricultural materials.

The Purpose of this bill is to extend for five years the Native Latex Commercialization and Economic Development Act of 1978 (Public Law 95-592). The measure broadens our guayule research and development program to one of a more generic nature that will include other agricultural crops that have the potential for producing materials of strategic or industrial importance.

Major Provisions of H.R. 2733:

Extends for five years the Native Latex Commercialization and Economic Development Act of 1978;

Authorizes appropriations on an annually graduating scale totaling $50 million. Of this amount USDA will receive $32.5 million and the Department of Commerce will receive $17.5 million;

Establishes the Department of Agriculture as the lead agency to carry out provisions of the Act;

Establishes within USDA an Office of Critical Agricultural Materials, which will coordinate research activities on native latex and other agricultural crops that bear strategic and industrial materials;

Calls for the acceleration of genetic research, large-scale plantings, and development of pilot and commerical size extraction facilities for native latex from guayule;

Broadens the guayule research and development program to include other critical agricultural materials that would be of strategic and industrial importance to the United States; and Expands the membership of the Joint Commission that coordinates activities in this area to include the Department of Defense, the Department of State, and the Federal Emergency Management Agency. The Secretary of USDA will chair the Joint Commission.

BOTANICAL RESOURCES,
October 12, 1983.

Hon. JESSE HELMS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HELMS: In discussions of glamorous new technologies there is a tendency to overlook that agriculture is our country's most productive technology. As such it deserves its proportionate share of stimulation and scientific support.

New cash crops are needed for the United States. With food crop overproduction there is now much unused fertile land, and with it come highly skilled farmers eager to develop the new cash crops. If the crop has an existing market and a critical end use but is totally imported from unstable growing regions, then domestic production simultaneously serves national security, creates jobs and returns money to the United States rather than a foreign economy.

Pyrethrin is a natural insecticide extracted from pyrethrum flowers and is the safest insecticide. It is classified a strategic and critical material by the Federal Emergency Management Agency and is to be stockpiled because the United States is completely dependent on foreign sources of supply. However, we recently formed Botanical Resources to begin producing pyrethrin domestically.

Enclosed is a copy of a letter recently sent to Dr. Wheaton at the USDA along with other information detailing the importance of pyrethrin. But briefly here is what can be said about pyrethrin: It is a non-synthetic, non-petroleum based, non-persistent, renewable natural material extracted from daisy-like flowers, having FDA/EPA food tolerance and safety towards humans, animals and the environment; after centuries of use it is definitely established that it does not cause cancer, birth defects or cellular mutations. In these days of dioxin, toxic waste dumps, improperly tested synthetic pesticides, etc., there will be much popular support for such a benign alternative.

The manufacture of pyrethrum extract has such commercial potential that it can be privately financed. But the most important and most expensive step of the project is to develop the agriculture; that is, to show that U.S. farmers can make money growing pyrethrum, that they can grow it more efficiently than anywhere else. Botanical Resources has spent about $75,000 with nurseries, farmers and the universities to get the project started, and we would at least like to see our funds matched by state and federal agencies.

Developing the agriculture of a new crop is what the USDA and agricultural universities have done so successfully in the past. Earlier this year the House passed by a wide margin a $50 million Critical Agricultural Materials Act (summary enclosed) which will provide funding to the USDA and other agencies to develop crops such as pyrethrum. The bill is now with your agriculture Committee and we urgently request your support for its passage into law in its pure form. It is a very efficient use of federal money for stimulating the creation of new U.S. industry. We will be grateful for any help you can provide.

Sincerely,

MARC SIMS,
President.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, RIVERSIDE,
Riverside, Calif., June 7, 1983.

GEORGE S. DUNLOP,
Chief of Staff, U.S. Senate, Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. DUNLOP: Dean Irwin Sherman has asked me to respond to your letter of May 25, 1983.

The major objective of agricultural research has been the development of technology for producing more and better food on our better agricultural lands. In recent years, however, a new frontier in agricultural research and development has emerged: the development of technology for the production of energy related, renewable resources, in our extensive semiarid regions of the Southwest.

Non-traditional plants such as jojoba, guayule, mesquite, latex plants, tepary bean, salt bush, fast growing tree species, and meadowfoam have been suggested as potential crops for the semiarid regions. It is implied that private industry would engage in the development of large scale commercial plantings of the above plants. Investment of private capital in such ventures could not be expected, however, until it can be shown that these new crops could be grown profitably. This is a role for state and federal governments. To accomplish this, pilot size (100-200 acre) plantings need to be established for each crop to generate well documented production data which could be used for the preparation of sound feasibility studies. Once this was done private industry could be encouraged to pursue those crops that would be found to have a promising future.

To take jojoba as an example, considerable information has been gathered on how to grow this plant commercially. Also, sources of superior germplasm have been identified. This germplasm could be transferred into a pilot plantation for evaluation and further improvement. At the same time large scale experiments and demonstrations could be established to develop information on optimum cultural and management practices that should be used for it, in terms of irrigation, fertilization, weed control, population density, disease and pest control, mechanical harvesting, companion crops, etc. Additional research could look into the utilization of these crops and their by-products, the expected demand for them, the price range at which they could be sold, and the degree to which they could contribute to our national economy. A similar approach could be used with each of the other potential crops mentioned. It should be pointed out that crops such as the above would not only develop economic activity and job opportunities in semiarid areas which are economically depressed, but also provide materials of considerable significance to our national defense and foreign trade.

Sincerely,

LEWIS G. WEATHERS,
Associate Dean, Research.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, the provisions of H.R. 2733, as passed by the House of Representatives, are important to the Nation's program for research to promote self-sufficiency in critical materials, and I am pleased that the bill has been cleared for consideration by the Senate.

H.R. 2733, as reported by the committee last June, contained controversial provisions concerning the wheat, feed grain, upland cotton, and rice programs. The issues relating to those programs have been resolved in the conference report on H.R. 4072, which passed the Senate on April 2. The President approved the legislation on Tuesday, April 10. That action clears the way for consideration, at this time, of the critical agricultural materials portion of this legislation, which is the same in the House-passed bill and the bill, as reported by the Agriculture Committee.

H.R. 2733 will amend the Native Latex Commercialization and Economic Development Act of 1978 to strengthen the existing program of research, development, and demonstration in the production of guayule rubber. In addition, other critical materials will be included in the program.

As world demand for rubber expands and the price of synthetic rubber continues to rise, there has been renewed interest in the use of guayule as a domestic source of natural rubber.

The United States is wholly dependent on foreign sources for natural rubber, including all strategic and military stockpile requirements. The successful commercialization of quayule in the United States will enable us to break this dependence on foreign production of rubber.

The 1978 act established a national policy for the development and demonstration of economically feasible means of culturing and manufacturing guayule for the extraction of natural rubber. In addition, the 1978 act authorized development of other hydrocarbon-containing plants to produce raw materials for industrial use.

H.R. 2733 will redesignate the 1978 act as the "Critical Agricultural Materials Act" and expand it to require research and development into the use of any native agricultural material having critical strategic or industrial importance.

Also, the Secretary of Agriculture would be required to construct a developmental rubber processing facility for the extraction and production of test quantities of guayule natural rubber and to establish an office of critical agricultural materials within the Department of Agriculture. The bill authorizes appropriations of funds to carry out the critical materials program through 1988.

I urge the Senate to approve the House-passed bill.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am authorized by the chairman of the commitee to ask that the amendment to the bill and the amendment to the title be withdrawn. Does it require unanimous consent, Mr. President, under those circumstances?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chairman of the committee has authority to approve that request.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am not sure that I agree with that interpretation of the Chair. For future reference, it may be that the matter should be addressed again. At the moment, I will not raise the issue.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee reported amendment and the amendment to the title, at the request of the chairman of the committee, be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 2733) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, that completes the action I had to raise for wrapup, as we call it. May I inquire of the minority leader if he has anything further?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not.

S. 2610. A bill to amend the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

LAND AND WATER CONSERVATION FUND ACT AMENDMENTS

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, at the request of the administration, I send to the desk for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965.

Mr. President, this draft legislation was submitted and recommended by the Department of the Interior, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill, and the executive communication which accompanied the proposal from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the materials was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2610

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 460 l-4), as amended, is further amended by striking out section 9 in its entirety and renumbering succeeding sections accordingly.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D.C., March 16, 1984.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: There is enclosed a draft bill, "To amend the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965."

We recommended that the draft bill be introduced, referred to the appropriate committee for consideration, and enacted.

The President's budget for fiscal year 1985 proposes the repeal of certain authority contained in the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 to enter into contracts for land acquisition in advance of appropriations for that purpose. This authority, section 9 of the Act as amended, has only been used twice—in 1969 and 1970. Further, the Congress now appropriates Federal land acquisition funds for recreation purposes on the basis of specific projects that are considered individually by the Appropriations Committees. Accordingly, we believe the advance contracting authority should be repealed. The draft bill would strike section 9 from the Act and renumber succeeding sections accordingly.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that this legislative proposal is in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

G. RAY ARNETT,
Assistant Secretary.●

DOCUMENTATION OF CERTAIN VESSELS UNDER THE LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, at the request of the administration, I send to the desk for appropriate reference a bill to entitle certain U.S. citizens and nationals domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands and citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands to document vessels under the laws of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. President, this draft legislation was submitted and recommended by the Department of the Interior, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill, and the executive communication which accompanied the proposal from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2611

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DECLARATION OF POLICY AND PURPOSE. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress and the purpose of this Act to further the economic development of Guam, American Samoa and the Northern Mariana Islands by promoting the development of an indigenous local fishing industry. Recognizing the economic needs of these islands and the impracticability of—

(1) requiring the use of United States-built hulls for fishing and the coastwise transportation of fisheries products in these locations;

(2) limiting by statute the documentation of vessels to citizens of the United States; and

(3) requiring United States citizenship for the operation of vessels in an area in which, due to the great distance from the United States, the cost of processing, transporting, and maintaining United States-built vessels is prohibitive, and in which many persons, although not citizens of the United States, owe permanent allegiance to the United States or will become citizens in the near future;

it is declared the intent of Congress to provide for limiting exceptions to the requirements of the use of United States-built hulls for fishing and coastwise transportation of fisheries products in those locations, and of United States citizenship for the documentation and operation of vessels.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS. For purposes of this Act, the term—

(1) "national of the United States" has the meaning given it in section 101(a)(22)(B) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(22)(B));

(2) "citizen of the Northern Marina Islands" means an individual citizen of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands who is exclusively domiciled in the Northern Mariana Islands within the meaning of section 1005(e) of the Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands in Political Union with the United States of America (90 Stat. 278);

(3) "domicile" means that place where a person maintains a residence with the intention of continuing such residence for an unlimited or indefinite period, and to which such person, when absent, even for an extended period, has the intention of returning; and

(4) "fishing" includes—

(A) all activities defined as fishing in section 3(10) of the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1802(10)); and

(B) all activities included in the definition of fisheries in section 102(2) of the Vessel Documentation Act of 1980 (94 Stat. 3453).

SEC. 3. VESSELS ELIGIBLE FOR DOCUMENTATION. Any vessel of at least five net tons that is not registered under the laws of a foreign country is eligible for documentation under this Act if it is owned by—

(1) an individual who is a citizen or national of the United States domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands, or a citizen of the Northern Mariana Islands;

(2) an association, trust, joint venture, or other entity capable of holding title to a vessel under the laws of the United States or of Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands, all the members of which are citizens or nationals of the United States domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands, or citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands;

(3) a partnership whose general partners are citizens or nationals of the United States domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands, or citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the controlling interest in the partnership is owned by citizens or nationals of the United States domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands, or citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands;

(4) a corporation created under the laws of the United States, Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands if—

(A) the controlling interest is owned by citizens or nationals of the United States domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands, or by citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands;

(B) its president or other chief executive officer and the chairman of its board of directors are citizens or nationals of the United States domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands, or are citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands and

(C) no more of its directors than a minority of the number necessary to constitute a quorum are other than citizens or nationals of the United States domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands, or citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands; or

(5) the government of Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands.

SEC. 4. FISHING AND COASTWISE TRADE BY FOREIGN-BUILT VESSELS. Foreign-built vessels documented under this Act are entitled to engage in—

(1) fishing within the territorial sea and fishery conservation zone adjacent to Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands in accordance with applicable United States laws; and

(2) coastwise trade of fisheries products in and among Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

SEC. 5. CITIZENSHIP FOR PURPOSES RELATED TO THE OPERATION OF DOCUMENTED VESSELS. Nationals of the United States domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands and citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands shall be considered citizens of the United States for all citizenship requirements related to the operation of vessels documented under this Act while the vessel is engaged in the activities described in section 4 of this Act.

SEC. 6. EFFECT OF TERMINATION OF TRUSTEESHIP. Upon the effective date of the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement over the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands with respect to the Northern Mariana Islands, section 2(2) of this Act and all references to the Northern Mariana Islands contained in this Act shall cease to be effective.

SEC. 7. EFFECT ON THE LAWS APPLICABLE TO THE NORTHERN MARIANA ISLANDS. Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to render applicable to the Northern Mariana Islands the coastwise laws of the United States or any prohibition in the laws of the United States against foreign vessels landing fish or unfinished fish products in the United States.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. This section declares it the purpose of the Act to further the economic development of Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands by allowing, in those jurisdictions, limited exceptions to the requirements that only United States-built vessels be used for the fishing and coastwise fisheries trade.

Section 2. This section contains definitions. The term "fishing" includes fishing activities as defined by both section 3(10) of the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1802(10)) (MFCMA) and by section 102(2) of the Vessel Documentation Act (46 U.S.C. 65)(VDA). The term has been defined to include both definitions of fishing in order to make the range of included fishing activities as broad as possible. For instance, sole use of the definition of "fishing" contained in the MFCMA would mean that the subject vessels could not be used for the tuna fishery, since tuna is a highly migratory species and not included within the scope of the MFCMA definition. Since the tuna fishery is one of the richest in the waters surrounding these jurisdictions, such an omission would undercut the intent of the legislation.

Section 3. This section is patterned after section 104 of the VDA (46 U.S.C. 65b) and describes the vessels eligible for documentation under this Act. It permits documentation of vessels over five net tons owned by United States citizens or nationals domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands, or citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands; by associations, trusts, or joint ventures comprised of these citizens or nationals; by partnerships and corporations under their control; and by their governments.

Section 4. This section provides that any foreign-built vessel documented under this Act is allowed to engage in fishing, as defined in section 2, within the territorial sea and fishery conservation zone adjacent to Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands. These vessels may also engage in the coastwise trade of fisheries products in and among these jurisdictions. The latter provision is intended to dispel confusion as to whether transportation in and among the jurisdictions is coastwise trade. It confers a clear entitlement to transport fisheries products regardless of whether that activity is characterized as coastwise trading. It should be emphasized that this entitlement is restricted in scope and does not contemplate the use of these vessels in unlimited coastwise trading.

Section 5. This section provides that United States nationals domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands and citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands are considered United States citizens for purposes of satisfying all citizenship requirements related to the operation of vessels documented under this Act.

Section 6. This section provides that reference to "citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands" will cease to be effective upon termination of the Trusteeship Agreement over the Trust Territory.

Section 7. This section draws from the language of the Covenant with the Northern Mariana Islands to state that nothing in this legislation overrules the provisions in the Covenant concerning the non-applicability of either the coastwise laws of the United States to the Northern Mariana Islands, or the prohibitions against foreign vessels landing fish in the United States.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D.C., March 22, 1984.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: There is enclosed a draft bill, "To entitle certain United States citizens and nationals domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands and citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands to document vessels under the laws of the United States, and for other purposes."

We recommend that the draft bill be introduced, referred to the appropriate committee for consideration, and enacted.

This proposal is intended to increase the economic vitality of Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands by removing a number of statutory impediments currently blocking development of an indigenous fishing industry in these jurisdictions. The statutory relief contemplated by this proposal would consist of a narrow exception to the vessel documentation, vessel manning and fisheries laws.

This proposal would entitle domiciliaries of Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands who are also citizens or nationals of the United States or citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands to register vessels under United States vessel documentation laws. The Vessel Documentation Act (94 Stat. 3453) (VDA) currently restricts vessel documentation to those vessels wholly owned by United States citizens. Since the availability of preferred mortgage financing hinges on a vessel being documented as a "vessel of the United States," inability to document vessels under United States law is a significant handicap to procuring and financing the larger vessels necessary to a viable fishing industry.

In addition, the definition of United States citizens found in the VDA excludes citizens of American Samoa. This proposal would create a legal entitlement to United States vessel documentation for this currently excluded group, at the same time as the privilege of documenting foreign-built vessels is conferred on all of the Pacific territorial groups.

This proposal would also create a limited exception to existing statutory restrictions on the activities in which a foreign-built United States registered vessel may engage. One of these restrictions, found in the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act (90 Stat. 331) (MFCMA), allows only United States-built vessels to be documented as vessels of the United States eligible to be employed in commercial fishing activities in the fishery conservation zone without a permit. The other restriction, found in the VDA, also requires, as a general rule, that a vessel be United States-built in order to obtain a fishery license entitling the vessel to fish within the fishery conservation zone created by the MFCMA. In these remote Western Pacific areas, United States-built vessels are prohibitively expensive to buy, transport and maintain. Consequently, the fisheries resources of these areas are either underutilized or principally benefit foreigners who fish these areas. This legislation would permit qualifying entities to document foreign-built vessels for use in fishing activities in the territorial sea or the fishery conservation zone adjacent to the territorial sea surrounding Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands. It would also allow foreign-built vessels documented under this proposal to engage in the coastwise trade of fisheries products in and among these jurisdictions only.

Finally, this proposal would provide that nationals of the United States domiciled in Guam, American Samoa, or the Northern Mariana Islands and citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands are to be considered United States citizens for the purpose of meeting the manning standards related to the operation of vessels documented under this proposed legislation. Statutes imposing citizenship requirements on the crews of United States-flag vessels have been an impediment to the development of a local fishing industry in that these statutes have precluded American Samoans and citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands from serving on documented vessels as masters, licensed officers, and pilots and have limited the numbers who may serve as crew members. Examples of these restrictions include the following:

(1) A vessel of the United States is required to be under the command of a citizen of the United States (94 Stat. 3456).

(2) All licensed officers and pilots of vessels of the United States must be citizens of the United States (46 U.S.C. 672a and 46 U.S.C. 690).

(3) Upon each departure of a vessel of the United States from a port of the United States, 75 percent of the crew, excluding licensed officers, must be citizens of the United States (46 U.S.C. 672a).

Enactment of this proposal is necessary to further the economic development of the jurisdictions concerned. The waters surrounding Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands are rich in marine resources and have the potential for serving as the basis for a profitable commercial fishing and canning industry. The passage of a large number of statutory requirements has, however, created a series of perceived legal barriers to the development of an economically significant commercial fishing industry. This proposal does not reflect an intent to overturn established cabotage and citizenship requirements. Rather, recognizing that the various statutes discussed above serve legitimate political and economic objectives, this proposal is limited in scope and creates specific exceptions only to the extent necessary to further an equally legitimate objective in a unique political and geographic context.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection to the submission of this proposed legislation from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

RICHARD T. MONTOYA,
Assistant Secretary.●

By Mr. GORTON (for himself, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. HEFLIN, and Mr. LAUTENBERG):

S. 2612. A bill to authorize appropriations for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for research and development, space flight, control and data communications, construction of facilities, and research and program management, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

NATIONAL AERONAUTICS AND SPACE ADMINISTRATION ACT, 1985

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I am introducing today, along with my colleagues, Senators PACKWOOD, HOLLINGS, HEFLIN, and LAUTENBERG, a bill to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1985 to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) for research and development, space flight, control and data communications, construction of facilities, research and program management, and for other purposes.

We have just witnessed a space shuttle mission in which our astronauts performed their second untethered space walk and the first shuttle-assisted repair in space of a malfunctioning satellite. The space shuttle has now proven itself in yet another dimension and has shown the world that the shuttle is indeed a truly remarkable spacecraft whose capabilities we have just begun to exploit.

This legislation proposes funding for other meaningful and exiting missions and activities, one of which is a new planetary start, the Mars geoscience/climatology orbiter, which, when launched in 1990, will begin yielding the most comprehensive Mars data since the earlier Mariner and Viking missions.

Another new start proposed in this legislation is the upper atmosphere research satellite, which will give an important boost to the atmospheric science community, especially in our universities.

Most exciting of the new starts in this legislation, however, is the proposal to develop within a decade a permanently manned civil space station. This initiative promises to advance our scientific and technological capabilities, to provide a focal point for the commercialization of space, and to serve as an operations base for more advanced missions.

The increases proposed in the space science and applications budget provide additional support for NASA's programs and missions of most importance to our universities, in addition to addressing the problem of aging laboratory instrumentation in our universities.

At a time when the communications satellite technology gap between the United States and our foreign competition is narrowing, this legislation supports a flight-test demonstration for advanced communications satellite technologies.

The budget for aeronautical research and technology reflects a healthy growth in funding for basic and applied research and supports the activities leading to a 1987 flight test of an innovative aircraft technology, the advanced turboprop.

This legislation also provides funding for structural spares for the space shuttle fleet and reserves the option for procurement of a fifth orbiter.

As our Nation moves into a new era of space activity, it is important that we articulate our long-term goals and policy options for our civil space program. Included in this legislation is a provision that establishes a National Commission on Space. This Commission will help formulate our role in space for the next 25 years and will help maintain our Nation's position of preeminence in space.

NASA's position as the world leader in aeronautics and space is no longer uncontested; foreign competition is seriously, and quite often, successfully challenging this position. However, NASA's commitment to our Nation's leadership in aeronautics and space will continue to be the decisive factor in meeting this challenge. This legislation asserts this commitment to meeting our Nation's goals in aeronautics and space and to maintaining the position of preeminence which NASA has held in the past.●

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am pleased to join in introducing the NASA authorization bill for fiscal year 1985 with my colleagues on the Senate Science, Technology and Space Subcommittee.

The bill provides for the continuation of several aeronautics and space programs, the initial design work on a proposed civil space station, and the creation of a National Commission on Space to help this Nation devise appropriate space policy and programs for the future. Finally, the bill reaffirms our commitment to NASA space applications programs to further space communications technology.

Pathbreaking work by NASA was responsible for the growth of a new industry in communications satellite manufacturing, and a new industry in satellite communications services. These are industries in which the United States has enjoyed a trade surplus and a technological edge. However, our dominance is being challenged by foreign nations that are eager to develop capabilities of their own.

The advanced communications technology satellite program, which is authorized at $50 million for fiscal year 1985, is intended to respond by leapfrogging existing technology in satellite communications. The bill contemplates a flight test program, with a launch in 1989. The ACTS program will test new high-risk technologies that will enhance spectrum efficiency and increase the economies of satellite communications for rural and remote areas.

Initial work on the project had been authorized in prior years. In 1983, bids were solicited. A team of contractors led by RCA in New Jersey, along with TRW in California, and Motorola in Arizona, was selected, and a contract was negotiated. However, the contract was not signed and work on the project has been at a standstill since the end of the year. The bill mandates the execution of the negotiated contracts and the commencement of work without delay.

In a race for technological superiority, continuing delay can be fatal. I have attempted, in the course of our committee review of the NASA authorization, to make the case for maintaining a fight test program and getting it back on track. I am pleased that this bill would accomplish that goal.

The bill also authorizes $150 million for a civil space station. This is an initial step in what may be the next major undertaking in space. A space station program could result in innovations in automation, robotics, and artificial intelligence, while providing the platform for scientific experiments and the development of manufacturing in space. However, during the course of subcommittee hearings, it also became apparent to me that a great deal of work needs to be done in defining the kind of civil space station we should develop. Should it be manned or unmanned? What should its economic or technological goals be? What should it cost?

I view this initial authorization as a means of finding answers to these questions. One point, however, is made certain in the bill. Any space station shall be civil in purpose, and shall not be used as a vehicle for militarizing space.

Another important element in the NASA Act is the creation of a National Commission on Space. This proposal is similar to that embodied in Senator HOLLINGS' bill, S. 955, which I was pleased to cosponsor. There is no question that NASA's work in the past has made a significant contribution to American technological leadership and industrial growth. The advice of an independent commission on space should assist the Congress and the administration in charting our path for the future.

Mr. President, I want to acknowledge the work of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Science, Technology, and Space, Senator GORTON, and the ranking minority member, Senator HEFLIN, for their hard work in developing a NASA authorization bill. This legislation will enable us to continue to reap the benefits from our Nation's aeronautics and space activities. I am pleased to join as a cosponsor.●

S. 2614. A bill to amend the Indian Financing Act of 1974; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

INDIAN FINANCING ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1984

● Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I am introducing a bill to amend the Indian Financing Act of 1974. It is necesssary to amend this piece of legislation because the current authority to make and/or guarantee loans out of a revolving fund provided in the act, will be used up at the end of this fiscal year. The need to continue this program is clear. The President's action in appointing a special Commission on Reservation Economies recognizes that for the most part that Indian reservations are severely depressed areas—areas where unemployment rates are often five and six times higher than that of Americans generally.

Some progress has been made in economic development and there is currently underway a growing interest on the part of many Indian tribes and individuals to promote economic development on reservations, an interest that exceeds the available financing. Because of the trust status of Indian lands and other resources, conventional financing is frequently unavailable. Economic development has the potential to provide jobs, to promote a level of economic self-sufficiency and provide funds for essential tribal governmental services.

The bill that I am introducing will aid in these economic development efforts. The Indian Finance Act is one of the few bright spots in the otherwise spotty record of the Federal Government on Indian reservations. Since its inception, a total of $63.4 million have been appropriated which has allowed loans of $163.2 million. In all, the fund has produced a net profit of $18.4 million.●

By Mrs. HAWKINS (for herself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. MATSUNAGA):

S. 2615. A bill to revise and extend programs conducted by the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism and the National Institute on Drug Abuse, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

ALCOHOL ABUSE, ALCOHOLISM, AND DRUG ABUSE AMENDMENTS OF 1984

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, as the first step in the reauthorization of the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA) and the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA), and in an attempt to find out more about the effects of drugs and alcohol on women, how these problems can be treated and how we can better educate the public about the dangers of drugs, I am today introducing reauthorization legislation for these two organizations.

Recent figures show an alarming trend among women. The percentage of female members of alcoholics anonymous has risen from 26 percent in 1968 to 31 percent in 1980. Of the 10 million alcoholics in the United States today, up to one-half may be women; 68 percent of all psychoactive drugs are prescribed to women; a figure which indicates women are more prone to cross addiction—mixing alcohol with pills.

Perhaps these figures should not come as a surprise. Women have made great strides over the last 15 to 20 years. Women have entered the work force and quickly risen to the high-pressure jobs formerly occupied only by men. But along with these women are those who were forced to enter the work world, displaced homemakers who because of divorce or death of a husband, are forced to find work while raising a family.

The recovering alcoholic is taught to watch out for four danger signals, they are strung together into the anagram halt. These four danger adjectives are hungry, angry, lonely and tired; all of these would apply to the typical displaced homemaker.

But even if and when a woman realizes she needs help, the help may not be there. Recent statistics show that of the 5,577 drug and alcohol treatment programs in the country, only 375 are women's centers. The treatment system, having grown up catering to male needs often ignores the special problems of women. Most treatment programs do not provide child care or adequate alternatives for women who are entering treatment. An expert's quote of 15 years ago still seems to hold true that—

Studies on alcoholism tend to either ignore women entirely or to simply assume that alcoholism is the same regardless of the sex of the sufferer.

The legislation I introduce today would ask that the Directors of NIDA and NIAAA carry out a program of research, investigations, experiments and studies with an eye toward cataloging the special problems that exist in preventing and treating alcoholism and drug addiction among women and then helping to solve those problems.

Another important aspect of this legislation is its requests in regard to education. I recently held a hearing which looked into the role of the media in drug abuse prevention and education.

During the hearing we better came to realize that we live in the media age and that while it was once enough for children to hear about the dangers of drugs and alcohol from parents and teachers, times have changed. Children now need constant reenforcement of correct behavior. Parents and teachers need help.

The media seem willing to help. The networks and their production partners have said that they will assist in creating, testing, and airing public service announcements designed to educate children about the dangers of drugs and alcohol.

This legislation, in recognition of the power of the media, requests that the Directors of NIAAA and WIDA enter into contracts with commercial producers and television networks to produce stimulating, informative cost-effective commercials. Television has been accused of molding our minds and selling us everything under the Sun. It is about time that we moved to harness this awesome power of persuasion for the best possible cause; to help us win the battle for our childrens' minds.

Finally, this legislation requests that NIAAA and NIDA be reauthorized at the following funding levels:

	Fiscal year—
	1985	1986	1987
NIAAA	$47,835,000	$49,748,000	$51,739,000
NIDA	63,513,000	66,053,500	68,695,000

For the money expended, these programs perform invaluable services. They provide leadership, policy and goals in our efforts to discover the causes and cures of alcohol abuse, alcoholism, and drug and substance abuse.

They are the leaders in the various fields of research in these areas and are working to inform the public about the dangers associated with drugs and alcohol. They also make sure that those involved in prevention and treatment of these troublesome problems are informed and effective in their work.

NIAAA and NIDA are out in front in the fight to save lives from the ravages of alcoholism and drug abuse. The noble efforts of these fine organizations deserve our full moral and financial support.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today, I am pleased to join my colleagues in introducing the Alcohol Abuse, Alcoholism and Drug Abuse Amendments of 1984, which would among other things, reauthorize the National Institute on Alcoholism and Alcohol Abuse and the National Institute on Drug Abuse. In particular, I would like to salute Senator HAWKINS, who chairs the Senate Subcommittee on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, and who is the Senate's legislative leader on substance abuse and drug prevention.

This bill is critically important legislation addressing a major public health problem in our Nation, substance abuse. The problem of alcohol and drug abuse takes it toll on an ever increasing number of Americans and their families. The estimated cost is above 100 annually.

ALCOHOLISM AND ALCOHOL ABUSE

The Fifth Special Report to the U.S. Congress on Alcohol and Health issued earlier this year, and other reports from the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism offer some perspectives on the problems created by drug and alcohol abuse. Consider the following:

First, alcohol plays a role in 10 percent of all deaths in the United States. It is the principal cause of deaths through accidents among those aged 15 to 24.

Second, alcohol abuse during pregnancy has been found to cause fetal alcohol syndrome (FAS) and other alcohol-related birth defects.

Third, the prevalence of adolescent drinking—75 percent of 10th to 12th graders—is high.

Fourth, approximately 15 percent of adolescent drinkers consume five or more drinks per session weekly and about 30 percent of the adolescent sample can be classified as alcohol misusers.

Fifth, more males than females indulge in heavy drinking, and heavy drinking peaks at younger ages in men—ages 21-34—than in women—ages 35-49—but the percentages of women who drink is on the rise and alcoholism appears to progress more rapidly in women than in men.

Sixth, employed women appear to have a higher rate of alcoholism and employed married women have significantly higher rates of both problem drinking and heavier drinking than either single working women or housewives.

Seventh, in adults, alcohol abuse is the leading cause of liver cirrhosis—the eighth leading cause in the United States—and the leading contributing factor for chronic pancreatitis as well as other illnesses.

Eighth, the heaviest drinking one-third of the population accounts for over 95 percent of total consumption, and the heaviest drinking 5 percent of the population account for roughly 50 percent of the total alcohol consumed.

Ninth, one in three Americans surveyed last year felt that alcohol caused problems in his or her family.

Secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Margaret Heckler, is a leading advocate of increased research into the causes and cures of alcohol and drug abuse. In her introductory remarks in the Fifth Special Report, she states:

Fortunately, this long-neglected problem has now become of increasing concern to many Americans. As a result of citizen action, drunk driving, once largely ignored, is now being taken seriously. More and mores States are enacting tougher laws to discourage driving after drinking. Treating alcoholics once was of interest to a few dedicated men and women—themselves often recovering alcoholics. Treatment now involves many thousands in the helping professions as well. In industry, many, perhaps most, companies are coming to recognize that losing a valued employee to alcholism is costly—and that making provision for treatment just makes good business sense. Many health insurance plans are providing benefits to treat alcoholism itself as they discovered it costs much less in the long run than treating its chronic health consequences.

The report also notes that there have been other benefits of more honestly recognizing that problems from alcohol abuse can occur at all levels of drinking and of the society. The prevalent myth that drinking is sophisticated, a necessary part of a successful life, is slowly being eroded. It now requires less social courage to refuse a drink or to request a nonalcoholic substitute. The belief that drinking is essential to masculinity has been very much a part of American folklore. It is being supplanted by an increasing recognition of the health hazards of alcohol abuse and a new commitment to affirmation of good health practices. A public health revolution is underway with official recognition that the individual can do more for his or her own health than any doctor, hospital drug, or other medical innovation. The past decade has clearly shown that habits as basic to personal health as smoking, diet, and exercise can be changed—and in a remarkably short time. Our success in changing behaviors that were once thought immutable provides good reason for optimism about alcohol and drug abuse. As has become true of smoking, not using drugs, not drinking, or drinking more moderately may become the in thing.

DRUG ABUSE

Now, let us turn to a more detailed look at drug abuse. The National Institute on Drug Abuse has concluded:

Eighth, from the late 1950's to the late 1970's, there was a tenfold to twentyfold increase in levels of drug use among American teenagers and young adults.

Second, drug use levels remain unacceptably high. For instance, more high school seniors reported in 1983 that most or all of their friends used marihuana than that none of their friends use the drug. Also, nearly as many high school seniors are current users of marihuana as are current smokers of cigarettes.

Third, although overall levels of drug use have peaked, or are declining, patterns of heavier use, more dangerous use, and use of more potent materials are present. This causes an inevitable increase in the level of adverse consequences and medical complications.

Fourth, recent changes in administration of the drug-abuse service system has allowed States greater flexibility to target resources to meet their unique needs.

Fifth, research continues to provide insight into such vital areas as the biological factors of drug abuse, the efficacy of drug-abuse treatment services, and ways to increase the effectiveness of prevention efforts.

THE ALCOHOL ABUSE, ALCOHOLISM AND DRUG ABUSE AMENDMENTS OF 1984

The Department of Health and Human Services cites one of the satisfying developments in recent years has been research innovation. Federal support for substance research, once almost nonexistent, has had significant impact. By its very nature, basic research is a long range enterprise, and its practical implications are not immediately apparent.

The bill we are introducing today would:

Reauthorize at President Reagan's requested funding level, the research programs of the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcholism at $47,835,000 for fiscal year 1985, $49,748,000 for fiscal year 1986; and $51,739,000 for fiscal year 1987.

Reauthorize at President Reagan's requested funding level, the research programs of the National Institute on Drug Abuse at $63,513,000 for fiscal 1985, $66,053,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $68,695,000 for fiscal year 1987.

Continue the demonstration programs for NIAAA and NIDA with separate authorizations for each Institute at $10 million for each of the fiscal years 1985 to 1987.

Include an additional $1 million for each Institute for each of the next 3 fiscal years to conduct research into the impact of alcoholism, alcohol abuse, alcohol-related problems, and drug abuse among women.

Require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to prepare and transmit to the Congress a report which sets forth a comprehensive national plan to combat alcohol abuse and alcoholism. The report is intended to provide basic information of such a plan and is not intended to be exhaustive or burdensome.

Provide explicit authority for NIAAA and NIDA to develop public service announcements on research findings to help inform and educate the American public on the problems of alcohol and drug abuse.

I have long been an advocate of Federal, State, and private efforts to reduce the tragedies of alcohol and substance abuse. This bipartisan effort is one important step in pursuit of our national goals.

I urge my colleagues in the Senate to support this cost-saving measure, and, help promote the public health of this Nation.

By Mr. DENTON (for himself, Mr. HATCH, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. EAST, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. EAGLETON):

S. 2616. A bill to extend the adolescent family life demonstration program; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

ADOLESCENT FAMILY LIFE DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

● Mr. DENTON. Mr. President. It is my pleasure to introduce, with Senators HATCH, GRASSLEY, EAST, KENNEDY, and EAGLETON, a bill to reauthorize the Adolescent Family Life Demonstration Projects Act of 1981, title XX of the Public Health Service Act. My bill would reauthorize the law with no changes in the current statute at the current authorization of $30 million for 1985, 1986, and 1987. The $30 million authorization level would continue the operations of the multiyear demonstration projects and research grants already funded under the act, and would establish several new demonstration projects.

The passage of the Adolescent Family Life Act by the Congress in 1981 was a very important accomplishment. I, and many of my colleagues, are constantly reminded of the alarming rise in the number of adolescent pregnancies and abortions, in spite of major Federal expenditures for policies to deal with the problem. According to statistics recently released by the National Center for Health Statistics, 527,000 babies were born to adolescents 15 to 19 years of age in 1981, and over 9,600 babies were born to teens under 15 years of age. In 1980, 460,000 abortions were performed on pregnant, unmarried teenagers. The statistics show that pregnancy causes health and social problems for the mother and baby. Pregnant teenagers generally begin prenatal care later than the national average for pregnant women and, consequently, have higher rates of infant mortality and a higher incidence of low birth weight babies. Furthermore, adolescent mothers exhibit a lower level of educational and vocational attainment than the national average for adolescents. The continuing tragedy of unintended teenage pregnancy led me to believe strongly that new and different approaches had to be found for alleviating the problem. We found a different way.

As a result of a bipartisan effort in which my bill was reported unanimously by the Labor and Human Resources Committee, the Adolescent Family Life Act was enacted into law as part of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981. It was readily embraced by the Reagan administration as an essential demonstration of a desirable approach to addressing our Nation's adolescent pregnancy problem.

The Adolescent Family Life Act has a threefold purpose. First, prevention demonstration programs around the country are helping teenagers and their parents to work together, with the assistance of outside advisers and counselors, to exchange views and to examine the values of family life and sexuality. Second, care demonstration programs are providing comprehensive services to help pregnant adolescents and their families throughout the pregnancy, delivery, and care of the babies. Third, Federal funds are being used for practical research into the causes, consequences, and means of discouraging premarital sexual relations and of reducing adolescent pregnancy, and for evaluation of the best kinds of programs for adolescent parents.

I am a supporter of family life and sex education. My experience in that area for 10 years, including the last 3 years as a Member of the Senate, has shown me that parents are not necessarily the only and best source of information about sexuality. I have found, however, that the best sex education includes the parents and relies upon the cooperation of teachers, social workers, the medical community, representatives of community and religious organizations with parents to develop the curriculum. The Adolescent Family Life Act provides an opportunity for demonstration projects throughout the country to involve parents along with their children in learning and communicating about sexuality and the problems of adolescent pregnancy.

One purpose of the law is to support the development of prevention demonstration projects at the local level to encourage teenagers to refrain from premarital sexual relations and to involve their families so that they have a chance to help their children to develop and reinforce their decisions. The Adolescent Family Life Act provides the seed money for projects that, among other things, attempt to deal with the problem, in ways different from before, namely, by developing sex education programs that present more than biological facts, birth control pills, and abortion when birth control fails.

Another purpose of the law is to provide funds for the development of model care programs which provide supportive services to pregnant adolescents. These young pregnant women are linked up with health, educational, and counseling services in their communities. The care programs also direct their services toward the young men involved. These programs rely heavily on the cooperation of other community and religious organizations, as well as their families.

Thus, the Adolescent Family Life Act places a significant emphasis on the involvement of parents with their children in the demonstration projects. The reason for the requirements for parental consent and family involvement in programs conducted under the act is to provide program administrators, counselors, and researchers with the opportunity to evaluate the principle that family involvement in sex education and adolescent pregnancy programs should be the rule rather than the exception.

Although I am firmly convinced that Government-funded programs should and must acknowledge the family as the first line of defense in dealing with the problems of adolescent pregnancy, I am continually exploring the best possible approaches to insure that parents are granted the privilege of exercising their inalienable right and obligation to be properly involved in federally supported sex education and adolescent pregnancy programs that serve their children. The demonstration projects that have been initiated under the Adolescent Family Life Act offer examples that we should observe and from which we can learn.

One of the other major thrusts of the Adolescent Family Life Act is to present adoption as a positive alternative for adolescent parents to consider. The prevention and care projects funded under the act are required to provide information about the adoption option and to establish formal linkages with agencies that are licensed to provide adoption placement services as well as maternity residential services. Adolescent family life projects are currently testing new approaches to see how adoption can be better presented to and understood by adolescents and their families. Research is also being conducted to ascertain the current attitudes about adoption as well as to determine the requirements for successful adoption planning by young parents. Today we will hear about the results of one research project on adoption that is funded by the Adolescent Family Life Act.

Through the adoption emphasis, the Adolescent Family Life Act is providing demonstration projects opportunities to develop better techniques for counseling. Teenage parenthood is not the only, nor necessarily always the best alternative to teenage abortion. By providing funds for projects developing adoption counseling services, we are giving renewed support to another option that can provide positive outcomes for both the adolescent parents and the baby. Adoption also provides an opportunity for many waiting couples to become loving adoptive parents.

The Adolescent Family Life Act is one Federal Government program that acknowledges the need for supportive services to pregnant adolescents as an alternative to abortion. To that end, the act specifically restricts the activities of the demonstration projects by prohibiting abortion counseling, referral to abortion clinics, or payment for abortions. If both the adolescent and her parents request information about abortion, however, a referral for abortion counseling can be provided.

Through the demonstration approach, the Adolescent Family Life Act is assisting in the development of workable and effective programs for adolescents and their families who might otherwise turn to an abortion when faced with an unintended pregnancy. That aspect is a very important factor for many who support the adolescent family life program, both here in the Congress and in the local communities where the demonstration projects are located. The act provides an alternative approach to demonstrate to adolescents and their parents that options other than abortion do exist in their communities. I am firmly convinced that the demonstration effort is worthwhile and that it is a necessary addition to the current Federal repertory of family planning services and programs to pregnant adolescents.

The Adolescent Family Life Act is not a large Federal program. It is purposefully a small demonstration approach. There are currently 59 demonstration projects, 18 research projects, and a technical assistance project operating in 39 States, Guam, and the District of Columbia, utilizing $15 million in adolescent family life funds.

Each of the demonstration projects is required to develop an evaluation process so that its program can be tested and those programs shown to be effective can be replicated in other communities. The projects can receive Federal funds only for a maximum of 5 years. The majority of the projects are in the first or second year of their program. When the 1984 grant awards are made, by September 30, 1984, there will be several new projects initiated.

Obviously, we do not have the final results or accomplishments of the programs. The evaluation process is just getting started. In order to get a clear picture of the law's successes to date, the Subcommittee on Family and Human Services held 2 days of hearings on April 24 and April 26.

The hearings provided interested grantees and organizations with the opportunity to discuss their perceptions of the need for adolescent sexuality and pregnancy programs in their communities. The record provides strong evidence that the Adolescent Family Life Act, which expires on September 30, 1984, should be reauthorized.

During the subcommittee's hearings, administration officials and grantee representatives from across the country discussed their involvement with the demonstration and research projects. Dr. Edward N. Brandt, Jr., the Assistant Secretary for Health of the Department of Health and Human Services, made it clear that the Department is committed to the principles of the Adolescent Family Life Act's alternative approach to the problems of teenage sexuality and pregnancy. Mrs. Marjory Mecklenburg, the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Population Affairs and Director of the Office of Adolescent Pregnancy Programs, enthusiastically described her work with grantees to establish projects that can provide services to teenagers in accordance with the act's requirements and restrictions. I appreciate the support of the President and the Department in the effort to find ways of providing sex education and services to pregnant teenagers through a family-centered approach.

The grantee representatives who testified before the subcommittee emphasized their willingness fully to develop their projects so that the alternative methods of providing services to adolescents can be tested and evaluated during an adequate period.

After hearing the testimony of two young program participants, both of whom received care services throughout pregnancy and delivery, I am convinced that the Adolescent Family Life Act is providing services that can help to change the normally devastating condition of teenage pregnancy into a positive and healthy outcome for both the teenage mother and the baby.

The witnesses representing the prevention projects asserted that many teenagers want to learn how to say no to premarital sexual relations. Preliminary results show that the program participants are exhibiting a less promiscuous attitude toward premarital sexual relations and a more mature understanding of the joys and responsibilities of family life.

Two recipients of research grants discussed the need for improved data on the causes, consequences, and most effective means of reducing the incidence of teenage sexual relations, pregnancy, and parenthood. One researcher reviewed his findings on the attitudes of pregnancy counselors about the adoption option. Another researcher discussed the use of services in the community by pregnant adolescents and adolescent parents and the need to improve the access to comprehensive services for pregnant adolescents.

I am gratified to know that the people most involved in the development and operation of adolescent family life projects are encouraged by the results, even though the projects are relatively new and have just begun to set up their evaluation systems.

In addition, the subcommittee received testimony from a broad and diverse group of national and community organizations active in fields related to the goals of the adolescent Family Life Act which are interested in the intent of the Act and in its practical application. Many of the organizations endorsed the bill when it was first proposed in 1981, and all of them urged the reauthorization of the Adolescent Family Life Act for 3 more years.

The need for the continuation of the demonstration projects established by the Adolescent Family Life Act has been clearly established. I urge my colleagues to support the reauthorization bill in order to allow this alternative approach to the reduction of adolescent pregnancy to be tested fully.

I look forward to a strong, bipartisan effort of my colleagues to report the bill as quickly as possible from the Labor and Human Resources Committee.●

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. JEPSEN, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. BOREN, Mr. COHEN, and Mr. HEINZ):

S. 2617. A bill to amend the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 and the National School Lunch Act to reauthorize the special supplemental food program and other child nutrition programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry.

CHILD NUTRITION REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1984

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today I and my colleagues, Senators JEPSEN, BOSCHWITZ, HAWKINS, DURENBERGER, BOREN, COHEN, and HEINZ are introducing legislation to reauthorize the child nutrition programs that expire at the end of this fiscal year. These include the special supplemental food program for women, infants, and children—usually referred to as WIC—the commodity supplemental food program, the summer food service program, nutrition education, and training (NET), State administrative expenses, and the authority to purchase commodities for the school lunch program. Under this legislation, all programs would be reauthorized for 4 years—through fiscal year 1988. The school lunch, school breakfast, and child care food programs are entitlements, but we traditionally evaluate them along with the others, as we go through the hearing and markup process.

CHANGES IN WIC PROGRAM

Most of this legislation consists of changes to improve the WIC program. This is the first opportunity we have had in 6 years to address this program in any comprehensive fashion, and it is my hope that these proposed changes will further strengthen what is already a very effective Federal nutrition program. The authorized funding levels for the 4 year reauthorization are based on CBO estimates and baselines, and they are sufficient to accommodate the current level of services—3 million women, infants, and children.

OTHER PROGRAMS

The other reauthorization provisions are fairly straightforward and merely extend expiring programs. However, this legislation would raise the authorization level for the nutrition education and training program for $5 million to $10 million, because I believe that nutrition education is the foundation upon which all of our food assistance efforts lie. This net provision would permit the additional $5 million to be used for efforts to provide nutrition education to food stamp recipients. This would seem to be a good investment for our Federal food assistance efforts.

The only other significant provision relates to the school lunch program. This legislation would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a feasibility study for a universal school lunch program, evaluating potential options for a self-financing structure. As a Member of Congress who has witnessed the growth of this program over several decades, I believe that we should continue to look for new directions that may be appropriate for future program development.

EFFECT OF SPENDING REDUCTIONS

Mr. President, during the budget process of 1981 the Congress made some serious attempts to take a look at social programs and slow their growth in a bipartisan effort. At this time about $1.3 billion in spending reductions were achieved in various child nutrition programs.

As one who played a lead role in designing budget-cutting proposals for child nutrition programs to make certain that we could achieve savings without imposing harm on low-income Americans. I believe that what was accomplished was more effectively targeted available program benefits to the most needy children. Some program directors will actually admit that the changes we made really strengthened the administration of their programs and made them better, more accountable, and more responsive to the real nutritional needs of children.

At this time I remain unconvinced that we should retreat from our previous efforts to impose spending restraints on Federal social programs, including child nutrition. It might be appropriate to mention that this budget-cutting trend began in 1980 under the last administration when savings in the $500 million range were enacted. Unless any real harm can be demonstrated to have been caused by congressional action as a result of our efforts. I believe we should not begin to undo what we have so carefully achieved in past years. Above all, we should make certain that our priorities are well-directed.

CHILDREN'S ACCESS TO GOOD NUTRITION

Today, there is a wide array of child nutrition programs serving children of all ages—infants to high school age kids. All American children have access to good nutrition through these various programs, but a recurrent issue continues to be who should pay for these benefits. In the school lunch, breakfast and child care food programs, the Federal Government continues to subsidize meals for children from families of every income level, but it only provides free meals to those who meet the low-income eligibility criteria of 130 percent of poverty. The children of near-poor families must contribute part of the cost of their meals in the school lunch and breakfast programs, and those who can afford to pay more participate in the so-called paid category.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my statement from the Nutrition Subcommittee hearing on the child nutrition programs from March 12, 1984 appear in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR BOB DOLE

REAUTHORIZATION PROCESS

Every four years, we have an opportunity to evaluate the child nutrition programs in their entirety, even though we are technically engaged in the process of reauthorizing only the nonentitlement programs, which are WIC, the summer food service program, nutrition education and training, State administrative expenses, and the authority to purchase commodities.

We made a lot of program changes in the school lunch, school breakfast, child care and the summer food programs back during the reconciliation process of 1981, just a year after the programs were reauthorized the last time. After a period of program stability, we can now look back to see how these changes have affected the programs in question. I am aware of two bills currently pending before the Congress and this committee—S. 1913, the Huddleston-Cochran bill, and its counterpart, H.R. 4091. Although I disagree with the way in which benefits are targetted under both of these bills, I think they should receive a fair hearing. We are now at a time in our Nation's history when we must be certain that nutrition program funds are being targetted effectively to low-income children. As the CBO evaluations reveal, both of these legislative initiatives would direct over 70 percent of their benefits to children from families above 130 percent of poverty, which defines low-income eligibility for both the food stamp program and the school lunch and breakfast programs.

SUPPORT OF CHILD NUTRITION

As everyone here knows, the Senator from Kansas has long been a strong supporter of child nutrition programs. Nothing has changed my commitment to these programs or my belief that the Federal Government should maintain its leadership role in the nutrition program area. However, the Federal Government can't be expected to do everything.

In recent years, I have been concerned about a tendency for people to consider these programs in terms of Federal spending instead of the children served. I would like to address this concern.

In 1970, the Federal Government was spending just over $700 million on all child nutrition programs. By 1980, this amount had grown to approximately $4.4 billion, and would have exceeded $5 billion by fiscal year 1982 had it not been for reconciliation. Based strictly on budgetary considerations, some might say, and have said, that this over 500% increase in Federal child nutrition funding is not justified. Others, whose considerations are limited to program operations and activities, have said that the $1.3 billion that Congress cut from the 1982 child nutrition program is equally unjustifiable. I would like to address both of these contentions, because I think they are equally false. They are false because they overlook the important issue of how changed funding has affected the children served.

LOW-INCOME TARGETTING

For those who limit concerns to budget numbers, I would point out that in 1970 very little of child nutrition expenditures (about 20%) were directed toward low-income children. Only 4.6 million out of the 22.4 million children in the school lunch program were receiving free or reduced price meals.

Additionally, the school breakfast program, which was better targetted to low income children, had just begun, and served only 450,000 children. Finally, the WIC program, which many regard as the best need-based of all child nutrition programs, had not yet been created. In contrast, by 1980, Federal expenditures for children in low-income families represented 60% of all federal child nutrition program expenditures. The school lunch program served a total of 26.6 million children in 1980, or 4.2 million more children than in 1970. However, all of this growth and more was in the free and reduced price programs, which increased by 7.3 million children (to 11.9 million), while participation in the regular, non-income tested portion of the program dropped from 17.8 million to 14.7 million. For the breakfast program, participation grew from a total of 450,000 in 1970 to 3.6 million in 1980. And 85% of these children were from low-income families.

Finally, the WIC program, which had not existed in 1970, was serving an average of nearly 2 million women, infants and children in 1980, and funding for this program alone represented 16% of all child nutrition program expenditures.

I recite these statistics for those whose primary interest is in dollar figures because I think it is important for them to understand the human consequences of child nutrition expenditure growth. The dollar growth in funding for these programs, when viewed from the context of participation is not as haphazard as a graph only showing dollars might suggest. Yes, funding grew considerably between 1970 and 1980, but with it came a commitment to the needs of low-income children, a commitment which costs more than just providing a minimal subsidy and letting childen pay the difference, or go hungry. In the late sixties and early seventies, the Federal Government embarked on a non-partisan effort to improve the nutrition of our children, particularly our needy children. As a consequence of this commitment we have provided the best nutrition programs for children that the world has ever seen. Not perfect perhaps, but unequivocally the best. Even more importantly, our special concern for needy children is clearly reflected in the data showing the dramatic increase in the number of such children participating in these programs, and the proportion of expenditures committed to their needs. We chose to give more, not because more is necessarily better, but because more is necessary where there is greater need.

EFFECT OF RECONCILIATION

Now let me turn to what happended to child nutrition programs after 1980 when Congress enacted reconciliation legislation that reduced program funding. Compared to 1980, when Federal expenditures for child nutrition were $4.4 billion, 60% of which went to low-income children, 1983 expenditures were $4.7 billion. And even more importantly, nearly $3.7 billion of this amount, or 78% of these funds were expended for low-income children.

In 1980, it is true that there were 26.6 million children participating in the school lunch program, compared to 23.1 million in 1983. However, all of this 3.5 million difference is in the paid category where participation is down from 14.7 million to 11.2 million. The same total number of children participated in the free and reduced price segment of the program in 1980 as in 1983—that is 11.9 million. However, the distribution is slightly different with reduced price participation going down from 1.9 million to 1.6 million, while free participation went up from 10 million to 10.3 million.

WIC PROGRAM

For the WIC program, Federal expenditures grew to approximately $1.16 billion in 1983 and represented 25% of all child nutrition program funds. This is an increase of $390 million over the FY80 funding level for this program and compares to 16% of child nutrition program funding in 1980. More importantly, average WIC participation in FY1983 was approximately 2.6 million, compared to 1980 when average participation was just under 2 million.

FACTS BEHIND STATISTICS

I am pointing out these statistics for those who continue to allege that the child nutrition budget cuts of 1981 were too large, and harmed an inordinate number of low-income children—an allegation that I believe to be unjustified. It is unjustified because it looks only to dollar terms and not to the human reality—the children being served, and their need. The data indicates that low-income children continue to be served in significant numbers and that a growing proportion of expenditures are being distributed on the basis of need. It also appears that greater numbers of children with very low income levels are participating in the programs than in the past. This sounds to me like appropriate targeting, and I find it hard to see the danger in it.

In this difficult time, I believe that those of us involved in the delicate balancing act of allocating limited Federal resources should look carefully at the human factor instead of dollars. I believe that if we do, we will find that our current commitment to child nutrition programs is justified and that there is no need to either cut more child nutrition funds, or restore them.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry plans to begin the markup process on the reauthorization of the child nutrition programs tomorrow. There are many worthwhile proposals that will be considered by the committee.

As chairman of the Nutrition Subcommittee I have a great interest in what we do with the child nutrition programs. This legislation is being introduced in an attempt to provide a neutral, responsible approach to various programs during the reauthorization process. I thank my colleagues for their support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section summary along with the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TITLE IV—EFFECTIVE DATES

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 401. Except as provided in sections 111(c), 114(b), and 206(c) of this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall become effective on October 1, 1984.

SUMMARY OF TITLE I—PROVISIONS RELATING TO THE SPECIAL SUPPLEMENTAL FOOD PROGRAM FOR WOMEN, INFANTS, AND CHILDREN (WIC)

Section 101. Redefining administrative costs: Section 101 changes the term "administrative costs" to "costs for nutrition services and administration" in recognition of the fact that costs for nutrition assessments and nutrition education are included in this cost category. The new term provides a more accurate description of the costs involved.

Section 102. Initial month's benefits: This section requires that when WIC benefits are issued to a participant for only a part of a month (because the participant has applied after the beginning of the month), the monthly WIC food package must be reduced accordingly.

Section 103. Pregnant women: This section provides that a pregnant woman shall be counted as two individuals (in order to count both the unborn child and the mother) when it is determined whether her family meets the WIC income limits for its family size. This provision affects income determinations only and does not affect the quantitites of supplemental foods distributed to pregnant women.

Section 104. Participation report: The Secretary would be required to report to the Congress every other year on the income and nutritional risk characteristics of WIC participants. The Secretary would be allowed to use some of the $3 million currently reserved for evaluations and pilot projects in order to collect the data and provide the report.

Section 105. State plan: This section simplifies and streamlines the state plans by eliminating 9 of the 12 current statutory requirements for what must be included in the plan.

Section 106. Public comment: This section repeals the statutory requirement that states must hold a public hearing each year to secure public comment on the state plan and state WIC operations. Instead, states would simply be required to have some procedure, of their own choosing, to obtain public comment.

Section 107. Notification period: Currently, states are required to provide supplemental foods to eligible applicants within 20 days of application. This section lengthens the timeframe to 30 days. However, the requirement that persons at particularly high risk (e.g., pregnant women suffering from nutritional deficiences) be processed more quickly would be retained.

Section 108. Availability of program benefits: The requirement that state and local agencies publicize the availability of WIC and publicly announce WIC eligibility criteria at least once a year would be repealed. However, the requirement that eligibility information be provided to hospitals, health clinics, medical organizations, social service agencies, etc. would be retained—in order that these agencies refer high-risk persons to WIC.

Section 109. Coordination with child care food program: This section requires that when children certified for WIC receive meals through the Child Care Food Program, the WIC medical professional who prescribes the WIC food packages shall tailor the food package accordingly.

Section 110. Recovery of excess benefits: This section requires that when a WIC participant improperly receives benefits due to fraud or intentional misrepresentation, the state agency must seek repayment in cash from the participant, except in cases in which the cost of pursuing recovery would exceed the amount to be collected.

Section 111. Authorization of appropriations: Section 111 reauthorizes the WIC program for four years at the Congressional Budget Office current services level. These levels—$1.47 billion in FY 1985, $1,525 billion in FY 1986, $1.6 billion in FY 1987 and $1.67 billion in FY 1988—would allow enough funds to be appropriated to hold WIC caseloads at current levels for the next four years with neither growth nor reductions in participation.

Section 112. Improving state administrative systems: This allows the Secretary the flexibility to use a portion of the $3 million now reserved for evaluations and pilot projects for technical assistance contracts to improve state computer systems and other state administrative systems. Continued enhancement of program integrity requires upgraded computer systems, and this provision enables the Secretary to utilize a modest amount of funds in this area if he finds this to be useful.

Section 113. Paperwork reduction: This section directs USDA to keep to a minimum the paperwork that states are required to complete in order to satisfy USDA that at least ⅙ of WIC administrative funds are used for nutrition education. It is intended that USDA would reduce the current paperwork requirements in this area.

Section 114. Expenditure of funds: This section allows up to 2 percent of a state's WIC food grant for a fiscal year to be used for WIC expenses incurred in the state in the prior fiscal year. This provision, recommended by the National WIC Directors' Association, is designed to enable states to utilize their WIC grants more fully and to improve their program management in the final months of the fiscal year.

Section 115. Report on migrant participation: This deletes a statutory requirement for an annual USDA report on migrant participation in the WIC program.

TITLE II—OTHER CHILD NUTRITION PROGRAMS

Commodity supplemental food program: Section 201 reauthorizes the program for four years; permits local agencies administering this program to provide supplemental commodities to low-income elderly persons at the discretion of the Secretary, provided these efforts do not interfere with commodity assistance to low-income women, infants, and children; extends pilot projects in Detroit, New Orleans, etc.

Summer food service program for children: Section 202 reauthorizes the program for four years; maintains current law (during reconciliation in 1981, changes made eliminated just about all fraud and abuse that had been previously reported).

Commodity distribution program: Section 203 extends the authority to purchase commodities for the School Lunch Program for four years.

State administrative expenses: Section 205 extends the program for four years.

Nutrition education and training: Section 205 reauthorizes the NET program for four more years, raising the authorization ceiling from $5 million to $10 million, and allowing this additional $10 million to be spent to provide nutrition education to food stamp recipients.

Universal school lunch program study: Section 206 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a study concerning the feasibility of a universal school lunch program as well as various methods of operating a self-financing program through various revenue options; report is to be submitted January 1, 1987.

Title IV—Effective dates.●

By Mr. DANFORTH (for himself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. HEINZ, and Mr. BRADLEY):

S. 2618. A bill to amend the Trade Act of 1974 to promote expansion of international trade in telecommunications products, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE ACT OF 1984

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, on August 5, 1983, a decision was made that is likely to have the greatest impact on U.S. trade of any other in recent decades. The decision was not made by the President or by the Congress—in fact, its impact on American trade was hardly considered by those involved in this and other events leading up to the final outcome.

For this reason, I am pleased to be introducing legislation to address the trade impact of that decision and to open major foreign markets to U.S. exports.

The decision—the final step before the breakup of the Bell System—came about after years of thought, litigation and legislation focused on domestic considerations of competition and deregulation. Yet, this domestic policy decision will have an enormous impact on the U.S. position in world markets.

In fact, the restructuring of the U.S. telecommunications market is a trade disaster in the making:

In trade terms, AT&T divestiture is nothing less than the unilateral giveaway of the U.S. market to foreign suppliers. Moreover, since most foreign markets are effectively closed to U.S. telecommunications exports, divestiture also represents a giveaway of the only leverage that might ever be used by our trade negotiators to gain access to those markets.

Therefore, it is imperative that we capitalize on the restructuring of the U.S. market to promote negotiations that will achieve an open world trading system in telecommunications.

The Telecommunications Trade Act provides such a framework for negotiations. In a manner fully consistent with U.S. trade obligations under the GATT, it offers U.S. trade negotiators the mandate, authority, and leverage to gain access for U.S. exports of telecommunications equipment and services comparable to that provided by the restructuring of the U.S. telecommunications market.

BACKGROUND

Observed in a vacuum, the fragmentation of the American telecommunications system may be a good idea, where increased competition among domestic providers of equipment and services may ultimately benefit the system's users.

But in this interdependent world, we cannot afford to make decisions in a vacuum. We cannot afford to let trade be the stepchild of domestic policy decisions—particularly if we consider the tremendous impact trade has on the U.S. economy, our employment, and our competitiveness.

If we are to have a forward-looking trade policy, a job-creating trade policy, we must pay special attention to those sectors with the greatest promise for growth and employment—be it direct or indirect.

Taken in this context, the decision to restructure the U.S. telecommunications market is devastating. In trade terms, divestiture represents the unilateral dismantling of a major nontariff barrier to imports through elimination of AT&T's vertical integration relationship between the manufacturer of equipment and the provision of service. That a number of American equipment manufacturers will be able to take advantage of the breaking of this link is clearly a healthy event. That this will also lay bare the U.S. market to many billions of dollars in new sales by foreign manufacturers—without any corresponding improvement in market access for U.S. exports—would be grounds enough to fire any team of trade negotiators.

The Constitution provides for Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations. It is imperative that Congress act now to prevent this trade disaster before it is too late.

The international situation with respect to telecommunications trade is unique. The United States is virtually the only country in the world with a private telecommunications system. Practically all other industrialized countries have telecommunications entities that are controlled by—if not owned and operated by—their governments.

The world over PTT's—post, telegraph, and telephone entities—are protected, nurtured, and supported by their governments. Equipment procurement is confined to the extent possible to domestic manufacturers, who in turn use government financial support to develop new equipment and to promote their export drives. And export they must—because in this day of highly sophisticated, R&D-intensive telecommunications equipment, economies of scale dictate that few home markets are big enough to provide adequate returns on investment.

Throughout the world, one finds that virtually all major telecommunications markets are closed: The European Common Market may be an EC-wide market for many products—but not for telecommunications. In Europe, almost every country has its own system and each government inures the protection of its home market and producers.

In Japan, Nippon Telegraph & Telephone serves an enormous market. Although efforts have been made by the NTT leadership to increase purchases of foreign products, the agreement to open NTT's procurement to foreign suppliers has had marginal impact. Moreover, recent moves to privatize NTT have exposed governmental and industry efforts to protect key markets for telecommunications services and sales, leaving in doubt prospects for the future.

Meanwhile, major Japanese manufacturers continue to make inroads into the U.S. telecommunications market at an alarming pace—a pace that will increase exponentially with the restructuring of the U.S. market.

Therefore, in trade terms, the breakup of AT&T is more than just the unilateral elimination of a major barrier to imports. It also means that on January 1, 1984, we may have discarded the only trade concession that could ever be effective negotiating leverage for the United States to gain reciprocal market access for our telecommunications exports. It is hard to imagine any other U.S. concession providing as much incentive for foreign telecommunications manufacturers and their governments to really open up domestic markets.

Today the United States is still the world's most highly competitive producer of telecommunications equipment. The wholesale giveaway of the U.S. market, however, has already set the stage for a major, irreversible shift in high technology trade patterns.

The exponential growth in U.S. imports will not happen overnight, but the trends are there. Unless we are willing to risk waiting for the clamor for import quotas on telecommunications equipment that is sure to come, something must be done now—before the damage cannot be reversed.

Recent trends in telecommunications trade only begin to tell the story: Although the consent decree which set the terms for divestiture was only signed in 1982, the shift in purchasing patterns has already contributed to America's first negative balance of trade in telecommunications. This 1983 deficit is expected to almost double in 1984, attributable once again to flat exports and an increase of imports by over one-third.

One need look no further than the landmark FCC Carterfone decision of 1968—involving the interconnection of certain terminal equipment with the national network—to see the dramatic impact a domestic decision to deregulate can have on production and imports of telecommunications equipment.

Since the Carterfone decision, the United States has accelerated the move toward telecommunications deregulation. Some court and regulatory decisions have had a greater impact on trade than others. Yet, at no time has the United States sought from its trading partners reciprocal concessions for these unintended market liberalizing measures. Recent decisions—in particular, the final breakup of the Bell System—will produce a trade effect that can no longer be ignored.

The potential trade giveaway from AT&T divestiture is staggering: One Japanese telecommunications newsletter recently estimated that the breakup of AT&T would open a new $5 billion market in the United States—almost 50 percent more than all NTT purchases in a single year. Another study has predicted that by 1990, imports of customer-premises equipment alone will triple, with Japan and Canada capturing 42 percent and 23 percent shares, respectively.

It is hardly surprising, then, to find that Japanese, Canadian, and European companies alike have already launched massive sales offensives in this country.

The magnitude of the shift in telecommunications trade in the future should not be surprising in the light of deregulation.

Foreign telecommunications firms will be increasingly dependent on exports to meet the growing cost of their investments. The U.S. market will stand alone in size and openness.

U.S. manufacturers will have to rely on the domestic market for the bulk of their sales with little prospect of foreign barriers being lifted and major export opportunities.

At home, U.S. manufacturers will be faced with competition from foreign firms that can afford to move into this market for long periods without turning a profit—given protection in their home markets, patient capital and the potential return on their investment in the most lucrative market for telecommunications in the world.

Finally, in the foreseeable future, U.S. telecommunications manufacturers will consist of one major producer that is unused to full competition and many other American firms that could be highly successful competitors if given a few years to take advantage of divestiture without being swamped by imports.

The Bell operating companies have already begun to assert their independence and are in the market for the cheapest quality source of equipment they can find. It is no accident that the first major wave of telecommunications imports coincided with a dramatic drop in purchases by some of the BOC's from Western Electric. With the Bell logo in hand and access to AT&T patents, foreign suppliers willing to slash profits to expand market share offer attractive bargains.

Unfortunately, these same American companies will be the most severely hurt if—as I expect—the end of the decade finds us scrambling to close the U.S. market to imports in the face of lost sales and lost jobs.

And make no mistake, the trade shift is by no means inevitable: The world market for telecommunications shows signs of growth undreamed of a few years ago—expanding from $45 billion today to $60 billion by 1987 and $90 billion in 1990. The shift is not inevitable—if only American producers are able to garner a share of the world market commensurate with their competitiveness.

What is absolutely certain is this: The United States cannot afford to wait before we react to the trade implications of the restructuring of the U.S. telecommunications market. A few years from now it will be too late. Efforts to close the U.S. market then will hurt consumers and put at risk American exports.

We need to resolve this potential trade disaster before its full impact is felt—to use the opening of the U.S. market as leverage to gain access for U.S. telecommunications exports.

The legislation I am introducing today can accomplish this—in a manner fully consistent with U.S. obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). AT&T divestiture presents us with a unique set of circumstances, including low levels of current trade relative to the future and a major reduction in U.S. import barriers as yet uncompensated by our trading partners.

These unique circumstances offer us a unique opportunity—namely, the opportunity to create on open world trading system in telecommunications that will benefit world producers and consumers alike.

SUMMARY

Title I of the Telecommunications Trade Act establishes the framework for major multilateral negotiations in telecommunications trade.

Title II of the act sets out new tariff nomenclature for telelcommunications equipment to clarify and facilitate data collection on trade in this sector.

Under title I, based on concepts and provisions of the Trade Act of 1974, U.S. negotiating objectives are established for agreements on trade in telecommunications. These objectives stress the need for competitive opportunities abroad for U.S. exports of telecommunications products and services comparable to those in the U.S. market following AT&T divestiture. Above all, U.S. negotiators are urged to seek the reduction of foreign nontariff and tariff barriers to compensate for the trade liberalizing impact of the restructuring of the U.S. market for telecommunications.

The President would be granted negotiating authority for a 3-year period to meet these objectives. Ideally, the authority would be used to negotiate multilateral or plurilateral free trade agreements—perhaps a cross between the MTN tariff agreement on trade in civil aircraft and the Government Procurement Code. Should he be unable to negotiate a multilateral agreement, the President would have the authority to negotiate a series of bilateral agreements—such as the reciprocal landing rights arrangements that accompanied airline deregulation or the sectoral agreements currently in effect or being considered between the United States and Canada.

All such agreements in telecommunications trade would be subject to congressional approval under the accelerated legislative procedures set out in the Trade Act of 1974.

To provide negotiating leverage for the President, the legislation provides for the removal of U.S. tariff bindings on certain telecommunications equipment negotiated in previous GATT rounds, as well as any compensation authority the President might need for article XXVIII negotiations under the GATT. In the absence of legislation to implement telecommunications trade agreements, these U.S. duties would, after 3 years, revert to rates specified in column 2 of the tariff schedule—namely, those higher rates in place prior to GATT trading rounds.

It would be my hope and expectation that the U.S. tariff increases would never have to occur.

The object is not to shut out imports that would have entered in the absence of divestiture, but rather to counteract the import-liberalizing effect of divestiture in the absence of compensatory foreign concessions.

Should, however, all of our trading partners steadfastly refuse to negotiate telecommunications trade agreements, it is worth noting that even U.S. import duties on the order of 35 percent would still leave the U.S. market far more open than foreign markets where discriminatory government purchasing and other nontariff barriers effectively bar entry.

As regards any compensation needed to bring U.S. actions into conformity with GATT, relatively low predivestiture trade levels and the fact that foreign countries never expected or paid for AT&T divestiture in trade terms should make the cost minimal.

Finally, title I of the legislation cites a broad definition of telecommunications equipment for which duties would be raised—namely, those products where court and regulatory orders pertaining to divestiture would have had the effect of lowering barriers to importation.

As currently drafted, the legislation does not specify the actual product categories involved. The specific tariff line items will be added later—based on public hearings and the International Trade Commission study on the trade implications of AT&T divestiture that was requested by the Finance Committee last November.

Title II of the legislation, the Telecommunications Product Classification Act, establishes new tariff nomenclature for telecommunications equipment. Without changing current tariff rates, it is designed to facilitate data collection on trade in such equipment—correcting a major flaw in the U.S. tariff schedules—(TSUS)—attributable to hopelessly out-of-date definitions.

The proposed nomenclature—drafted by the ITC as part of its study—provides for a breakout of certain types of telecommunications equipment currently buried in other high technology categories.

The need for new terminology is clear: Current tariff nomenclature for telecommunications equipment reflects pre-1962 technology. In fact, the definitions of "telegraph" and "telephone" in TSUS can be traced back to at least 1897. Technologies such as fiber optics do not even appear in the U.S. tariff schedule.

The fact that our tariff nomenclature has not kept up with technological improvements in communications means that it is now virtually impossible to find adequate statistics to measure trade in telecommunications. For example, in 1983 over $1 billion in telephone equipment entered the United States under three general tariff annotations: "switching equipment," "telephone instruments," and "other."

Clearly, better trade statistics are needed to measure U.S. imports and exports of telecommunications equipment. Title II of this act provides a means of accomplishing this.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, U.S. trade policy to date has invariably been reactive or, in the case of AT&T divestiture, a by-product of purely domestic decisionmaking. Therefore, it is not surprising that we constantly find ourselves trying to resolve last year's trade problems.

The United States must have a forward-looking trade policy. Problems must be anticipated and resolved before they reach unmanageable proportions.

In the case of telecommunications, we have a unique opportunity to resolve a trade problem before it does major harm to our economy. If we do not resolve the problem now, it will have been a problem of our own making.

The negotiation of reciprocal access market arrangements is the cornerstone of the GATT. In the case of telecommunications trade, unfettered access to our market is the only concession likely to be attractive enough to open foreign markets for U.S. exporters. To give away this access without compensation would be an opportunity lost and foolish to the extreme.

International trade is too important to the U.S. economy to allow it to remain a stepchild of our domestic policy decisions. The restructuring of the U.S. telecommunications market has major trade implications. We ignore them at our peril.

ATTACHMENTS

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a detailed outline of the Telecommunications Trade Act and the text of the legislation be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2618

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—TRADE IN TELECOMMUNICATIONS

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Telecommunications Trade Act of 1984".

SEC. 102. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the restructuring of the United States market for telecommunications will result in a dramatic increase in imports of telecommunications equipment;

(2) foreign telecommunications markets are characterized by extensive Government intervention (including restrictive import practices and discriminatory procurement practices) which adversely affect United States exports of telecommunications equipment and services;

(3) there will be rapid growth in the world market for telecommunications in the coming decades;

(4) the United States can improve prospects for United States telecommunications exports, and export-related employment, technological leadership, and consumer service by taking steps to achieve an open world market for trade in telecommunications products, services, and investment; and

(5) without reciprocal foreign market access, the United States should avoid granting improved access for foreign telecommunications products to the United States market.

SEC. 103. AMENDMENTS TO THE TRADE ACT OF 1974.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title I of the Trade Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 8—TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE AGREEMENTS AUTHORITIES

"SEC. 181. TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.

"(a) GENERAL NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.—The United States negotiating objectives under section 182 shall be—

"(1) to obtain multilateral or bilateral agreements that would provide competitive opportunities for United States exports of telecommunications products (including services using such products) in foreign countries which are substantially equivalent to the competitive opportunities provided by the United States after the restructuring of the United States market for telecommunications, and

"(2) to avoid uncompensated reductions in barriers to foreign access to the United States market.

"(b) FACTORS TO BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—In pursuing United States negotiating objectives under subsection (a), the President shall take into account the following factors:

"(1) barriers to United States exports of telecommunications products, including, but not limited to foreign government—

"(A) procurement practices;

"(B) restrictions on services and investment related to trade in telecommunication products;

"(C) nontariff barriers not described in paragraph (1) or (2); and

"(a) GENERAL NEGOTIATING AUTHORITY.—Whenever the President determines—

"(1) that—

"(A) any duties, import restrictions, or barriers to (or other distortions of) international trade of any foreign country or the United States—

"(i) unduly burden and restrict the foreign trade of the United States in telecommunications products, or

"(ii) adversely affect the United States economy, or

"(B) the imposition of such duties, restrictions, or barriers (or other distortions) is likely to result in such a burden, restriction, or effect, and

"(2) that attainment of the objectives of this chapter will be promoted by the taking of action under this subsection, the President, during the 3-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Telecommunications Trade Act of 1984, may enter into multilateral or bilateral trade agreements with foreign countries or instrumentalities which provide for the harmonization, reduction, or elimination of such duties, restrictions, or barriers (or other distortions), or the prohibition of or limitations on the imposition of such duties, restrictions, or barriers (or other distortions).

"(b) AGREEMENT TREATMENT IN SAME MANNER AS AGREEMENT UNDER SECTION 102.—For purposes of subsections (c) through (g) of section 102 and chapter 5 of this Act, any trade agreement entered into under subsection (a) of this section shall be considered to be a trade agreement entered into under section 102.

"SEC. 183. SUSPENSION OF TARIFF BINDINGS.

"(a) UNBINDING OF DUTIES ON TELECOMMUNICATIONS PRODUCTS.—The President shall, after not more than 90 days of consultations with the appropriate foreign countries or instrumentalities—

"(1) terminate, withdraw, or suspend all or part of any trade agreement entered into under this Act (other than section 182), section 201 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, or section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930 with respect to any United States duty or other import restriction on telecommunications products (as defined in section 184), and

"(2) terminate, withdraw, or suspend the obligations of the United States with respect to such duty or other import restriction.

"(b) 3-YEAR SUSPENSION OF UNBINDING.—Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) or section 125(e), any duty (or other import restriction) with respect to which action is taken under subsection (a) shall remain in effect, including previously staged reductions (as though such action had not been taken) until the date which is 3 years after the date of enactment of the Telecommunications Trade Act of 1984. After such date, any duty with respect to which action is taken under subsection (a) shall be increased to a rate equal to the rate applicable under the rate column numbered 2 unless such duty has been otherwise modified pursuant to an implementing bill adopted under section 182 of this title.

"(c) ACTION TREATED AS INCREASE OR IMPOSITION OF DUTY FOR PURPOSES OF COMPENSATION AUTHORITY.—For purposes of section 123, any action under subsection (a) shall be treated as an action under section 203 to increase or impose a duty (or other import restriction) which takes effect on the date such action is proclaimed (and not on the date an increase in duty takes effect under subsection (b)). For purposes of this subsection, section 123(b)(4) shall not apply.

"SEC. 184. DEFINITION OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS PRODUCTS.

"For purposes of this chapter, the term 'telecommunications products' means any equipment, instruments, components, parts, or other property—

"(1) which is designed for incorporation in, conncection to, or interconnection with telephone, telegraph, and related telecommunications networks, and

"(2) for which uncompensated reductions in barriers to importation have occurred as a result of judicial and regulatory orders intended to increase competition in U.S. telecommunications services and products.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for title I of the Trade Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"CHAPTER 8—TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE AGREEMENTS AUTHORITIES

TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE ACT: SUMMARY

TITLE I: THE TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE ACT OF 1984

1. Findings:

The restructuring of the U.S. market for telecommunications will result in a dramatic increase in imports of telecommunications equipment.

Foreign telecommunications markets are characterized by extensive government intervention, including restrictive import practices and discriminatory government procurement.

The world market for telecommunications will be the source of rapid growth in the coming decades.

The United States can increase U.S. telecommunications exports, export-related employment, technological leadership and consumer service by achieving an open world trading system for telecommunications products, services and investment.

The United States should avoid granting improved access for foreign telecommunications products in this market in the absence of improved market access abroad for U.S. exports.

2. Amendments to the Trade Act of 1974:

(a) Telecommunications Trade Negotiating Objectives.—

Competitive opportunities for U.S. exports of telecommunications equipment and services in foreign countries substantially equivalent to the competitive opportunities provided by the U.S. market following AT&T divestiture—with a view to avoiding uncompensated reductions in U.S. import barriers.

Competitive opportunities abroad should be measured in terms of both nominal access opportunities and documented or anticipated results. Government procurement practices, standards, investment restrictions and other non-tariff barriers should be considered, as well as tariff barriers.

(b) Telecommunications Trade Negotiating Authority.—

For a period of three years from enactment, the President is granted the authority to enter into multilateral or bilateral trade agreements providing for open trade in telecommunications equipment. For this purpose, he may reduce, eliminate or otherwise modify U.S. tariff and non-tariff barriers.

Any such telecommunications trade agreement must be approved by Congress and will be treated as a trade agreement under fast-track legislative procedures set out in Sections 102/151 of the Trade Act of 1974.

(c) Suspension of Tariff Bindings.—

Upon enactment, tariff bindings on U.S. imports of telecommunications equipment negotiated in previous GATT trade rounds shall be removed, however

For three years following enactment, U.S. import duties will remain at current rates. After three years, such duties will, in the absence of legislation to implement telecommunications trade agreement(s), automatically revert to Column 2 rates (i.e., the higher rates in place prior to GATT trading rounds.)

The President is granted authority to compensate (through offsetting trade concessions, if necessary) major foreign suppliers of products for which tariff bindings have been removed. U.S. negotiators would be expected to cite low pre-divestiture trade levels and involve "reasonable expectations" arguments (re: AT&T divestiture) to minimize compensation in GATT Article XXVIII negotiations.

3. Definitions:

For purposes of this bill, the term "telecommunications products" refers to any telecommunications equipment for which uncompensated reductions in barriers to importation have resulted from court and regulatory orders intended to increase domestic competition in U.S. telecommunications services and products (i.e., related to divestiture.)

(Note: Specific product categories will be drawn from hearings and the ITC report on the trade impact of the breakup of AT&T, and will be substituted later in the legislative process. Products could include:

Transmission Equipment (microwave, satellites, cable, fiber optics, etc.);

Switching Equipment (all central office equipment); and Customer Premise (Terminal) Equipment (telephones, mobile telephones, PBXs, call directors, pagers, etc.))

4. Consultations:

The President will consult on a regular basis with the appropriate committees of Congress and private sector advisory committees established under Section 135 of the Trade Act of 1974.

TITLE II: TELECOMMUNICATIONS PRODUCT CLASSIFICATION ACT

1. Specifies new tariff (TSUS) nomenclature for telecommunications equipment to clarify and facilitate data collection on trade in telecommunications. (Nomenclature was drafted by the ITC at the request of the Committee on Finance and does not change current tariff rates.)●

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, January 1 marked the end of an era. It marked the end of the Bell System, and the end of the integrated monopoly. But, January 1 also marked a beginning of a new era; an era of competition.

Like it or not, we have embarked on a monumental experiment unequalled in our industrial history. The prospects are there for boosts in innovation; for a widening variety of services and products; and for rising productivity in the keystone industry of our information based economy. Seven of ten Americans are employed in the service sector of our economy and the quality, efficiency, and variety of communications is key to how well they compete.

But, this great experiment has many risks. We face risks as we move to new ways of pricing telephone service—ways based on cost. Some people may no longer be able to afford basic access. While a move toward cost-based pricing should yield new efficiencies, we cannot abandon universal service as a result. We also face the risk that regulation will tilt unfairly in one direction or the other. We face another risk. We face the risk that we will lose a major American market to foreign competition. That is the subject of the legislation I join in sponsoring today: Trade in telecommunications in the new era. For while Government sorts out the regulatory strands in the domestic industry, and while industry continues to adjust and shake itself out, with new corporate alinements and new services, something very significant—something very disturbing, is happening at the national border.

What is happening is that America has dramatically slipped from a net exporter of telecommunications equipment to a net importer. This is happening in a nation that, by any reasonable measure, enjoys the world's technological edge. Is it happening in an economic sector whose growth America counts on for America's benefit. Is it happening in an high tech industry, when high tech is key to maintaining our international competitiveness. If we lose ground here, then where do we hold ground?

The numbers are striking. In 1982 we had a trade surplus in telephone and telegraph equipment of $203 million. In 1983, we had a trade deficit of $240 million. And the trend seems likely to get worse.

Why is this happening? In part, because foreign manufacturers have products that people want. But why, for 1982 to 1983 did our exports remain virtually unchanged, at around $830 million, while imports rose some 70 percent, from $626 million to $1,075 billion?

A major reason I think, is clear. That reason is divestiture of AT&T and our procompetitive telecommunications policy. Viewed in the light of international trade, the AT&T breakup must be seen as a step of major significance. America has unilaterally withdrawn a major barrier to foreign entry into our market. True, it was a nontariff barrier. But it was a barrier all the same. And America has withdrawn it unilaterally.

Before divestiture, $13 billion in annual procurement by Bell operating companies went, by and large, to Western Electric. But the Bell operating companies have now been unlinked from AT&T. And already we see the Bell operating companies shopping for the best deal on central switches even if it means going off-shore. Before divestiture, relatively few customers took advantage of the right—granted since 1977—to buy their own terminal equipment. Before divestiture, AT&T rented out some 100 million telephone sets. But as divestiture approached, customers became more and more aware that they could buy their own telephone. AT&T faces competition not only from GE and GTE, but from NEC—Nippon Electric Co.

Some 70 percent of telephone customers said in a recent survey that buying a phone is a better deal than leasing it. Is it any wonder that analysts predict that the sale of telephone sets will be a multibillion-dollar industry in the eighties? Is it any surprise that the import of telephone handsets rose, in the first 9 months of 1983, a whopping 247 percent over the previous year?

Lest there be any doubt about what divestiture means, a comment by a manager of NEC North America is revealing. Quoted in a recent Business Week article, he said, "All at once the United States has become an open market. If you have a good product, you can ride the wave." And, let us not focus solely on the Japanese. Jeumont-Schneider, the largest PBX manufacturer in France, is entering the U.S. market, with a target of 5 percent of a market that should top 10 billion by 1990. A lot of foreign based manufacturers have their eyes set on a bigger piece of the American pie.

What is terribly wrong is not that we have opened our markets. What is terribly wrong is that at the same time, foreign markets remain closed. Unless we act, trade in telecommunications equipment will increasingly be a one-way street. Any rational observer has to wonder whether in the area of trade, the divestiture and our procompetitive policy are a monumental case of American shooting itself in the foot.

While America has opened its doors to new entry, the doors to foreign markets remain largely closed. In most developed nations, the public network is owned and operated by government-owned monopolies—the Postal Telephone & Telegraph or PTT's generally favor their domestic manufacturers. While large American firms may respond by buying into firms abroad, buying into foreign companies is not all that easy for smaller firms. Moreover, such activity does not do as much for American jobs and American economic growth.

Industrial nations adhere to the so-called government procurement code, under which their government agrees to forgo policies of buying domestic. But few have agreed to extend the code to telecommunications agencies.

Japan has entered into a bilateral agreement with the United States. Japan is the second largest telecommunications market. Its government-owned monopoly is Nippon Telephone & Telegraph—(NTT). Since 1980, NTT has promised open procurement under a bilateral agreement with the United States. But in the first 3 years of the agreement, less than 1 percent of the $3 billion in yearly purchases has gone to American firms. Meanwhile roughly half our imports come from Japan.

I led 14 other Senators late last year in urging various improvements in the agreement. And shortly after the new year, an agreement was struck between the United States and Japan, incorporating some of those. Time will tell if they will make a difference. But we had something of a warning about overoptimism. Around the time the agreement was extended, Japanese officials clarified their reading of the new agreement. They said that communications satellites were excluded from the agreement. Why? Quite simply because Japan felt it in its national interest to develop a domestic industry. Recent talks between Ambassador Brock and Japanese officials still have not completely resolved this matter.

Obviously, there is no turning back the clock. Divestiture is complete. But, we cannot stand by while our trade position deteriorates. America must take firm steps to insure that trade in telecommunications is a two-way street. The legislation we introduce today is just such a step.

The outline of the solution we are proposing is a simple one. It directs the President to commence multilateral negotiations with our trade partners—to secure access to their markets reciprocal to the access enjoyed in the United States. At the very least, we would demand improvements. Failing to achieve that, the United States would significantly increase tariffs on imports.

For New Jersey, taking these steps for the industry is critical, New Jersey ranks fourth in the Nation in shipments of telephone and telegraph equipment. Home of Bell Labs, New Jersey is a leader in the research and development of new products. Some 40,000 men and women are employed here in the manufacture of communications equipment. It is in their interest that we move quickly, and decisively.

When trade sanctions are mentioned, some people are apt to think, negatively, that that amounts to protectionism. What I am suggesting is not the protection of a sick industry. What I suggest is that we stop the sacrifice of a healthy one; a vital industry; a leading industry.●

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise today as a cosponsor of the Telecommunications Trade Act because this country needs to be more vigilant in opening up foreign markets for U.S products. The telecommunications industry is one of the most protected industries in other countries. According to the Department of Commerce:

> Other major markets—outside of the United States—remain essentially closed, operating according to the established system of government held PTT's—postal-telephone and telegraph—and preferential procurement procedures.

We must do more to open those markets for U.S. products because the telecommunications industry is among the world's fastest growing industries. It is estimated that the worldwide telecommunications market will expand from $59 billion in 1983 to $88 billion in 1988.

The U.S. market for telecommunications equipment was $24 billion in 1983 and is expected to rise to $35 billion in 1988. However, access to this market has been opened up as a result of the AT&T divestiture. In effect, we are unilaterally giving foreign companies new U.S. market opportunities and we are getting nothing for it. We can no longer afford to give something away for nothing. If the U.S market is open and foreign markets remain closed, foreign producers will have no incentive to pressure their governments to give U.S. companies a chance to sell our telecommunications products in their markets.

In the words of the Commerce Department:

> As long as this type of asymmetry persists, firms based in open-market countries—and therefore without the luxury of insulated domestic demand—could find themselves at a temporary competitive disadvantage before their protected counterparts. And since the United States has led the way in terms of liberalization, American telecommunications equipment manufacturers in particular may face unreciprocated foreign competition.

What the act does is to grant for 3 years to the President the authority to enter into trade agreements providing for more open trade in telecommunications equipment. As leverage, the act stipulates that U.S. tariffs on telecommunications equipment will rise after the 3 years to the level that would have been in effect without the commitments made during multilateral negotiations, unless the President successfully negotiates a trade agreement opening up foreign markets for U.S. products. In effect, the act puts another arrow in the quiver of our trade negotiators when they sit down with their counterparts from other countries.

While I am generally reluctant to increase trade restrictions, this country needs to use whatever means available to force other countries back to the bargaining table to liberalize trade. Let me emphasize however, that the act is GATT consistent because compensation is provided for, if in fact tariffs have to be raised. Of course, if other countries negotiate to open their markets, tariffs will not be raised. My hope is that this act will result in more open markets, not less.

National, even international, debate is sadly limited by the brittle cliches of "free trade" and "protectionism." The first is a myth and the second is a menace. Free trade is a noble goal but like absolute zero in physics or the perfect oil painting copy of the Mona Lisa, it can never be obtained. Liberalized trade, developed under a set of rules which provide a discipline in the international market place, has served the world well since World War II. But those rules are not providing an effective international discipline today. Five years ago this Congress passed the Trade Agreements Act of 1979 and we had high hopes for new codes, including the one on government procurement. But 5 years later we find that precious little has been gained. Our agreement with Nippon Telephone and Telegraph (NTT) has resulted in less than $200 million in sales.

The policy issue today is not a question of free trade versus protectionism. It is a question of discipline and rules, who obeys and who does not, what is fair and what is not. Is it fair that foreign producers of telecommunications equipment continue to receive protection and support from their governments, while we open up our market to competition from these firms and their governments?

This country must stop treating trade policy as a stepchild of foreign policy and domestic policy. Put bluntly, we do not have a trade policy. In this interdependent world, all of our domestic policies have an effect on industry's ability to compete internationally. We have no idea what our myriad of policies for defense procurement, small businesses, subsidies, tax breaks, and all of our trade restrictions have on the structure of our industry or its ability to compete internationally. The divestiture of AT&T is another in a long list of policy changes which are taken without considering the implications for trade. Until this country adopts a more coherent trade strategy, we will be forced to use whatever leverage the Congress can muster, on a piecemeal basis, to open up foreign markets. That is why I support this bill.

In sum, the world market for telecommunications will be the source of rapid growth in the coming decades. However, foreign telecommunications markets are characterized by extensive government intervention, including restrictive import practices and discriminatory government procurement. Only by using access to the U.S. market as leverage, can the United States achieve an open world market for trade in telecommunications—thereby gaining access for U.S. exports and increasing export-related employment. The time has come for the United States to use that leverage, otherwise our firms will continue to operate at a competitive disadvantage to the detriment of our economic base.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor and support the bill.

(a)(1) Except as provided in subsection (b), for the purpose of determining or computing the amount of any increase in payments or benefit amounts or in standards for eligibility for payments or benefits taking effect on any date during the fiscal year 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, or 1989 under any provision of Federal law which requires an increase or change in such payments, benefit amounts, or standards as a result of any change in—

(A) the Consumer Price Index (or any component thereof); or

(B) any other index which measures costs, prices, or wages.

the change in any such index shall be deemed to be the change as computed or determined under such provision of Federal law or (if less)—

(i) zero percent in the case of increases taking effect in fiscal year 1985; or

(B) eligible for any payments or benefits, under any provision of Federal law to the extent that such increase or eligibility is denied by reason of paragraph (1).

MEDICARE FREEZE

SEC. 1007. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act (or any amendment made by this Act) or any provision of title XVIII of the Social Security Act, the "applicable percentage increase" under section 1886(b)(3)(B) of the Social Security Act for any 12-month cost reporting period or fiscal year beginning on or after October 1, 1984, and before October 1, 1985, shall be zero percent.

(b) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall report to the Congress within 45 days after the date of the enactment of this Act with respect to suggested methods for assuring that hospitals will not increase amounts charged to patients who are not entitled to benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act in order to compensate for amounts not paid by reason of the limitation under subsection (a).

LIMITATION ON INCREASE IN BUDGET AUTHORITY FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE ACTIVITIES

SEC. 1008. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act (or any amendment made by this Act), the Congress declares that—

(1) an urgent priority of the United States Government is the pursuit of a national defense policy that adequately provides for the security of the United States and that of its allies against the threat of their adversaries;

(2) the basic goal of any national defense program of the United States should be to provide a consistent and sustained growth in defense readiness activities and in weapon systems research and development, procurement, and force modernization;

(3) an annual increase in the defense budget of the United States Government, in accordance with the commitment made in 1977 and 1978 by the United States Government and the other members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) to provide for annual increases in the defense budgets of the members by three percent in excess of the rate of inflation, is an essential element in developing a reliable national defense capability; and

(4) the policies relating to the commitment of resources to develop and maintain a strong and comprehensive defense program by the United States must be fully integrated with an overall fiscal and economic policy directed toward restoring the financial credibility of the Government in an equitable manner.

(b) Therefore, it is the sense of the Congress that the amount of budget authority provided for each of the fiscal years 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989 for all purchases made by departments and agencies administering activities classified under the functional category of National Defense in the Budget transmitted under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, should be the amount of budget authority provided for such purchases for the preceding fiscal year plus an amount equal to the product of—

(1) the amount of budget authority provided for such purchases for such preceding fiscal year; and

(2) the sum of—

(A) the rate of inflation projected (in accordance with subsection (c)(2)) to occur during the fiscal year 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, or 1989, as the case may be; and

(B) four percent in fiscal years 1985 and 1986; and

(C) three percent in fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.

(c)(1) For the purposes of subsection (b), budget authority does not include the budget authority provided for the pay of employees of any department or agency described in subsection (b), including members of the Armed Forces, or for military retired or retainer pay.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (b), the rate of inflation projected to occur during a fiscal year under subsection (b) shall be—

(A) for fiscal year 1985, the percent change in the defense purchases index which is projected for such fiscal year by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(B) for fiscal year 1986, 1987, 1988, or 1989, the most recent projection of the percent change in such index for such fiscal year made by such Director before the date on which the Senate or the House of Representatives, or any committee thereof, takes action to provide budget authority for such fiscal year to which subsection (b) applies.

DISCRETIONARY FEDERAL PROGRAMS

SEC. 1009. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act (or any amendment made by this Act), it is the sense of the Senate that the total amount of budget authority provided for all discretionary Federal programs for fiscal year 1985 should not exceed an amount equal to the total amount of budget authority provided for all such programs for fiscal year 1984.

(b) It is the sense of the Senate that the total amount of budget authority provided for all discretionary Federal programs for each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, should not exceed an amount equal to the total amount of budget authority provided for all such programs for the preceding fiscal year plus an amount equal to the product of—

(1) the total amount of budget authority provided for all such programs for such preceding fiscal year, multiplied by

(2) three percent.

(c) For purposes of this section, the term "discretionary Federal program" means any Federal program other than—

(1) a program classified under the functional category of National Defense in the budget submitted by the President for the applicable fiscal year under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code; or

(2) a program for which spending authority (as defined in section 401(c)(2)(C) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974) is provided by law.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

NATIONAL NURSES' DAY

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise today to salute our Nation's 1.7 million registered nurses. These unselfish and caring individuals are, in this Senator's mind, the backbone of our country's health care system and deserving of special recognition. Sunday, May 6 is National Nurses' Day and citizens all around our country will be involved in events to heighten public awareness of the countless contributions these professionals make in insuring quality health care for all Americans.

The rapid advances in medicine and the changing nature of health care has greatly expanded the role of registered nurses. The intensity of care has increased with more R.N.'s needed to carry out such activities as monitoring vital functions, ventilation therapy with infusion pumps, and the application of many new technologies. The development of these kinds of settings has particularly increased the need for nurses with advanced preparation. And, Mr. President, our Nation's nurses have responded to these challenges, assuming increased responsibilities and accountability for our health care needs.

I am pleased to have joined my distinguished colleague and friend, Senator INOUYE, in sponsoring Senate Joint Resolution 274, a resolution to officially designate May 6, 1984, as National Nurse Recognition Day. Mr. President, these health care professionals are most deserving of this tribute and I urge my colleagues to join me in a demonstration of recognition and support of our Nation's nurses.●

A SESQUICENTENNIAL POEM

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on the weekend past, April 28, 1984, to be specific, I had the pleasure of participating in the celebration of Rochester, N.Y.'s Sesquicentennial. On its 150th birthday, the Flower City, as it is known, is indeed flourishing; looking to its past with pride and to its future with confidence.

The observance had many memorable moments and events, but one in particular stands out for me. It is a poem written specially for the celebration by William Heyen, professor of creative writing at the State University of New York at Brockport.

The poem, "Downriver," elegantly and eloquently captures the spirit and history that has helped make Rochester one of New York's, and the Nation's great cities.

Mr. President, I ask that Professor Heyen's poem, as reprinted on April 29, 1984 in Upstate, the magazine of the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

DOWNRIVER

(A Poem for the Sesquicentennial of the City of Rochester, N.Y.)

I

At the country auction, boxes of books. In one,
Bryant's Poems, a gilt-edged, false-leather parlor edition losing its words, disbound, falling apart even while I held it.
Under century-old backyard shagbark hickories
in the spread of full summer,
I stood reading "A Forest Hymn" for the first time in twenty or thirty years.
Do you remember? You probably had it in high school, as I did. Its hundred-eighteen lines rocked all us little American scholars into oblivion.
Who cared about trees?
This was the day after a Russian pilot tracked a passenger jet, locked in his missiles, and shot it down, killing 269.
I tried to imagine that many people in flames, had counted the auction crowd to half that number.
Bryant rhapsodizes wildflowers growing at the roots of huge trees. Each one, he says,
"With scented breath and look so like a smile,
Seems, as it issues from the shapeless mould,
An emanation of the indwelling Life,
A visible token of the upholding Love,
That are the soul of this great universe."
There's more in his hymn than heavenly flowers smiling, but the desperate poet does blame all catastrophe on human pride his forest could keep us from: "O God," he prays, "when thou
Dost scare the world with tempests, set on fire
The heavens with falling thunderbolts, or fill
The swift dark whirlwind that uproots the woods
And drowns the villages; when, at thy call,
Uprises the great deep and throws himself
Upon the continent, and overwhelms its cities,
Spare me and mine, nor let us need the wrath
Of the mad unchained elements to teach who rules them."
He ends by asking for that quiet wisdom to be found under the emblematic trees in contemplation:
"Be it ours to meditate,
In these calm shades, thy milder majesty,
And to the beautiful order of thy works
Learn to conform the order of our lives."
But I kept brooding the charred fuselage sinking into brine mud with innocent dead, of limbs washed up on beaches.
I knelt to place the book back into its box.
A long time seemed to have passed.

II

The auction droned into evening, generations-deep possessions knocked down for the dollars of inflation, spirited across lawns from home, outbuildings, barns, into cars and vans.
This was one of the old farmsteads along the Genesee where the river still glides with Seneca apparitions past graves of the first settlers. Who could have dreamed the American city, a glass and steel skyline, corporate limbs in a hundred countries?
But it was always there, born in the sewn brain-patterns of homemade quilts, in the first Kodaks giving us back to ourselves, in flails and scythes, in pots mended by travelling tinkerers a hundred years before,
in anvils and ogee mirrors, in hand-ruled ledgers, cast iron stoves, tin candle moulds, a trophy buck whose antlers branched above this congregation, in grains of the high-headboard oak beds whose women bore those who worked this land, in the now nondescript uniforms of three or four wars, in shotguns, sheepskin coats, bridal gowns, coarse overalls, a stereopticon, butter crocks, dovetailed dressers, a rosewood Acolian piano, corn shuckers, churns, apple peelers,
cabbage boards, blue-tinged canning jars, a loom,
a spinning wheel, a Currier & Ives of Sam Patch above the river, a barrel of Depression glassware now fought for by dealers, oval walnut frames of ancestral faces, redware, sheet music, an Uncle Sam iron bank, a roll-top desk—the years cascading forward with yearned-for objects as though over the river's falls . . . And then, held up by the auctioneer for special admiration,
a single amethyst jack-in-the-pulpit bud vase, its cowl-like spathe gleaming above dispersal and the emptiness of money . . .
Did elms once clarify our streets with toothed translucent leaves?
Did we know God because the chestnut hillsides blossomed?
We pray, again, to invest things with meaning, to build a city within our time but free from the terror of this new world.

III

The others have gone. Will you, now, stay here with me?
We will stand beside the river, watch stars hold still in the flowing night water. In the same way, we have come here from everywhere, and from all time. We, our parents, theirs, theirs,
followed history, dumbly, or beguiled by it.
We were the ones in kitchens, fields, churches of a thousand villages who heard the repeated dream
until we reached for it, or were handcuffed to it,

SOUTH DAKOTA RECOGNIZES THE EFFORTS OF THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF THE BLIND

● Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues a proclamation issued recently by Gov. William J. Janklow, declaring May as National Federation of the Blind Month in South Dakota.

Mr. President, the National Federation of the Blind is the largest organization of blind persons in our Nation. I am proud of the work the affiliate in South Dakota is doing to insure equality, security, and opportunity for the blind citizens of my State. I wish also to commend and congratulate the president of the South Dakota affiliate, Ms. Karen S. Mayry, for her continued dedication to issues of concern to the blind.

Mr. President, I ask that Governor Janklow's proclamation be printed in the RECORD.

The proclamation follows:

PROCLAMATION

Whereas the National Federation of the Blind of South Dakota is a vital advocacy group that represents the interests of thousands of blind citizens statewide; and,

Whereas this invaluable organization is an effective voice of the blind for it seeks to enhance the dignity and increase the independence of our state's visually handicapped; and,

Whereas as the largest organization of the blind in America, the NFB strives to educate the public about the capabilities of the visually impaired; they are a group of individuals who see themselves not as blind people, but as people who just happen to be blind; and,

Whereas the National Federation of the Blind of South Dakota is a group whose blind members don't as for sympathy, but for empathy . . . they wish not to be pampered, for they only desire to be given a chance to prove how much they CAN do and how little they can't do; and,

Whereas the NFB not only seeks to educate the sighted, but works as well to inform the visually handicapped of their rights and of the many services available to them:

Now, Therefore, I, William J. Janklow, Governor of the State of South Dakota, do hereby proclaim the month of May, 1984, as "National Federation of the Blind of South Dakota Month" in South Dakota. As citizens of this great State, it is important we all recognize the blind as fellow human beings who desire only to live full, rich lives in dignity and equality.●

UPHOLSTERED FURNITURE ACTION COUNCIL MEETING

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, American upholstered furniture manufacturers, through their own initiative, are making great strides in consumer safety. Over the weekend in High Point, N.C., at the annual spring furniture market there, the Honorable Terrence M. Scanlon, Vice Chairman of the U.S. Consumer Products Safety Commission, addressed the Upholstered Furniture Action Council. This group has been responsible for spearheading the drive for consumer safety with respect to furniture products.

Mr. President, I believe that my colleagues and the public will find Commissioner Scanlon's remarks important in that he acknowledges the safety contributions made by the furniture manufacturers and he lays stress on the key role that individual consumer responsibility must play in the whole effort of consumer safety.

Mr. President, I ask that the speech by Commissioner Terrence M. Scanlon of the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission to the Upholstered Furniture Action Council in High Point, N.C., on Saturday, April 28, 1984, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The speech follows:

REMARKS OF TERRENCE M. SCANLON, VICE CHAIRMAN AT THE UFAC SPRING MARKET PRESS CONFERENCE, APRIL 28, 1984

CPSC-UFAC, "A SUCCESS STORY"

I am pleased and privileged to address you this morning about the successful cooperative program between the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) and the Upholstered Furniture Action Council (UFAC) on the upholstered furniture ignition problem. Many would say industry/government cooperation is simply not appropriate. However, if one takes the time to carefully examine the record, understand the voluntary standard process, and look for the common good, a different conclusion is readily reached.

The long-standing working cooperative effort between UFAC and the CPSC is an excellent case in point. Your successful program now in its second phase is working for the future improvement of furniture from ignitions. Your many efforts in the past, such as the development and patenting of the aluminum welt cord, and other safety improvements, have already greatly contributed to consumer safety, and will continue to do so for years to come. I challenge you to continue this progress.

The UFAC program is cited by my fellow Commissioners in Public Commission meetings and before Congressional committees as a model of successful government/industry cooperation. I share that view as well. You have all heard that before, so let me raise a few new issues. Industry/government cooperation, of course, must be a "two-way street." What is industry's contribution to consumer safety, often at substantial cost, is a contribution to all of our society. The benefits, of course, reach primarily to those we all ultimately seek to protect, the consumers. One of the reasons I am an outspoken proponent of voluntary standards is that in this day of government cutbacks at most levels, "private sector resource" intensive efforts, such as yours are critical to accomplishing our mutually consistent goal of consumer safety.

The government has a special role to play in the parternship of regulator and regulated. We have a special obligation to ensure fairness in our dealing with both the business community and consumers. When a voluntary effort is successful, it is critical to reward that success. That is one reason I support the recognition of voluntary standards. But even more basic efforts can be made by fair treatment of industry. A prime example is the reporting of statistics; in particular the measurement of the improved fire safety in upholstered furniture.

The Commission, in a spasm of "fairness," has agreed to represent the statistics on furniture flammability testing in two ways: chair-by-chair results and cigarette-by-cigarette results. I am concerned, however, that reporting results on a chair-by-chair basis, even juxtaposed to more appropriate cigarette-by-cigarette measurements, can lead to misunderstanding. Frankly, I see no statistical basis for reporting chair-by-chair when there are many cigarettes on each chair. No useful information is provided. This concern is especially serious because of the way the results may be interpreted. I believe responsible regulation requires more sensitivity to the reality of the marketplace and to the way testing results are reported that reflect that reality. The impressive work of the Upholstered Furniture Action Council toward consumer safety is a good place to start.

I would also like to add a new element into this whole cigarette ignition debate, that of consumer responsibility. President Reagan last May on the 10th anniversary of the CPSC said . . . "The effort to prevent accidents is a shared responsibility of industry, consumers and government."

We in government and you in industry can do our share, but individual responsibility and accountability for one's actions is also and essential element, and in fact may be the key element in the long run.

Smoking requires an inherent responsibility on an individual smoker to do so safely, and with consideration for the safety of those around him, both his or her family and the public at large. This must be stressed more and more in the whole debate on cigarette ignitions. You in industry, and we in government can't do it all. Individuals must share this responsibility as well.

In conclusion, I am again glad to be here and I hope my visit to High Point will help to foster this "two-way street" of which I speak. This is one Commissioner who believes that all wisdom does not reside within the confines of Washington. I can assure you that my second visit in two years to your Spring Market will help foster our cooperative efforts, and lead to a greater mutual understanding of our common problems and concerns.

I would especially like to thank Charlie Carey and Bill Richman, UFAC co-chairmen, and Betty Grace Terpstra and Joe Gerard, who represent you so professionally before the Commission in Washington. They work hard at what we all seek in the name of the common good, greater consumer safety.

Again I congratulate you for your efforts, I look forward to a cooperative working relationship in the years ahead as well.

Thank you.●

YWCA CELEBRATES 125TH ANNIVERSARY

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the Young Women's Christian Association of the United States is currently celebrating their 125th anniversary, and I should like to congratulate this fine organization.

The YWCA has been a pioneer for social justice and peace. They have been in the forefront with such accomplishments as establishing the first day-care center in the country, holding the first retreat for unwed mothers, providing the first typing instruction for women, opening the first school to train practical nurses, conducting the first interracial conference of women to be held in the South, and many others.

On the local level, the YWCA has pioneered in areas of local need and concern, such as teenage social adjustment, school age parents, women offenders, postmastectomy rehabilitation, divorce support, legislative support for "Latch Key" program, and parenting and job clubs.

Founded in Boston in 1859, the YWCA today is a worldwide movement: Women in 83 nations responding to their own needs and those of others, breaking down barriers of race, religion, education, and status to work together for the common good, to improve the life situations of the unemployed, the displaced, the disabled, the powerless, the young, the old, women working in offices, the home and in the fields, women abandoned, or abused women without the necessary skills for survival.

By the turn of the century, the YWCA had moved into communities and college campuses throughout the United States—into the lunchrooms of factories and department stores, into black neighborhoods and the waiting stalls of Ellis Island, into Indian territory and the farmlands of the Midwest. Wherever women needed a job, a home, a hearty meal, a safe journey, friends, books, exercise, schooling or a counselor, the YWCA was there.

Today the YWCA of the U.S.A. is still there with locally funded community or campus associations in 4,700 locations in our Nation. They have grown, through concern and commitment, to be the largest women's membership organization in the world today, and the only one to have made service synonymous with social change for more than a century.

I am pleased to salute the YWCA on their 125th anniversary, and I wish them continued success in the years ahead.●

STEEL QUOTA BILL NOT INFLATIONARY

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, one of the issues lurking behind the scenes in the steel import quota debate is the likely impact on consumer prices. Since steel is not by itself a retail product, the ultimate price impact, if any, to consumers is difficult to determine. Raw material prices are not always passed on in their entirety by the manufacturers of finished products.

Recently, however, David Cantor, the Congressional Research Services' specialist in industry economics, has done an analysis of the likely impact on the producers price index for intermediate products if steel prices increase. Mr. Cantor does not attempt to predict what quota legislation would do to steel prices; he simply analyzes what the effect of a range of possible price increases on steel would be on intermediate products.

Mr. Cantor's conclusion is that the price effects would be relatively modest: If steel prices rise by 10 to 50 percent, intermediate product prices could increase by 0.65 to 3.26 percent. This is a much more modest impact than has been suggested publicly by some who have not done any serious analysis of the problem.

Mr. Cantor has done such work, and it will facilitate the debate on steel import quotas by focusing on facts rather than rhetoric. I ask that the CRS study be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The material follows:

EFFECTS OF HYPOTHETICAL INCREASES IN STEEL PRICES ON THE PRODUCER PRICE INDEX FOR INTERMEDIATE MATERIALS, DECEMBER 1983 TO DECEMBER 1984

ABSTRACT

If, possibly due to steel import quotas, steel prices rose by 10 to 50 percent, prices of intermediate products used in manufacturing could increase by 0.65 to 3.26 percent. While these increases would probably influence prices of other goods and the inflation rate, various statistical problems preclude estimating these effects.

EFFECTS OF HYPOTHETICAL INCREASES IN STEEL PRICES ON THE PRODUCER PRICE INDEX FOR INTERMEDIATE MATERIALS, DECEMBER 1983 TO DECEMBER 1984

If, possibly as a result of quotas on steel mill product imports, domestic steel prices were to be raised in the range of 10 percent to 50 percent, the Producer Price Index for Intermediate Materials (hereafter, PPI-I) would, all other things being equal, increase by from 0.65 percent to 3.26 percent. While the PPI-I is by no means a measure of the inflationary impact of increased steel prices, it is an indicator of the prices faced by producers of goods and services, and, thus, of changes in their costs of production. These higher costs of production could influence both wholesale and retail prices, although any changes in them cannot be measured directly or inferred from changes in the PPI-I.

The effect of hypothetical increases in steel prices on the PPI-I

A 10-percent rise in domestic steel prices, as measured by the Producer Price Index of Steel Mill Products, could result in an increase in the PPI-I of 0.65 percent for the period from December 1983 to December 1984. Similarly, a 50-percent increase in domestic steel prices could result in a 3.26 percent increase in the PPI-I in this period. The PPI-I would rise from 315.8 in December 1983 to between 317.9 and 326.1 in December 1984. These and the effects of steel price increases between 10 and 50 percent are presented in table 1.

TABLE 1.—EFFECTS OF HYPOTHETICAL PRICE INCREASES OF STEEL MILL PRODUCTS ON THE PRODUCTS PRICE INDEX FOR INTERMEDIATE MATERIALS, DECEMBER 1983 TO DECEMBER 1984

[1967=100]

	Producer price index for intermediate materials
	December 1983	December 1984	Percent change
Percentage price increase in steel mill products:
10	315.8	317.9	0.65
20	315.8	319.9	1.30
30	315.8	322.0	1.95
40	315.8	324.0	2.61
50	315.8	326.1	3.26

Calculated by CRS based on: U.S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics. Producer Prices and Price Indexes Data for December 1983. Washington, Janaury 1984.

The effects on the PPI-I show how the overall PPI-I would react, if only steel mill product prices were allowed to change. The assumption is made that prices of all other intermediate goods—such as: paper, plastics, motor vehicle parts—are unchanged. It should be noted that steel is categorized as an intermediate good, because it is used to produce other products, both final goods and other intermediate goods.

The effects on the price index were calculated by, first, determining the change in the relative importance of steel mill products in the PPI-I, and, then, recalculating the overall PPI-I, based on the revised relative importance. The procedures are presented in more detail in the appendix to this report. The concept of relative importance refers, in principle, to the share of total shipments of all commodities represented by a particular commodity.[1] In the present case, the share of total shipments of all intermediate goods, as defined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, represented by steel mill product shipments is the relative importance of steel mill products. Normally, the Bureau of Labor Statistics determines the relative importance of all goods for December of each year. For intervening periods (i.e., some other month), or, as in the present case where total shipments are unknown, relative importance is estimated by the Bureau of Labor Statistics by adjusting the relative importance in the base period by the ratio of the percentage change in relative prices.[2]

Implications and limitations of the analysis of hypothetical changes in steel prices and the PPI-I

The calculated hypothetical effects of changes in steel prices on the PPI-I are, at best, an indicator only of changes in the costs of production of other goods and services. Thus, while these effects may point in the direction of change of both producer and consumer prices of final goods, they cannot and should not be taken as a quantitative estimate of the ultimate impact of changes in steel prices on other prices or on the rate of inflation. One cannot infer that any changes in price of one product, steel for example, would be passed through completely to steel users and ultimately to producers and consumers of final goods. What can be said about these effects is that costs of production of intermediate goods taken as a whole category of goods would rise by the percentages indicated in table 1, and, to the extent that they can be passed through to buyers of steel and products embodying steel, other prices could be expected to rise.

The effects calculated apply only to one particular price index, the Producer Price Index for Intermediate Materials. Furthermore, any changes in this index are assumed to be due to price changes only in the one commodity, steel. Thus, these effects do not take into consideration changes that might occur in the prices of even other intermediate goods, because those prices were assumed to be constant in order to develop the estimates.

How prices of final goods might be affected by changes in steel prices cannot be estimated using price indices for a variety of reasons. To estimate these effects on the Producer Price Index for all commodities is to risk double-counting of steel prices; that is, the price of steel will be counted once when it is sold by the steel mill, and will be counted a second time as part of the price of the product using that steel. Thus, such an estimate would imply the effect of a change in steel prices on the steel prices built into the price of the final good.

Nor can the effect of steel price changes on consumer goods be determined using price indices. First, some steel, indeed a large share of steel is used only in other producer goods (e.g., machine tools) and only enters into the production of consumer goods indirectly and over time. Second, even as steel is fabricated into consumer goods, its relative share of total inputs declines as it is combined with other inputs (including labor) at various stages of production and distribution.

One inherent difficulty in using any price index as a measure of inflation is that price indices only track trends in prices, and do not take account of changes in demand. They are constructed on the assumption that the quantities of the goods, prices of which are being measured, remain constant. Thus, price indices do not take account of changes in demand due to price.[3] In general, differences in the construction of the various price indices prevent meaningful linking of them.

It should be noted that one analytical technique does exist which permits analysis of the effects of price changes on the Consumer Price Index or other measures of the inflation rate—namely, input-output analysis. This procedure permits one to trace the direct and indirect effects of changes in production in one sector of the economy on all other sectors. In the process, it is possible to assess price effects. While conceptually this approach has great merit, it requires making assumptions regarding technical relationships between sectors as well as about economic performance. Thus, the results of an input-output analysis depend, therefore, upon the validity of the assumptions made.

Clearly, depending on the degree of any price increase of steel mill products, costs of production of manufactured goods could be expected to rise, and perhaps substantially. One can expect some of these costs to find their way into consumer prices, and, therefore, the rate of inflation. What cannot be estimated with confidence is the degree to which prices generally throughout the economy will be affected.

APPENDIX

CALCULATION OF CHANGES IN THE PRODUCER PRICE INDEX OF INTERMEDIATE MATERIALS DUE TO A CHANGE IN THE PRICE OF STEEL MILL PRODUCTS

The procedures employed call, first, for calculating the change in relative importance of steel mill products for the base period of this analysis, December 1983. The most recent published relative importance data is for December 1982; within the intermediate materials index, steel mill products had a relative importance of 6.360. The relative importance of steel mill products in December 1983 is obtained by adjusting the 1982 value of relative importance by multiplying it by the ratio of the percentage change in the price index of steel mill products from 1982 to 1983 to the percentage change in the price index for all intermediate materials. This procedure yields a value of relative importance for steel mill product prices of 6.500 in December 1983.

The Producer Price Index for Intermediate Materials (PPI-I) for December 1984 is calculated by employing the formula:

$$PPI\text{-}It = ((1 - RIc) + dRIc) \times PPI\text{-}Io,$$

where:

PPI-It=the Producer Price Index for intermediate materials in time t, or, in this case, December 1984;
RIc=the relative importance of steel mill products (= 6.500);
d=percentage change in steel mill products; and,
PPI-Io=the Producer Price Index for intermediate materials in the base period, December 1983.●

C. BRAXTON VALENTINE

● Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, for those of us, Members and staff, for whom the Senate is a daily experience of life, the Senate community often seems to be one large tumultuous family. When one of the family passes away, we all feel the resulting sorrow on a personal level.

It is, therefore, with regret that I tell my colleagues about the recent passing of a well-respected and honored Senate employee, C. Braxton Valentine, Jr., who until this past November, was the staff director of the Select Committee on Ethics. Although Brack had a very full life as a lawyer in private practice, with the Internal Revenue Service, and with several congressional committees, it was as the first and only staff director of the Select Committee on Ethics that we in the Senate remember him. From the time he accepted that position in 1977 until his retirement in November 1983, my predecessors and successors, the chairmen of the select committee, continually turned to Brack for advice and guidance with respect to the mission of the committee.

As the committee's chairman from 1980 until 1982, I had the privilege of working closely with Brack on many important matters. I trusted his calm demeanor, insightful grasp of legal issues, and the sensible way in which he approached the committee's work. Brack was always noted for a reasoned argument, a pleasing sense of humor, a natty bow tie, and a shy smile.

We all regret his untimely passing and will be forever in his debt. His unselfishness to the Senate will forever be a model for all those who follow in his footsteps. To his wife, Robin, and to their children, we express our profound sense of grief and our condolences. He was a fine man, and we will miss him greatly.●

GRAND RAPIDS JOB CORPS CENTER

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the Department of Labor's Job Corps program has recently designated May 1984 as "Community Appreciation Month."

I wish to draw special attention to the activities of the Grand Rapids, Mich., Job Corps Center in recognizing the support they have received from the community. The Center, administered by the Grand Rapids public schools, has plans for a number of events to show that they care about Grand Rapids. Some of the events scheduled are: neighborhood cleanups, Earth day, blood drives, and many other worthwhile projects. Having personally toured the Center, I am well acquainted with the strong bond that has developed between the community and the Center.

The Grand Rapids public schools first received a contract for the Center from the Department of Labor in March 1980 and were recently awarded a 3-year extension. This will insure the continuation of this very fine program. Since 1980, more than 2,700 young people have received vocational and educational training at the Center.

While Community Appreciation Month is intended to show the Nation's Job Corps Centers support for their local communities, I wish to extend my thanks and support to the Grand Rapids Job Corps Center as one example of Job Corps Center achievement in the past, and many that I am confident will follow in the future.●

SAVE THE CHILDREN DAY

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, it gives me great pleasure to rise and pay tribute to an organization committed to helping needy children in the United States and 36 countries abroad. Today is the seventh annual celebration of "Save the Children Day" and to commemorate the occasion, children from around the country will visit Capitol Hill in hopes of heightening the awareness for the problems of low-income American children.

In the over 50 years since its founding in southern Appalachia, Save the Children has developed a unique approach to helping the impoverished children of this country and elsewhere in the world. Working in partnership with local residents, this program has proved to be a very effective means to achieve permanent solutions to pressing community problems. However, the common denominator of all Save the Children projects, be they health and nutrition programs, school, home, or road construction, or increased agricultural productivity, is that they have a direct beneficial impact on improving the lives of the children.

As part of the delegation participating in the Save the Children Day—Children's Lobby program, Shannon Mull and Denny Miller of Hilton Head Island, S.C., will share with members their firsthand experience in working with this program. Mr. President, I encourage my colleagues to join me in listening to the message these children bring to Washington. It is my conviction that the future of America depends on the development of its children, and the dedicated work of this fine program will aid us in insuring this goal is achieved.●

NATIONAL SENIOR CITIZEN HALL OF FAME AWARD

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, it is my great honor today to present to the Senate an award granted by the National Senior Citizen Hall of Fame. This great honor is given to individuals or groups of people in recognition of outstanding work that makes life more meaningful for our senior citizens.

The National Senior Citizen Hall of Fame was established by Joe Kappler in 1975 in Everett, Wash. Mr. Kappler, the director of the Hall of Fame, is a truly unique individual. Mr. Kappler's work in Washington State deserves our appreciation and respect. Mr. Kappler became disabled in 1968. At that time he decided to get involved with senior citizens, and began his search for those individuals or groups who deserve national recognition for their activities.

The Senate, as a body, has been chosen by Mr. Kappler for this respected award to the National Senior Citizen Hall of Fame. Mr. Kappler feels that the work that the Senate has done over the last 50 years to improve the lives of our senior citizens is truly deserving of this high award. It is my pleasure and honor to present this award to the Senate on his behalf. May the Senate continue to work to make the lives of senior citizens more meaningful. Further, let us all look to Joe Kappler for inspiration in this endeavor.

I ask that the text of the award be printed in the RECORD.

The text follows:

THE NATIONAL SENIOR CITIZEN HALL OF FAME AWARD

Presented to: The United States Senate.

This award is presented as recognition of outstanding work performed that makes life more meaningful for our elder citizens.

Dated April 9, 1984. Signed by Joe Kappler, Executive Director.●

THE 410TH EVAC RECEIVES HIGHEST AWARD

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, with our Nation's Armed Forces strength dependent upon its readiness, it is encouraging to know that maintenance management by our reserve units is being accorded recognition.

The Senator from Kansas is particularly pleased to report that the 410th Army Evacuation Hospital from Topeka, Kans., has been singled out for the highest honor a unit can achieve in the area of maintenance management by the Chief of Staff of the Army.

The 300 members of this unit have given unselfishly of their time and efforts, whether supplementing an active duty hospital during summer training or standing by on call in Topeka, Kans. It is a model for readiness, maintenance training, maintenance management, and cost control. Under the command of Col. Donald E. Clark and with the leadership of Sfc. Steven Hansford, this group of physicians, dentists, medical technicians, supply specialists, food service personnel, and maintenance staff has been singled out for recognition by both the American Defense Preparedness Association and the Chief of the Army Reserves during recent ceremonies here in Washington.

Mr. President, at a time when we are all deeply concerned about fiscal responsibility and preparedness, the Senator from Kansas is proud to cite this group, casually known as the 410th EVAC, which has set an example as the best maintained unit in the U.S. Army Reserve.●

THE SUPREME COURT'S RULING IN THE BOSE CASE: EXERCISING DUE DILIGENCE IN PROTECTION OF THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, as a one-time newspaper reporter, a member of a publishing family, and a public official who feels passionately about first amendment guarantees, I welcome and applaud the decision handed down yesterday by the U.S. Supreme Court in the case of Bose Corp. against Consumers Union of U.S. Inc.

Since its ruling in the 1964 case, New York Times against Sullivan, the Supreme Court has consistently held that under the first amendment's guarantee of a free press, public figures cannot win in libel cases unless they can prove that a false statement was published or broadcast about them with "actual malice"—with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard for the truth.

At issue in the Bose case was a fairly technical question: Whether a Federal appeals court in a libel case should review not only a trial judge's legal conclusions but also findings of fact in determining if a news organization has published or broadcast a story about a public official with "actual malice."

In its decision yesterday, the Supreme Court quite properly broadened the responsibility of Federal appeals court judges in libel cases from merely examining how a trial court or jury interpreted the law to reviewing their factual determinations on the "actual malice" question as well.

I fully agree with the opinion rendered by Justice Paul Stevens for the Court in the Bose case that the—> Requirement of independent appellate review • • • reflects a deeply held conviction that judges—and particularly members of this Court—must exercise such review in order to preserve the precious liberties established and ordained by the Constitution.

One of the Nation's leading libel attorneys, Floyd Abrams, has cited statistics that in 20 libel cases between 1964 and 1982 in which news media appealed to Federal appeals courts, the trial courts were reversed 14 times. That 70 percent reversal rate, Abrams has noted, is more than triple the reversal rate in other civil cases.

There can be no doubt, as the Court found in the Bose case, that the protection of the first amendment should not be left solely to a trial judge or jury. As Justice Stevens wrote for the majority in this important decision:

The question whether the evidence in the record in a defamation case is of the convincing clarity required to strip the utterance of First Amendment protection is not merely a question for the trier of fact. Judges, as expositors of the Constitution, must independently decide whether the evidence in the record is sufficient to cross the constitutional threshhold that bars the entry of any judgment that is not supported by clear and convincing proof of "actual malice."

In ruling as it did in the Bose case, the Supreme Court exercised due diligence in protection of freedom of the press.●

TAIWAN

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President: With the coming home of President Reagan from his trip to mainland China, it would be well to keep in mind the fact that there is another small piece of land that calls itself China; it is called Taiwan.

The Republic of China moved its Capital to Taiwan over 30 years ago when a group of Chinese left the mainland because they were extremely unhappy with the advent of a Communist government. This literal handful of Chinese people have made out of the Republic of China on Taiwan a prosperous, private enterprise economic area that is a model to all developing countries of the world. It has one of the highest gross national products in the world, and contributes over $5 billion annually to the United States.

It is very well that the Members of Congress keep this in mind as we will be asked to vote on different concessions from time to time involving Communist China. To forget a proven ally, a proven friend, and a proven economy on Taiwan would be pure foolishness on our part.

I ask that an article appearing in the Tuesday, May 1 issue of the Washington Times be printed in the Record.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Times, May 1, 1984]

TAIWAN THRIVES AS MAINLAND CHINA ECONOMY LIMPS

(By Edward Neilan)

TAIPEI, REPUBLIC OF CHINA.—Communist Chinese semantics has tried to create the impression that the mainland is a success story, while the offshore Republic of China on Taiwan is a failure, an outcast or simply an "obstacle" to world peace.

In reality the reverse is true, according to all economic signs.

The track record on the mainland reads like a compendium of failed programs, power struggles, inability to get an economic drive going and the built-in constraints of communism.

But on Taiwan, despite being dwarfed in size by the mainland, the island's 18 million people outproduce on a per capita basis the one billion people of communist China.

President Reagan was almost defensive in telling the mainland leaders and people that the United States would "stand by old friends," as if sentimental attachment were the only pull to continued relations with the Republic of China on Taiwan.

But there are much more than sentimental advantages for continued Washington-Taipei ties, says Robert Parker, an American lawyer here, past president of Taipei's American Chamber of Commerce and a contributor to formulation of the Taiwan Relations Act.

"Taiwan has its own merits to warrant continued strong U.S. ties," Mr. Parker says.

He notes that the Republic of China on Taiwan is no runt among nations—that it has a larger population than Greece, Sweden, Ireland or Austria, is larger than any country in the Middle East except Iran and Egypt, larger than all the countries in Central and South America except Brazil and Argentina and larger than Australia and New Zealand combined.

"In economic terms," Mr. Parker said, Taiwan is America's sixth largest trading partner—larger than France or Italy, any country in South America, Africa, Eastern Europe and Asia other than Japan."

Mr. Parker makes you sit up and take notice with these statistics: "The Republic of China's—or Taiwan's—trade with the United States is larger than the United States' trade with Communist China and Soviet Union combined."

This country has been so successful that it is both an embarassment and challenge to Peking. That is the nature of the "obstacle." In embattled El Salvador, Mr. Parker pointed out, Christian Democrat Jose Napoleon Duarte has articulated a vision of hope for his country: "We must do what Taiwan has done—if there is time." He knows that the republic of China on Taiwan is a role model for what a developing country can become.

Commentator Ni Su-Fei, writing in the current issue of the Free China Review Magazine published here, said it is the Peking regime that is the "odd man out" but it has managed to dupe the rest with words.

"Without the Republic of China on Taiwan, there would be no model nor proponent for a Chinese way to success, in the repressive ideology of a monolithic Peking regime which still aspires to be the sole mind, activator and voice for a billion plus people," Mr. Ni wrote. "While the surface propaganda aspects of the Reagan journey are, obviously, useful to Peking, it is nevertheless a certainty that there will be no communist ideological gain at all from the trip among either the American or Chinese people—indeed, quite the contrary."

The mainland regime's censorship of Mr. Reagan's speeches told the story. The U.S. supports the progress and liberalization of the Chinese people and society. But the United States does not support the communist trappings of the regime.

Popular support for America's China policy during the past dozen years has been based on two ideas: selling products to China's one billion and using China as a strategic counterweight to the Soviet Union.

Realistically, China's masses don't have the purchasing power to become genuine customers. India, a democracy, is closest to China in numbers of people, but they aren't big spenders either. The United States has never given India the big rush but continues to go berserk over the "potential" of selling to China.

Kĭhg-yuh Chang, director of the Institute of International Relations here, believes it will be the people of the mainland joining the Nationalist ideology rather than the other way around.

"When the present Peking regime tries to open up the economy, the cadres who enjoyed emperor-like status in their domains will resist and turn against the center," Mr. Chang said, "There are millions of them and they will fight all forms of democratization."

"Basically the feudal system is being perpetuated under the guise of communism." Mr. Chang said. "Most of the 10,000 students now studying in the United States are relatives of high officials. They will return home and take good jobs and they will be resented."

But Mr. Chang said the seeds of revolution against the communists are being planted by such study abroad. "Those young people will return to the drab mainland after two years in Los Angeles and San Francisco, shopping in supermarkers that are beyond the wildest dreams of mainlanders. They will insist on change.'

Mr. Chang, like many others, believes the urgency of Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping in wanting to "solve" the "Taiwan problem" is based on fears that the longer the issue waits the less likely reunification on communist terms will occur.●

FOSTERING EMPLOYEE SATISFACTION IN THE WORKPLACE

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, our Nation's corporations and small businesses have been facing tough times in recent years. Failing companies, low productivity, and worker discontent have marred our economic prosperity. There are a few exceptional companies, however, who have taken the initiative in tackling these problems, and have developed programs which eliminate worker burnout and high turnover rates, and, in the process, have increased their productivity.

According to the new book "The 100 Best Companies To Work for in America" by Robert Levering, Milton Moskowitz, and Michael Katz, the secret of their success is innovative management techniques, designed to make work more enjoyable by making employees feel like they are part of the team. According to a recent Washington Post article, though each company utilizes various methods of achieving greater productivity, the 100 best share at least the following characteristics:

First, they make workers feel as if they are part of the team, initiating worker-management discussions on various issues that affect employment and employment practices.

Second, they engender pride in workmanship, and always stress quality over quantity.

Third, they initiate profit-sharing programs, savings plans, and stock ownership in addition to the base salary.

Fourth, they minimize hierarchical distinctions by eliminating executive privileges such as special dining rooms or parking places, and so forth.

We in Maryland are proud of the two companies in our State which are included in the 100 best list. The McCormick Co. in Hunt Valley and the Preston Trucking Co. in Preston have utilized these techniques with exceptional results.

Productivity at Preston Trucking Co. has increased over 30 percent in the last 4 years. Worker morale is at an all-time high. At a time when trucking companies are facing severe losses and stiff competition, the Preston Trucking Co. is flourishing. Officials with the company attribute their success to reflective listening, early conflict resolution, easily accessible lines of communication, and nonaggressive approaches to problem solving. Preston was also one of the first trucking companies to use the Scanlon plan: The distribution of any profits derived from increased productivity.

The McCormick Co. attributes its success in part to the establishment of junior boards of directors. Fifteen boards of about 20 members each contribute to diversity of ideas and a sense of participation in the management of the company. Permanent employees are rarely laid off, and employees are encouraged to bid for better jobs within the company structure.

My hope is that companies across America, large and small, will follow the example of these companies, and help to get American industry back on its feet again. It has always been my belief that American workers can make contributions above and beyond what is expected if they are brought into a full partnership with management and perceive themselves as having a real interest in the success of the enterprise. I am most pleased that these Maryland firms are helping to pave the way for a more productive and committed work force.●

KEEPING OUR PROMISE TO TAIWAN

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I think most Americans look forward to better trade relations with the People's Republic of China and the promise such trade relations might hold for American export industries.

At the same time, I think that most Americans do not want to go back on any of our stated commitments to our ally and already strong trading partner, Taiwan. Certainly, this is President Reagan's position. He made this clear last Wednesday when he assured Taiwanese officials that the Taiwan Relations Act is still good law. As he noted in a recent interview with journalists from China, "we are not going to turn our backs on old friends in order to strengthen or make new friends."

In the case of Taiwan, this reflects good sense. Taiwan, after all, conducts much more trade with the United States than does the People's Republic of China. Also, the United States has had constant, good relations with the Republic of China far longer than we have had relations with the People's Republic of China.

In Taiwan we have a good friend. Certainly, we should do nothing in our pursuit of better trade relations with the People's Republic of China to prejudice the freedom and independence of the people under the Republic of China. This is the promise we must keep. To do otherwise would be a disturbing precedent for all of our loyal friends throughout the world.●

WHO REALLY WANTS NEGOTIATIONS IN NICARAGUA?

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, we learned on Easter Sunday that all nine of Nicaragua's Catholic bishops signed a pastoral letter to the leaders of the Nicaraguan Government concerning the need for political dialog among all Nicaraguans. In brief, the letter said, and I quote: "Dialog is necessary if we are to have social peace."

This statement would not seem objectionable or inflammatory, yet that is exactly how the Sandinista leadership of Nicaragua responded to it. In past months, Junta Coordinator Daniel Ortega and Interior Minister Tomas Borge had loudly and repeatedly stated that they favor dialog with Nicaragua's opposition and that they support free elections. Their response to the pastoral letter seems to put the lie to their earlier claims of willingness to engage in serious and comprehensive negotiations with opposition elements. For example, Minister Borge states: "This is a criminal suggestion * * *. The Pastoral letter seeks confrontation and violates the law of the land." For his part, Mr. Ortega says that this letter "supports the plans of aggression of the North American administration against the Nicaraguan people" and that it is part of a "plan of internal destabilization."

My question would simply be this: What type of dialog do the Sandinistas really want? My answer would be: None, unless the opposition subordinates itself to the control of the Nicaraguan state. In Nicaragua, opposition is tolerated only to the extent that it provides window dressing. Any person or group with a claim on the affections of large numbers of Nicaraguans, or with the potential to make the Junta give up its privileged status while ordinary Nicaraguans do without, is considered intolerable by the Sandinistas. In short, anybody loyal to the original goals of the revolution is now viewed as a threat by Nicaragua's new autocrats.

There is more than enough blame to go around for this situation, and we in the United States certainly must recognize our share of responsibility for it. Nevertheless, the greatest blame for the tragedy of Nicaragua must rest with the Sandinista leadership. The Sandinistas made many pledges when they seized power in 1979: Establishment of a pluralistic democracy; creation of a mixed economy; protection of each citizen's rights from arbitrary infringement by the Government; and development of an independent and truly nonalined Nicaragua. These are all admirable goals and ones which merit our support. Unfortunately, the Sandinista has repudiated these pledges and has sought to impose a dictatorship upon the Nicaraguan people.

It appears that the Sandinista leadership has decided to renew its policy of confrontation with the Catholic Church. Some of us are aware of their policy of harassment of church leaders practiced through 1981–82. As many may remember, Pope John Paul II visited Nicaragua about 1 year ago and was heckled and threatened by numerous Sandinista militants. For a time, the Sandinistas relaxed some of the constraints imposed upon the Catholic Church and seemed to act in a more conciliatory manner toward the church. However, the Sandinistas seem to have given up on negotiations with Catholic leaders. This is particularly unfortunate because the church is uniquely suited to serve as a mediator among the various factions that have embroiled Nicaragua in civil war. And let there be no mistake about this, Nicaragua is in the midst of a civil war.

Sandinista policies since 1979 have polarized and alienated numerous segments of Nicaraguan society, including the Catholic Church, the middle class, and the various Indian minority groups of the Mosquitia region. To give you a brief illustration of the level of disenchantment within Nicaragua today, we need look at the number of Nicaraguan refugees in neighboring countries: In Panama, 20,000 Nicaraguans; in Costa Rica, at least 30,000 Nicaraguans; and in Honduras, 25,000 Nicaraguans. As you can imagine, these 75,000 Nicaraguans place a tremendous burden on these neighboring countries. Nevertheless, Nicaragua's Government denies that a refugee problem even exists or that its policies may have caused this exodus of its citizens.

We must also remember as well that much of the Nicaraguan opposition movement is not composed of former adherents of Anastasio Somoza's dictatorship. Yet, this is how the opposition to the Sandinistas is often portrayed in our press. Leaders of the opposition such as Violeta Chamorro, Alfonso Robelo, Arturo Cruz, and Eden Pastora fought Somoza's dictatorship of the right and now oppose the directorate's dictatorship of the left. These people all worked for the implementation of the original goals of the Nicaraguan revolution, yet the regime in which many of them served has now branded them as traitors.

I do not believe that men and women like Robelo and Chamorro are anything but loyal Nicaraguan patriots who also fervently believe in democracy and human rights. Various opposition leaders, both inside and outside Nicaragua, have repeatedly called for a comprehensive effort to peaceably resolve the civil war in Nicaragua. Sadly, the Sandinista directorate has given little more than lip service to these requests for conciliation. I have spoken with a number of individuals in the opposition and they all voice a willingness to open a political dialog with the Sandinista regime. To date, the Sandinistas have indicated that they will not negotiate with any individual who has taken up arms against the Nicaraguan Government and that they may not even permit the participation of many domestic opposition leaders in that country's upcoming elections.

In closing, I would echo the Washington Post's editorial of April 27 in saying that Messrs. Ortega and Borge and the rest of the Sandinista directorate should realize that peace will not return to Nicaragua unless there is a genuine peace dialog among all Nicaraguans. The Nicaraguans demand such a broad-based dialog in El Salvador—they should reciprocate in their country and set a good example for the rest of the Central American region by observing the call for peace of Nicaragua's Catholic Church.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the pastoral letter and articles on the controversy from the Washington Post and the New York Times be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

PASTORAL LETTER ON RECONCILIATION FROM THE NICARAGUAN BISHOPS

To the priests and deacons in our dioceses:
To members of religious orders:
To catechists and bearers of the Word:
To our brothers and sisters in the apostalic lay movements:
To principals, teachers, and students in Catholic schools:
To all our beloved faithful:

Grace and peace from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord.

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS: At this solemn Easter celebration, the ultimate expression of God's love for mankind through the redemption, we invite you to share more fully in the spiritual wealth of the Holy Year, which will be extended in Nicaragua by a special concession from Pope John Paul II until June 17, 1984, the feast of the Holy Trinity.

This extension and the urgent need in our society for sincere and brotherly reconciliation through individual conversion have moved us to send you this exhortation.

I. DOCTRINAL SECTION

1. Sin, the root of all evil

When sin came into the world, all things were changed profoundly; the soil yielded brambles; civilizations and institutions passed away; man himself rebelled against his fellow men, and the empire of tyranny and death began (cf. Gen. 3:16-19; 4:7-8)

Man, created in the image of God (Gen. 1:26) did not wish to acknowledge or glorify Him; man became vain in his imagination, and his foolish heart was darkened (Rom. 1:21). There were also those who, like Satan, disguised themselves as angels of light to deceive others and lead them to perdition. (cf. II Corinthians 11:14-15). A poorly understood anthropocentrism plunged mankind into the heavy bondage of sin.

2. Redemption by Christ

Christ, by His death and resurrection, has reconciled us to God, to ourselves, and to our brothers and sisters, has freed us from the bondage of sin (cf. Col. 1:20-22, Cor. 5:18), and has given His church the mission of transmitting His message, pardon, and grace (cf. Mt. 29:18-20, Mk. 15-20).

All this should be for us a call to conversion; it should be the beginning of a radical change in spirit, mind, and life [1] (cf. John Paul II, Bull, "Open the Doors to the Redeemer,", No. 5).

There are three aspects to this conversion which redeems our individual and collective lives:

(A) We must avoid personal sin, any act that disrupts our baptismal alliance with God.

(B) We must banish any sinful attitudes from our hearts, that is, any habitual rejection, whether conscious or unconscious, of Christian standards and moral values.

(C) We must put an end to such sins of society as participation in injustice and violence.

3. Sin after the redemption

Nonetheless, sin has persisted in the world since our redemption by Christ, because:

(A) Man abuses his freedom and does not accept God's grace.

(B) Society has become secularized and is no longer oriented toward God; it does not heed the church, the universal sacrament of salvation, but considers it an alienating institution.

(C) At times it claims to accept Christ and His teachings, but it repudiates the church and thereby falls into the temptation of establishing other "churches" than the one founded by the apostles and their successors, the legitimate bishops.

(D) We forget that coexistence can only be based on an accurate perception of the individual as an intelligent, free, and religious human being, with rights and duties devolving from his very nature (cf. John XXIII, Enc. Pacem in Terris No. 9-10).

(E) Materialistic concepts of mankind distort the person and teachings of Christ, reduce man to merely physical terms without taking account of his spiritual nature, so he remains subject to physical forces called the "dialectics of history." And man, alienated from God and from himself, becomes disoriented, without moral and religious reference points, without a higher nature, insecure and violent.

II. OUR SITUATION

1. The problem of sin in the world

Pope John Paul II, in his message for the 17th World Day of Prayer for Peace on January 1, 1984, expressed his concern about the current world situation, a concern which we, too, share: "Peace is truly precarious, and injustice abounds. Relentless warfare is occurring in many countries, continuing on and on despite the proliferation of deaths, mourning, and destruction, without any apparent progress toward a solution. It is often the innocent who suffer, while passions become inflamed and there is the risk that fear will lead to an extreme situation."

2. In Nicaragua

A. Belligerent Situation

Our country, too, is plagued by a belligerent situation pitting Nicaraguan against Nicaraguan, and the consequences of this situation could not be sadder:

Many Nicaraguan youths and men are dying on the battlefields.

Many others look toward the future with the fear of seeing their own lives prematurely ended.

A materialistic and atheistic educational system is undermining the consciences of our children.

Many families are divided by political differences.

The suffering of mothers who have lost their children, which should merit our great respect, is instead exploited to incite hatred and feed the desire for vengeance.

Farmworkers and Indians, for whom the Church reserves a special love, are suffering, living in constant anxiety, and many of them are forced to abandon their homes in search of a peace and tranquility that they do not find.

Some of the mass media, using the language of hate, encourage a spirit of violence.

B. The Church

One, albeit small, sector of our Church has abandoned ecclesiastical unity and surrendered to the tenets of a materialistic ideology. This sector sows confusion inside and outside Nicaragua through a campaign extolling its own ideas and defaming the legitimate pastors and the faithful who follow them. Censorship of the media makes it impossible to clarify the positions and offer other points of view.

3. Foreign interference

Foreign powers take advantage of our situation to encourage economic and ideological exploitation. They see us as support for their power, without respect for our persons, our history, our culture, and our right to decide our own destiny.

Consequently, the majority of the Nicaraguan people live in fear of their present and uncertainty of their future. They feel deep frustration, clamor for peace and freedom. Yet their voices are not heard, muted by belligerent propaganda on all sides.

4. The root of these evils

This situation is rooted in the sin of each and every one, in injustice and oppression, in exploitative greed, in political ambition and abuse of power, in disregard for moral and religious values, in lack of respect for human dignity, in forgetting, abandoning, and denying God.

[1] Unless otherwise indicated, quotations throughout the letter have been translated without reference to any official English text.

III. RESPONSE OF THE CHURCH

1. Conversion and reconciliation

The Church ardently desires and encourages peace and tranquility and believes that there is only one path to that end, conversion. This means that we must all turn our eyes and heart to God, our Father, who through Christ offers us the true path to reconciliation, forgiveness, and peace.

"It is not behavior alone that needs to be changed, but the heart that guides our lives. At the community level it is important to examine ourselves as persons, as groups and social units, not only as victims but also as authors of certain collective deviations from God's plan, in order to implement together God's plan for constructive human endeavor." (cf. Peace and Conversion, a Pontifical document issued by the Commission on Justice and Peace at Rome on September 30, 1983.)

The entire universe is the object of redemption since it also reveals the glory of God and must be sanctified and consecrated to God (Cf. Vatican II, Const. Lumen Gentium, No. 34). Christ resurrected is at the center of history and of the world, leading us toward its full maturity and its final liberation from all the forces of evil (Cf. Vatican II, Const. Lumen Gentium, No. 48).

2. Confession: The path of conversion

John Paul II in his address on reform and holiness given at Rome on November 26, 1983, said: "To assist such conversion, the Lord instituted the sacrament of reconciliation. In it Christ Himself goes to meet the man oppressed by the awareness of his own weakness, He raises him and gives him the necessary strength to continue his path. With the sacrament the life of the Resurrected Christ enters the spirit of the believer, bringing forth renewed generosity of purpose and an enhanced capacity to live by the Gospel."

Jesus reconciled all things, bringing peace through the Cross (Col:20) and transmitted this power to His disciples (cf. Jn4:21, 13:34-35, 12-17).

Preparing to receive the benefits of the sacrament of confession is an important step in conversion. A sincere examination of our sins, self-criticism of our attitudes and our life, these reveal to us our faults and make us abhor sin which is an offense against God, an affront to the Church, and damage or injury to our neighbor. It encourages us to turn totally to God and to reform our lives, it brings us back to the Church and closer to our brothers.

3. Dialogue

The road to social peace is possible through dialogue, sincere dialogue that seeks truth and goodness. "That [dialogue] must be a meaningful and generous offer of a meeting of good intentions and not a possible justification for continuing to foment dissension and violence." (John Paul II, Greeting to Nicaragua, March 4, 1983)

It is dishonest to constantly blame internal aggression and violence on foreign aggression.

It is useless to blame the evil past for everything without recognizing the problems of the present.

All Nicaraguans inside and outside the country must participate in this dialogue, regardless of ideology, class, or partisan belief. Furthermore, we think that Nicaraguans who have taken up arms against the Government must also participate in this dialogue. If not, there will be no possibility of a settlement, and our people, especially the poorest among them, will continue to suffer and die.

The dialogue of which we speak is not a tactical truce to strengthen positions for further struggle but a sincere effort to seek appropriate solutions to the anguish, pain, exhaustion, and fatigue of the many, many people who long for peace, the many, many people who want to live, to rise from the ashes, to see the warmth of a smile on a child's face, far from terror, in a climate of democratic harmony.

The terrible chain of reactions inherent in friend-enemy dialectics is halted by the word of God, who demands that we love even our enemies and that we forgive them. He urges us to move from distrust and aggressiveness to respect and harmony, in a climate conducive to true and objective deliberation on our problems and a prudent search for solutions. The solution is reconciliation. (Cf. John Paul II, Peace and Reconciliation. Address by the Pope in El Salvador, March 6, 1983).

If we are not open to objective acknowledgment of our situation and the events that distress our people ideologically, politically, and militarily, then we are not prepared, in a true and Christian way, for reconciliation for the sake of the real, living wholeness of our nation.

Considering that freedom of speech is a vital part of the dignity of a human being, and as such is indispensable to the well-being of the nation inasmuch as a country progresses only when there is freedom to generate new ideas, the right to free expression of one's ideas must be recognized.

The great powers, which are involved in this problem for ideological or economic reasons, must leave the Nicaraguans free from coercion.

CONCLUSION

If we want our conversion to find true expression in the life of our national community, we must strive to lead lives worthy of the Gospel (cf. Ph 1:27, Ep 4:1), reject all lies, all harmful or offensive words, all anger and evil utterance, and be benevolent and forgive generously as God forgave us through Christ (cf. Ep 4:25-32, Co 13:12-14).

It behooves us to value each life as a gift of God, help the young to find meaning and value in their lives and prepare themselves for their future roles in society, forgive enemies and adversaries, facilitate the return of those who have left their country and welcome them with an open heart, free those imprisoned for ideological differences, create a climate of friendship and peace conducive to social harmony.

"In the great task of bringing peace and reconciliation to the nation, the family as the basic unit of society cannot be ignored. Nor can respect for its rights." (Cf. Gaudium et Spes N.52, quoted by John Paul II in his address to the bishops of El Salvador, February 24, 1984).

May the Holy Virgin, who played her part in our redemption with such exemplary fortitude, provide us with the necessary strength to perform our Christian duty of love and peace.

And may the Lord of Peace grant us all, always and in all our endeavors, the peace and tranquility which we seek (cf. 2 Th 3:16).

NICARAGUAN ASSAILS BISHOPS IN RENEWED CONFLICT

(By Richard J. Meislin)

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA, April 25.—A top Nicaraguan leader today condemned a call by the country's Roman Catholic bishops for talks with the opposition, saying that it was part of a "plan of internal destabilization."

The leader, Daniel Ortega Saavedra, coordinator of the Nicaraguan junta, charged that the nine bishops were "repeating the policy" of the Reagan Administration. He said their position, expressed in a pastoral letter, "supports the plans of aggression of the North American Administration against the Nicaraguan people."

Mr. Ortega's remarks, published in the official newspaper Barricada, reflected renewed frictions between the Sandinista Government and the Roman Catholic Church. The way in which the issue has developed, meanwhile, demonstrated the manner in which information and opinion reaches the Nicaraguan public.

The pastoral letter, signed by Nicaragua's nine Catholic bishops, was issued Easter Sunday. It said that "dialogue is necessary if we are to have social peace" and added:

"All Nicaraguans, within the country or abroad, without regard to their ideology, class or political affiliation, should participate in this dialogue. Moreover, we believe that those Nicaraguans who have taken up arms against the Government should participate."

PUBLICATION BARRED AT FIRST

The position of the bishops ran counter to that of the Government, which has repeatedly vowed not to negotiate with the anti-Sandinista rebels. Mr. Ortega said that is was "totally absurd" that the bishops, who he said "have rejected a dialogue with the people and the revolution, on the other hand want us to have a dialogue with the assassins."

The Government initially responded to the pastoral letter by barring its publication. On Monday, the official Sandinista newspaper—the only paper to mention the letter—published a sarcastic article about the bishops' call under the headline, "Bishops ask 'pardon' for the Somocistas."

Much of the criticism in the article stemmed from the bishops' lack of emphasis on outside causes for Nicaragua's problems. The Government regularly asserts that the guerrilla opposition lacks any internal support and functions only because of United States backing.

The pastoral letter said that it was "not always honest to justify internal aggressions and violence on agressions from outside." But it criticized the superpowers as well, saying that "they see us as an object to support their power, without respecting our people, our history, our culture and our right to decide our own destiny."

ON THE SIDE OF IMPERIALISM

Although the text of the letter had not yet been made public, Tuesday morning's issue of Barricade quoted the mother of a young man who died in the 1979 uprising here as having asked "How is it possible that the bishops propose that the people talk to the assassins?" She said the bishops were "on the side of imperialism, of the traitors."

Other mothers of fallen soldiers, whom the newspaper described as representing "moral authority," were quoted in a similar vein.

The same day's issue of El Nuevo Diario, another pro-Government newspaper, published an editorial roundly denouncing the pastoral letter and asking, among other things: "Can the authors of this document present one single mother of a martyr who would confirm that she has been manipulated to hate and seek revenge?"

El Nuevo Diario's editorial appeared directly under a photograph of President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, frolicking in the waters off Hawaii, over the caption, "Happy while the world burns." Beside the editorial was another article reporting the statement of Bishop Paul Moore, Jr. of the Episcopal Diocese of New York on Sunday that the Reagan Administration's Central American policy was "illegal, inconsistent, ill-advised and immoral."

FULL TEXT IS PUBLISHED

The full text of the pastoral letter appeared in Tuesday evening's issue of La Prensa, an independent newspaper that frequently spars with the Government.

It was preceded by an explanation from the Interior Ministry, which said that it was authorizing the publication "because of superior orders," even though the letter "contains violations of the laws of our country and positions in open confrontation with the revolution."

It added that it was for the people to "judge the positions of the top ecclesiastical hierarchy."

La Prensa, which has refused to publish several times rather than submit to Government censorship, has published no reaction or commentary about the pastoral letter.

SANDINISTA OFFICIAL ASSAILS BISHOPS' BID FOR TALKS

(By Bernd Debusmann)

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA, April 25.—Interior Minister Tomas Borge has branded as "criminal" a call by the country's Roman Catholic bishops for peace talks, rejecting any negotiations with U.S.-backed insurgents.

"We will never negotiate with the Contras," Borge said in an interview, using the term for right-wing rebels armed and financed by the CIA.

In a pastoral letter read in most of Nicaragua's churches over Easter, the nine Roman Catholic bishops suggested a dialogue for peace involving all Nicaraguans, including those "who have risen in arms against the government."

"This is a criminal suggestion," Borge said. "The pastoral letter seeks confrontation and violates the law of the land."

The rebel forces includes senior former members of ousted dictator Anastasio Somoza's National Guard, the only Nicaraguan organization which was formally declared illegal after Somoza's removal in a broad-based popular revolution spear-headed by the Sandinista National Liberation Front.

Borge, the only surviving founder-member of the front, said the bishops' pastoral letter was "more radical in its anti-Nicaraguan tone . . . than even statements by Kirkpatrick."

Jeane Kirkpatrick, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, is seen here as a leading proponent of military force to oust the nine Sandinista commanders who effectively run Nicaragua.

Diplomats said the pastoral letter and the Sandinistas' angry reaction to it could herald a new round of confrontation between the church hierarchy and the state.

Church-state tensions were thrown into sharp focus a year ago when Pope John Paul II visited here and harshly criticized the Sandinista-promoted "popular church," whose priests see no conflict between Christianity and left-wing revolution.

The bishops' pastoral letter at Easter said, "The road through which social peace can be achieved necessarily leads through dialogue. All Nicaraguans inside and outside the country should participate in this dialogue, regardless of ideology, class or party position. What is more, we feel that Nicaraguans who have risen in arms against the government must participate."

The Associated Press reported another development from The Hague:

Former State Department legal adviser Abram Chayes told the World Court today "there can be no doubt" that the United States is violating the charter of the United Nations by supporting rebels fighting the Nicaraguan government.

Chayes spoke on behalf of Nicaragua during the first day of preliminary hearings on a complaint Nicaragua filed against the United States. Both Nicaragua and the United States are arguing their cases in the preliminary hearings, although the United States has rejected the court's jurisdiction.

The court granted a one-day recess requested by the U.S. delegation to allow it to "prepare its case," a court source said.

ADVICE FOR MANAGUA

President Reagan has been receiving much good advice, from Congress and, especially generously, from the press, on the subject of Nicaragua. But Nicaragua needs some good advice, too, if Central America is eventually to settle down. It could most usefully come from the Willy Brandt-type social democrats in Europe and those liberals elsewhere who tend to coddle the Sandinistas, and from the larger group that has faulted the interventionist aspects of President Reagan's policy. We have in mind two points.

The ruling Sandinistas stand strongly behind the demand of the Salvadoran guerrillas to be admitted to a "power-sharing" process in El Salvador. In Nicaragua, however, the nine comandantes reject any thought of admitting Nicaraguan guerrillas to power-sharing or even to the elections the regime now plans on Nov. 4. After the country's Catholic bishops called for a peace dialogue involving all Nicaraguans, including those "who have risen in arms against the government"—such dialogue is the left's constant appeal in El Salvador—the Sandinista police chief denounced the call as "criminal." The Sandinistas insist they will not open their elections—elections they seem intent on running in the Soviet style anyway—to the Nicaraguan contras even if the guerrillas lay down their arms.

The Sandinistas, by way of seeking international support, are now broadcasting news of the considerable damage done by the contras. People are being killed in military engagements, but many of the targets are economic and civilian in character, and the results are commonly measured in dollar terms or in terms of hardships inflicted upon the population. The Sandinistas, of course, show no similar dismay over the substantially greater damage done to economic and civilian targets by the guerrillas whose operations they encourage in El Salvador. Some on the left suggest it is all right to destroy, say, a coffee plantation belonging to an "oligarch." This is rubbish. Peasants work on plantations; Nicaragua's friends in El Salvador have also shot up the bus fleet, which transports the poor.

There is great need for a single standard in judging political events in Central America. There is a need for it in Washington and a need for it in Managua, too.●

MARGARET HAZARD, A BORN DEMOCRAT

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I should like to share with my colleagues the sad news of the death of Margaret M. Hazard, the matriarch of Rhode Island's Democratic Party, who died on Sunday at the age of 101.

She cast her first vote for President in the 1924 election, when she voted a straight Democratic ticket—a practice she continued throughout her life.

Her formal involvement with the Democratic Party started in 1948 when she was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in Philadelphia and she has been a delegate to each one ever since.

The Democratic Party, both in Rhode Island and nationally, will miss her pioneering spirit, her wisdom, and her charm. I had looked forward to working with her once again at the 1984 Democratic Convention.

Regardless of political party affiliation, I know Rhode Islanders and citizens throughout the Nation join me in mourning her passing and in treasuring her legacy.

I should like to share with my colleagues a brief tribute to her legacy that appeared in the Providence (R.I.) Journal on May 1, 1984, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

MARGARET HAZARD, SPIRITED PUBLIC SERVANT

The Democrats will have to get along without Margaret M. Hazard at their national convention this summer in San Francisco. It will be no small loss: the tiny North Kingstown woman probably would have given the party the distinction of being first with a centenarian in its delegate ranks. Mrs. Hazard was a regular since 1948 (except in 1972) at such presidential-nomination sessions. Despite advancing age, she was always a spirited participant, just as she was in Rhode Island political affairs.

"Aunt Margaret," as she was known within the party, was wooed biennially by candidates for the Democratic state ticket. In earlier days, during her half-century on the party's state committee, her support carried special weight. As a deputy clerk for decades of the old district court in Wickford and Wakefield, her endorsement just about put South County's imprimatur on an aspirant. As she became an elder stateswoman, a recommendation from Aunt Margaret still was sought, for its sentimental as well as practical value.

One convention at which she showed her mettle was the 1968 embroglio in Chicago, the scene of violent Vietnam War protests. Tightly guarded buses transported delegates from their hotels to the Stockyards convention center, which was ringed with fencing, and national guardsmen. Mrs. Hazard, then 85, took all the turmoil in stride. Though the security measures didn't deliver delegates back to bed until well after midnight, she was invariably first on line each morning for the return trip to the arena, meantime soothing colleagues concerned about their safety.

Probably the only thing that could have kept her from San Francisco this July was her death, which occurred Sunday at age 101. To the very end, Aunt Margaret remained the darling of state politicians—Republicans, too. Her charm as well as her longevity had put her above partisanship. All will miss her.●

HOME HEALTH CARE

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, my colleagues and I have had many discussions about community-based services and their importance in the care of frail elderly and disabled. I know that many other Senators share my interest and support for these services. I was therefore pleased to learn that a home health agency from my home State of Ohio, the Visiting Nurse Service (VNS) of Toledo, was recently chosen the agency of the month by the National Association for Home Care.

The Toledo VNS was founded in 1902 and incorporated in 1908 as the Toledo District Nurse Association (TDNA). For more than 80 years the agency has provided nursing, home health, and therapeutic services. It currently makes 50,000 home visits a year, and in 1982, the VNS/TDNA provided care to 3,763 individuals.

Home health services are particularly vital for the elderly, who often suffer from multiple chronic conditions which severely limit their ability to care for themselves. Once stabilized through the services of agencies like the VNS/TDNA, these individuals are often able to remain at home. The VNS/TDNA also assists families caring for young children or adults who would otherwise require hospitalization or prolonged institutionalization.

In the past I have sponsored legislation to extend the services of home health agencies and have supported resolutions recognizing the importance of these valuable programs. This includes measures such as National Nurse Recognition Day on May 6 which acknowledges one of the health professionals so responsible for the success of home care.

I ask that the article, "Visiting Nurse Service of Toledo—Eighty-three Years of Caring" from the April issue of Caring be printed in the RECORD so my colleagues can share in my appreciation for this fine organization.

The article follows:

VISITING NURSE SERVICE OF TOLEDO—EIGHTY-THREE YEARS OF CARING

The Visiting Nurse Service of the Toledo District Nurse Association (VNS/TDNA) has been caring for elderly and disabled persons for over eighty-three years. During that time they've given 4.3 million home visits to needy persons.

HISTORY

The agency was originally founded in 1901 by two philanthropic women's groups in Toledo, Ohio—the Thalian Society and the Kings Daughters. The first nurse, Margaret Edmond, was hired in 1901 at $50/month and operated out of the local Humane Society office. In 1902, the Visiting Nurse Aid Society was finally founded. In 1908 the nursing service of the Kings Daughters and Visiting Nurse Aid Society were incorporated as the Toledo District Nurse Association (TDNA).

In 1960, TDNA and the Public Health Nursing Program of the City of Toledo combined to form what was then called Community Nursing Services. With increasing budget problems for the City of Toledo in the late 1970s, the city gradually withdrew its staff and support to the combination and, in late 1980, the combination arrangement was ended. TDNA, the survivor, began using the name "Visiting Nurse Service" in addition to its original title as incorporated. The ending of the combination agreement resulted in the termination of the agency's school nursing program and some related services.

OPERATIONS

VNS/TDNA's annual number of home visits peaked at about 63,000 in 1978 and has stabilized at about 50,000 in 1982 and 1983. In 1982, the 49,778 visits covered 3,763 persons. About 55 percent of the clients were 65 years of age or older, and about 18 percent were 19 years of age or younger. The bulk of the clients (76.6 percent) were referred from hospital with ten percent being referred by agency staff and 7.4 percent by physicians.

Medicare accounted for the major part of the agency's income (60 percent) with trust/investment income being twelve percent, private insurance—eleven percent, United Way—seven percent, Medicare—four percent, and self-pay, grants and miscellaneous income accounting for two percent each. Agency expenditures, as with most home health agencies, reflect the labor-intensive nature of home care. The agency has 84 full-time and part-time employees and about seven therapists on contract. Sixty-three percent of all expenditures went for salaries, sixteen percent for payroll taxes/health and retirement benefits, twelve percent for contract services, three percent for rent and utilities, two percent for transportation, and four percent for other.

The core of the agency's program is a traditional Medicare-certified program providing home care services to the sick elderly and disabled persons. VNS/TDNA also has maternity, communicable disease, and health promotion programs.

The most unique program may be the agency's "60-Plus Home Health Maintenance Program" which is jointly funded by the United Way and the Area Agency on the Aging with Federal Older Americans Act funds. The "60-Plus" program patients are seen at no charge by a nurse and at clinic sites throughout the city. The budget for this service is about $150,000 per year. The program is in two parts: a clinic program, at twelve sites, serving 874 clients in 1983, and a home maintenance/followup program, serving 450 clients, primarily the frail elderly.

The goals of the program are:

Maintain a level of functioning with adequate support systems to allow independent living in a person's own familiar surroundings.

Prevent persons from becoming more severely impaired, therefore requiring more intensive level of services.

Prevent complications or acute episodes requiring hospitalization.

Enhance the continuity of care as needs of the clients change or become more apparent.

Under the program, a nurse will make an initial visit to do the following:

Assess abilities to perform activities of daily living, overall health condition, environment, support systems, access to an adequacy of medical care, etc.

Identify health care and health-related needs.

Provide nursing intervention to assist persons to make realistic plans around their individual needs. This might indicate the need to contract their physician, aid in finding a physician, or simply refer to other available community services agencies for appropriate assistance, etc.

Evaluate the effectiveness of the intervention; i.e., follow up on the outcome.

If the nurse determines further visits are warranted, the following additional services are available:

Teaching regarding good health practices, normal changes occuring in the older person, etc.

Monitoring of health conditions to detect new problems or changes in frequency of existing problems.

Instructing in relation to the client's medical plan of treatment to increase knowledge of special diets, medications, activities, and disease process.

Counseling in regard to options for health care with accent on client choice and decision-making.

Referring to other health and/or social service agencies, as needed, such as care-of-the-sick services at homedelivered meals, etc.

THE PEOPLE

VNS/TDNA is guided by its Executive Director, Robert "Chip" Liversidge, Jr., and board of trustees President Mr. S. Orrick Jennings. Mr. Liversidge has been the agency's Executive Director since 1978 and only the ninth executive director in the agency's 83 year history. He has a masters in business administration from George Washington University and a bachelor's degree from Cornell University.

In addition to running his agency, Mr. Liversidge is a well-known and active professional at the national level. He currently serves both as Secretary of the Board of the National Association for Home Care (NAHC) and President of the Board of the newly-founded Foundation for Hospice and Homecare. He is a past president of the former National Association of Home Health Agencies (NAHHA) and former Vice-Chairman of the NAHC Board.

At the state level, Mr. Liversidge is a past president of the Maine Association of Home Health Agencies and served as chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Ohio Council of Home Health Agencies.

Mr. Liversidge's 84 employee staff is coordinated by a six member executive staff which includes; Jeanne Johnston, RN, BSN, MPH (deputy director), Janet Blaufuss, RN, BSN (director of home health services), Barbara Cook, MPA (director of development), Judith King, RN, BSN, MBA (controller), Nan Pawlaczyk (office manager), and Dorothy Siebert, RN, BSPHN (director of quality assurance).

The Board of Trustees headed by Mr. Jennings also includes as officers: Mrs. Robert Younger (Vice President), Mr. James J. Secor (Treasurer), Mrs. Russell Berman (Recording Secretary), and Mrs. Patrick Murlow (Corresponding Secretary). Mrs. Berman's husband is President of Ohio Citizen's Bank and Mr. Secor's grandmother (Mrs. Jay Secor) was the first president of the agency's Board, serving from 1902-1907. Another Trustee, John Gibbs, MD, heads the agency's Medical Advisory Committee and is Chief of Staff at Toledo Hospital.

THE CARING TOUCH

The teamwork of the executive staff, employees, trustees, and client families results in continuation of an 83-year caring tradition for VNS/TDNA clients. Some of the personal results of this teamwork are described in the special writeup of case histories accompanying this article.

Such care has earned the VNS/TDNA plaudits from clients and professional colleagues as well. Dr. Paul Miller, Cardiology Fellow at the Medical College of Ohio, wrote the agency in August 1983:

"I wanted to thank all the nurses at the Toledo Visiting Nurses' Association for the tremendous effort and care they have given the patients I have worked with at the Medical College clinic over the past three years.

During the medicine residency, I have found even the best laid-out therapeutic plans could be quickly destroyed when the patients were discharged if their social problems and education about their disease was not also planned for. I was continually amazed at the resourcefulness the nurses demonstrated in acquiring supplies, arranging for transportation, increasing the patient's ability to remain functional and in educating entire families about diseases and the health-care system."

An employer of a client wrote:

"Just a short note 'Unsolicited Testimonial' to thank you for the fine care given to my employee after his recent surgery and release from the hospital.

He had an excellent nurse, very compassionate and caring.

Mr. and Mrs. ( ) have only praise for her. Never having had surgery before, the family was unaware that this fine service existed in the city of Toledo."

And the wife of another client wrote in February 1983:

"Thanks, and we commend your services which were given to my husband the past six weeks. I found our nurse efficient and concerned with our particular problems. She made many helpful suggestions.

The aide was also a great help to me. She was efficient and prompt and easy to have in my home."

CARING is proud to salute the Visiting Nurse Service of the Toledo District Nurse Association for establishing such a fine caring tradition.●

TAX FREEDOM DAY

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the taxpayers of our Nation have cause to celebrate. Today marks the arrival of Tax Freedom Day, the day average taxpayers stop working for the Government and begin earning for themselves and their families.

Economists at the Tax Foundation, a Washington-based tax watchdog organization, report that Americans have been working from January 1 until today to satisfy tax obligations owed to Federal, State, and local governments if every dollar earned this year had gone to the tax collector.

For the second year in a row, Tax Freedom Day falls on May 1. However, taxpayers will actually have worked an extra day—122 instead of 121—since 1984 is a leap year. That additional day is needed, the foundation reports, despite a slight drop in the Federal tax bite that resulted from passage of President Reagan tax cut proposals in 1981—or, I should say, the portion of the tax cut left after increases in payroll tax. What Uncle Sam leaves in taxpayers' pockets, State and local governments take out, plus a little more.

Mr. President, for workers who put in an 8-hour day, it will take 2 hours and 40 minutes to pay the average tax bill. Of that, 1 hour and 43 minutes will be for Uncle Sam and the rest for State and local governments.

Mr. President, a milestone in tax history will occur this year. For the first time ever, total tax receipts will exceed $1 trillion. Yet, unless Congress puts a stop to its wasteful and reckless spending practices, it will again manage to spend far more than its share of that amount.

Last week Senators had an opportunity to significantly reduce Federal spending by cutting funds for all Federal programs except social security, medicare, and defense, yet only 26 of my colleagues supported the plan. If adopted, it would have saved the taxpayers over $200 billion in 3 years.

There will no doubt be other opportunities this week and later in the year for Senators to cut spending and reduce the size of Government. As the options are considered, I urge my colleagues to keep in mind the working men and women who pick up the tab for the costly Government spending programs Congress authorizes and funds. In terms of Tax Freedom Day next year and beyond, we ought to think of rolling back the clock.

Mr. President, the Tax Foundation has furnished me with several tables which illustrate the tax burden on families. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The tables follow:

ELECTION IN PANAMA

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the pivotal and important nation of Panama is about to complete the difficult transition from military rule to democratically elected civilian government this Sunday. For the first time in 16 years, the citizens of Panama will once again be exercising their constitutional right to elect a President through their popular will and I congratulate them on this action. The election offers the opportunity for the people of Panama to establish a civilian government which will be especially responsive to their hopes and aspirations for tranquility and economic well-being.

The election is also important in the context of the turmoil that we are witnessing today in Central America. A democratic election in Panama will serve as a symbol and a beacon of hope for the people of Central America who struggle for peace. A strong civilian government, supported by the military institution that ruled the country for the past 16 years, will certainly offer inspiration for the people of El Salvador, who also will elect their President on Sunday, and for the people of Nicaragua, where elections will be held in November. A democratic election in Panama also will strengthen the Contadora process as Panama's civilian leadership will be able to work for peace in the name of the people.

It is with great satisfaction that I recall the days of the debate and the passage of the Panama Canal treaties in the Senate. That was certainly an important milestone. That is exactly what this coming election offers. The election of Sunday, May 6, symbolizes the hopes and aspirations of the proud people of Panama for a truly democratic government and a bright future.●

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, at a time when education in our country is the occasion of so much attention, it is indeed a pleasure to praise the achievements of a remarkable educator, Miss Helen Stevens. On June 10, after an unprecedented 49 years of distinguished service to education, Miss Stevens will retire from the Gilman School in Baltimore, Md. Over the course of the last half century, she has been a gifted teacher of both young students and their teachers. In addition, she has served as director of admissions for the Gilman Lower School and has been the adviser and confidant of four headmasters.

Helen Stevens came to the Gilman School in 1935 as a young graduate of Penn State to serve as a second grade teacher and as an inspiring instructor in music and drama. While actively teaching, she continued her studies in graduate work at the University of Maine, the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore, and the Philadelphia Conservatory of Music and went on to receive her masters in education at the Johns Hopkins University.

Over the years she assumed additional responsibilities. She shaped the language arts and reading and study skills program for the lower, middle, and upper schools at Gilman, programs which bear her stamp to this day. From 1963–80, she went on to help fashion the Gilman summer school program, which is an important resource for the entire public and private school population in the Baltimore area.

So successful were her programs that she was invited to teach at the Johns Hopkins University; and for 17 years she, in conjunction with Miss Mary York of the St. Louis Public School system, instructed graduate students and practicing teachers in language arts and communications skills. As a university instructor, Miss Stevens, through the thousands who took her course, influenced the reading, language arts, and study skills of many schools, both public and independent, all across the country.

Over the years, as her reputation grew as a thorough, compassionate, knowledgeable teacher and expert in the field of communication skills, she was increasingly called upon to advise developing teachers, to speak before education groups, and to chair meetings of such organizations as the National Council of Teachers of English, the Association of Supervision and Curriculum Development, and the International Reading Association.

In her half century at Gilman, Miss Stevens has helped to launch the academic careers of thousands of today's business, professional, and public service leaders in Maryland. So impressive and varied have Miss Stevens' contributions to the Gilman School been over the years that in June 1979 she became the first recipient of the Edward T. Russell Memorial faculty chair.

As she enters upon an active and busy retirement schedule already packed with long-planned projects, I am delighted to join with generations of students, faculty, and parents in saluting a magnificent teacher and educator from whose example young teachers everywhere can draw lasting inspiration.●

CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, the child support enforcement bill the Senate passed April 25 is an important piece of legislation. It should be of great benefit to the many children in our country who live in single-parent households and who depend on the financial support of the noncustodial parent to meet their basic needs. I want to emphasize that nothing in this legislation inhibits the States' efforts to enforce vigorously the visitation rights of noncustodial parents. To the contrary, the bill expresses the Senate's desire to encourage such enforcement.

Financial support is important, indeed critical to the well-being of children of divorced parents. But the emotional support of both parents is critical, too. The emotional support of the noncustodial parent must be guaranteed and supported by the States. The conscientious enforcement of visitation decrees helps to insure that this emotional support will be provided. We must guarantee financial stability; but we must also encourage the strong and continuing bond between the child and both parents. I hope the States will redouble their efforts in this area.●

SIXTH ANNIVERSARY OF COMMUNIST COUP IN AFGHANISTAN

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, April 27 marked the sixth anniversary of the coup in Afghanistan which brought a Communist regime to power in Kabul. The coup, known locally as the Saur revolution, launched a series of events leading up to the 1979 Soviet invasion and the ongoing tragedy in Afghanistan today.

This tragic anniversary coincided with a major Soviet offensive against the freedom fighters in the Panjsher Valley. This fertile and strategically important valley has been in the hands of the freedom fighters since the Soviet invasion. In the past, Soviet forays into the valley have met fierce resistance and, following Soviet withdrawal, the freedom fighters have quickly reestablished their control. This time the Soviets apparently intend to pacify the Panjsher by killing everyone in it. Day after day, for the past week, Soviet bombers have been carpet bombing the entire valley. This massive air attack does not distinguish between military objectives and the many civilians in the valley. The carpet bombing of the Panjsher is barbaric; it is also in keeping with the forces unleashed by the Saur revolution.

Six years after the Communist coup in Afghanistan, the resistance of the Afghan people continues unabated. As recent events in the Panjsher Valley demonstrate, the Afghan people pay a terrible price for their determination to be free. Nothing, however, more conclusively demonstrates the failure of the Communist coup in Afghanistan than the events in the Panjsher Valley.●

NOTICE OF DETERMINATION BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS

● Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it is required by paragraph 4 of rule 35 that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this notice of a Member and Senate employees who propose to participate in a program, the principal objective of which is educational, sponsored by a foreign government or a foreign educational or charitable organization involving travel to a foreign country paid for by that foreign government or organization.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Senator JIM SASSER and two members of his staff, Mr. John Callahan and Mr. Jerry Grant, to participate in a program in the Republic of China, sponsored by the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, from April 17–20, 1984.

The committee has determined that participation by Senator SASSER and Messrs. Callahan and Grant, in the program in Taiwan (Republic of China), at the expense of the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, to discuss United States-Taiwan relations, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.●

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the time for transaction of routine morning business be terminated.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

"SEC. . (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act (or any amendments made by this Act) or any provision of title XVIII of the Social Security Act, the 'applicable percentage increase' under section 1886(b)(3)(B) of the Social Security Act for any 12-month cost reporting period or fiscal year beginning on or after October 1, 1984, and before October 1, 1985, shall be zero percent.

"(b) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall report to the Congress within 45 days after the date of the enactment of this Act with respect to suggested methods for assuring that hospitals will not increase amounts charged to patients who are not entitled to benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act in order to compensate for amounts not paid by reason of the limitation under subsection (a).

"LIMITATIONS ON COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS

"SEC. . (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no increase shall be made in payments or benefit amounts under any provision of law which would otherwise require such increase to become effective during fiscal year 1985 as a result of changes in—

"(1) the Consumer Price Index (or any component thereof); or

"(2) any other index which measures costs, prices, or wages.

"(b) No person shall be entitled to any increase in payments or benefit amounts under any provision of law if payment thereof is denied by reason of this section.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any change in—

"(1) the Consumer Price Index (or any component thereof); or

"(2) any other index which measures costs, prices, or wages, which would have resulted in any increase in payments or benefit amounts during fiscal year 1985 but for the provisions of subsection (a) shall not be taken into account for purposes of determining any increase in payments or benefit amounts during fiscal year 1986 or any fiscal year thereafter.".

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, this amendment represents the best collective effort of a number of Members on both sides of the aisle to freeze the Federal budget for fiscal year 1985 at the 1984 level as our way of getting the Federal budget deficit under control.

This bipartisan budget freeze is not a cap on aggregate expenditures, for it looks at each program of the Federal budget and determines the way in which that program can or should be frozen. For instance, all discretionary spending, defense and nondefense alike, is frozen at the budget authority level rather than the outlay level. In defense, a budget authority freeze allows for $18 billion additional growth in outlays in fiscal year 1985 as a result of money already in the pipeline.

In benefit entitlements, we would freeze benefit levels, but not the number of individuals eligible.

In medicare, we would not cap total expenditures, but rather reimbursements to hospitals and physicians. In this amendment, however, only hospital reimbursements are addressed since the Senate has already passed a freeze in physician pay.

Overall, the budget freeze, all elements included, lowers spending by $27 billion in fiscal year 1985. It is the only spending reduction plan that makes any sense, given the revenue increases already passed in the Senate. In the freeze plan, defense savings and entitlement savings will each equal the revenue savings.

So from that standpoint, it is a very balanced approach, Mr. President.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Iowa. As I indicated in my earlier statement, it is not the intention of the leadership to proceed further on this question at this time.

The gift of language: That we can form sounds, and share what is on our minds with the assurance that if not shared in agreement is yet heard and understood.

CONVEYANCE OF SURFACE RIGHTS IN CERTAIN PARCELS OF LAND IN ELK HILLS NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVE

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 4968) to provide for the conveyance by the Secretary of Energy of surface rights to certain parcels of land located on Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 2 in the State of California on which private residences are located.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

H.R. 4968

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. (a) Subject to section 2, the Secretary of Energy (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") shall make the conveyances described in subsection (b) in accordance with this Act. The interest of the United States to be conveyed in each instance is all surface rights of the United States in the parcel of land involved.

(b) Each parcel of land referred to in a paragraph of this subsection is located on Naval Petroleum Reserve Numbered 2, in the northwest quarter of section 12, township 32 south, range 23 east, Mount Diablo Base and Meridian, Kern County, California, and is more particularly described in a survey dated November 5, 1982, on file in the Naval Petroleum Reserves in California Office of the Office of Naval Petroleum and Oil Shale Reserves of the Department of Energy. The conveyances referred to in subsection (a) are the following:

(1) Conveyance to Robert Lee Starkey of Taft, California, of the parcel of land known as lot 110, consisting of 0.41 acres, more or less.

(2) Conveyance to Seth Fowler of Glendale, California, of the parcel of land known as lot 118½, consisting of 0.34 acres, more or less.

(10) Conveyance to Ralph Elmer Knowles and Jenita Laura Knowles of Taft, California, of the parcel of land known as lot 900, consisting of 0.37 acres, more or less.

SEC. 2. As payment for the conveyance by the United States under a paragraph of section 1(b), the individuals referred to in such paragraph shall pay to the United States the amount determined by the Secretary to be the fair market value (as of the date of the conveyance) of the rights conveyed.

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary shall make a conveyance described in a paragraph of section

1(b) (subject to payment under section 2 with respect to such conveyance) not later than the end of the three-year period beginning on the date of the receipt by the Secretary of an application for such conveyance by the individuals referred to in such paragraph. Any such application shall be made in such form and in accordance with such procedures as the Secretary prescribes.

(b) Not later than the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall prescribe the form and procedures for an application under subsection (a) and shall notify each individual referred to in a paragraph of section 1(b) of such form and procedures. Such procedures shall require that any such application be submitted to the Secretary not later than the end of the 15-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. (a) Before the end of the 15-month period referred to in section 3(b), the Secretary may not take any action (including eviction) otherwise permitted under any law other than this Act with respect to a parcel of land described in section 1 in order to quiet title to such parcel. After the end of such period, the Secretary may not take any such action with respect to a parcel of land for which an application for conveyance has been submitted to the Secretary under section 3(a), but may take any such action with respect to any other parcel.

(b) Section 7431(a)(2) of title 10, United States Code, shall not apply to a conveyance under this Act.

(c) The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with a conveyance under this Act as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 5. For purposes of this Act, the term "surface rights" means all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of land, excluding (1) the title and interest of the United States in all oil, gas, coal, and other mineral deposits in such parcel, and (2) the right of the United States to prospect for, mine, and remove such oil, gas, coal, and other minerals.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4968, which appears before the House today on the Private Calendar. This legislation, introduced by our colleague from Alabama, is similar to H.R. 1863 which I introduced last session to resolve a small but difficult problem affecting some of my constituents.

H.R. 4968 will allow the Department of Energy to sell 10 parcels of surface rights to specific individuals owning homes on those lots. The bill requires that these parcels of surface rights, which lie within Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 2 in Kern County, Calif., be sold for their fair market value. This bill, like my earlier legislation, was developed with the Department of Energy's needs in mind and has the Department's full support.

I want to emphasize that H.R. 4968 completely protects our Government's Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 2 mineral resources. The bill specifically reserves mineral interests to the Federal Government. The Department of Energy will have complete access to these mineral resources through directional drilling.

This legislation is necessary, however, to prevent the Department of Energy from having to evict the occupants of these houses or enter into landlord-tenant relationships. The houses have been on NPR-2 land for decades because a lessee of the Navy's encouraged people to move onto this land. When a 1972 examination of Navy properties revealed the houses' existence, the Government was left in a difficult position: Either evict the occupants, causing substantial hardship for people who have lived there for years or who bought these houses in good faith, or take on the unacceptable administrative burdens of running a short-term leasing operation. H.R. 4968 provides a third, simpler option that is fair to both the occupants and our Government. It is an option we can all support.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. This concludes the call of the Private Calendar.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON WATER RESOURCES OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION TO SIT TODAY DURING 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Water Resources of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation be permitted to sit during the 5-minute rule in the House on Tuesday, May 1, 1984.

The minority has approved this request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

OLDER AMERICANS MONTH

(Mr. BIAGGI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, today we begin Older Americans Month in the United States—a month-long celebration saluting our Nation's greatest natural resource—our senior citizens.

We the Members of the 98th Congress can be proud of our accomplishments for senior citizens. We passed legislation which rescued the social security system and put it on a sound fiscal footing for the next 75 years. In the very near future, we will complete action on a 3-year reauthorization and expansion of another key program—the Older Americans Act.

Yet we have quite an unfinished agenda. We still have mandatory retirement in this Nation. True—we did raise the age from 65 to 70 for most types of employment—but that was more than 5 years ago. This means the older worker who faced mandatory retirement at 65 then—faces it at 70 now unless we pass legislation to once and for all end this unwarranted practice. We must also work to reform medicare before it collapses and before it drives more elderly deeper into poverty. Senior citizens pay 122 percent more in out-of-pocket expenses today than just 6 years ago. Medicare reform must include reducing costs and profits at the provider level and making the program more responsive to the real health care needs of the elderly.

As an original member of the House Select Committee on Aging, I am proud to mark the beginning of Older Americans Month. The words of Benjamin Franklin seem appropriate—"All would live long—but none would be old."

HYDROGENERATORS SHOULD NOT BE FORCED TO PAY FOR SULFUR OXIDE REDUCTIONS

(Mr. WEAVER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker I rise to ask that my name be removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 3400. I do so not because I am opposed to stringent acid rain control legislation; indeed, I want the strongest possible controls or incentives to curtail all forms of pollution which are presently doing the most serious injury to people and the environment. However, I do not believe the compromises included in H.R. 3400 are workable.

There is no question that acid rain is a serious problem both in the United States and in other parts of the world. Many of our forests are dying and many lakes and streams already are dead. We must act—and soon—to drastically reduce the massive quantities of sulfur and nitrogen oxides currently being poured into our atmosphere. There are other dangerous conditions, such as ozone, which also must be addressed.

There are problems associated with all forms of electric energy generation. Coal produces sulfur oxides that lead to acid rain, nuclear produces radioactive wastes, and hydro damages fish populations and habitats. While it is true that acid rain is a national problem, it is also true that radioactive wastes and destruction of our fisheries are national problems.

H.R 3400 exempts nuclear generating facilities from the acid rain fee because they already are assessed a 1-mill fee to help pay for radioactive waste disposal. Although there is no similar fee on hydrogenerators at this time, it would be equally unfair to assess them for the acid rain controls.

If the hydro facilities are to be taxed, the revenues should be applied directly to fisheries enhancement activities. I oppose the levy on hydropower for this reason.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that hydroelectric generators should be forced to pay for sulfur oxide reductions any more than I believe that coal-burning utilities or nuclear generators should be taxed to pay for installation of fish ladders and other mitigation devices at hydro facilities.

I will strongly support legislation to reduce sulfur and nitrogen oxide emissions. In fact, I believe that these emissions should be reduced in all 48 contiguous States, and not only in the Midwest and Eastern States. I cannot, however, in good conscience cosponsor a bill which taxes hydroelectric generators to pay for sulfur and nitrogen oxide reductions. For that reason, I ask that my name be removed from the list of cosponsors of H.R. 3400.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 3400

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my name removed as a cosponsor of the bill, H.R. 3400.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

WASTEFUL SPENDING IN GOVERNMENT

(Mr. REID asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, the horror story goes something like this: The Air Force spent $3,100 for three plastic caps to fit the legs of a stool. After this transaction was challenged the original seller found a commercial supplier that would sell the caps for 34 cents each.

Simply put the Air Force paid more than 3,000 times the price for what it later purchased for about $1.

This kind of abuse in military spare parts procurement is not unique. More and more it seems, supply and procurement officers place a priority on getting the part as quickly and easily as possible, despite the cost.

As a cosponsor of the Defense Spare Parts Procurement Reform Act, I am firmly committed to eliminating these intolerable abuses.

This bill, H.R. 5064 targets several areas of needed reform ranging from increased focus on competitive bidding to more efficient preprocurement planning.

Our defense procurement process must incorporate sound business practices. This bill will do just that by reducing costs while not weakening our Nation's defense.

COMPREHENSIVE NATURAL GAS LEGISLATION

(Mr. DURBIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, it is tempting, as winter draws to a close and temperatures moderate, to put off attempts to enact comprehensive natural gas legislation. However, I believe it is essential for Congress to take action to reduce the burden on natural gas consumers. Natural gas prices will inevitably skyrocket again next winter, particularly when the price of new gas is decontrolled as of January 1, 1985. Congress needs to act now to prevent another round of spiraling gas prices and the accompanying economic hardship.

The House is now in a good position to enact comprehensive natural gas legislation—better than it has been all session. The Energy and Commerce Committee has recently succeeded in forming a coalition that was able to report a natural gas compromise bill which has been referred to as the "Sharp/Madigan compromise." Since the bill is a compromise, it does not please everyone. However, its enactment would clearly result in lower prices for consumers—a goal we all support. Because it is a step in the right direction, I will do all I can to see that the legislation is considered by the full House.

I am introducing a bill today which I feel will strongly complement the goals of the Sharp-Madigan compromise. The bill has two sections, both of which are intended to ease the burden of natural gas prices on consumers and allow the light of public disclosure to play upon the ratemaking process.

The first section required the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to submit semiannual reports to the Energy Committees of the House and Senate. These reports are to compile and organize information filed by pipeline companies at FERC to make data on pipeline activities more readily available to Congress and the public. With enhanced accessibility to this information, Congress and the public will be able to exercise much greater scrutiny over pipeline activities.

In these semiannual reports, FERC will specifically be required to submit: A list of all purchase gas adjustments from all pipeline companies during the previous six months; a list of all rate changes, including the percent change; the status before FERC of each rate filing, and of those filings still pending from preceding periods; and a description of any action taken by FERC, or change in FERC policy, that has a positive or negative effect on consumer prices, along with an analysis of that effect.

The second section of the bill modifies FERC's current policy of granting interim rate hikes to pipeline companies subject to refund. The bill specifies that consumers will not be called on to pay the higher prices unless and until FERC has ruled on the lawfulness of that rate hike.

Under current law, FERC may suspend for 5 months any rate filing that will increase rates while the filing is being adjudicated. Pipelines submit rate filings to FERC whenever they wish to reflect any changes they face in their operating or fixed costs. If the case is not resolved at the end of the 5-month period, then the increase goes into effect subject to refund pending final resolution of the case.

Unlike rate filings, purchase gas adjustments are filed by pipeline companies every 6 months and reflect changes in the price of gas paid by pipelines. When a pipeline files a PGA, FERC suspends the rate hike for 1 day, after which it goes into effect subject to refund pending FERC's decision on the case. In the case of both a PGA and a rate filing, consumers may be forced to pay the higher prices before FERC has ruled on whether or not they are lawful.

My bill changes that provision both for rate filings and for PGA's. When a pipeline company submits a rate filing or a PGA, FERC must hold a hearing and make a decision on the lawfulness of that rate increase within a 5-month period if it receives a complaint about the increase from a State, a municipality, a State commission, or a gas distributing company. It may also decide to hold a hearing on its own initiative. During that 5-month period, FERC must suspend the rate hike so that it will not go into effect until FERC has ruled on whether it is lawful.

If FERC is unable to come to a decision within the 5-month period, for any reason, it may extend the period for an additional 5 months to conclude its deliberations. However, the suspension of the rate hike will continue during these extra months, with one exception. The rate hike may go into effect subject to refund only if the pipeline company can demonstrate to FERC that continued suspension of the rates will result in severe financial hardship. Regardless of whether the rates are suspended or go into effect subject to refund, FERC must make a final ruling by the end of the second 5-month period.

In sum, by requiring that pipeline companies prove that their increased costs are justified before they can begin to collect from consumers, and by increasing congressional and public access to FERC's information, I believe we can go a long way toward curbing natural gas price increases. I welcome the support of my colleagues for this legislation.

VAN P. SMITH—NEW CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD OF U.S. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

(Mr. SHARP asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to call to the attention of the House a very distinguished Hoosier, Van P. Smith, who this week is being inaugurated as the chairman of the board of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Smith is an accomplished businessman, now serving as the chairman and president of the Ontario Corp. in Muncie, Ind.

He is an active civic leader, ably contributing time and energy to many State and local causes.

He is a strong participant and leader in his church, St. Mary's.

He is a dedicated family man who with his very capable wife, Margaret, is rearing five outstanding children: Lynn, Mark, Paul, Susan and Victor.

Mr. Speaker, Van Smith's many friends wish him well as he undertakes his new responsibilities with the chamber. We are confident he will again distinguish himself and bring further honor to his home city and State.

MISSING CHILDREN TOLL-FREE HOTLINE

(Mr. LEWIS of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, last night NBC rebroadcast the document-drama "Adam."

This tragic story painfully depicts the suffering endured by one family following the abduction and murder of their only son.

At the conclusion of the program, a toll-free hotline allowed viewers to relay information concerning missing children.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to report that the toll-free hotline for this event was located at Florida's Department of Law Enforcement's missing children clearinghouse.

The Florida Department of Law Enforcement has been asked to continue manning the hotline for the next 3 months until the U.S. Department of Justice has fully established its National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that Florida's efforts set the example for all States to follow in locating missing children.

CATHOLIC CHURCH IN NICARAGUA QUESTIONS AUTHORITY OF COMMUNIST RULE

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, the Catholic Church in Nicaragua appears to be playing a role similar to that of the church in Poland: Questioning the authority of Communist rule. The massive demonstration of 100,000 Nicaraguans on Good Friday "in Solidarity with the church and in opposition to the Sandinista regime" points to the church as being a leading force in opposition to the Sandinistas.

It is strange that the American media, only too enthusiastic to cover the Solidarity movement in Poland and the church's role there, chose—with the single exception of ABC—to ignore this massive demonstration. Of equal concern are the reports of our own Embassy not adequately reporting the event. That omission notwithstanding, the importance of such a large group of Nicaraguans talking the risk to express their opposition to the ruling Sandinistas cannot be overlooked.

Also significant is the Sandinista refusal to consider the church plea for dialog with those opposing their regime. It is ironic that the Sandinistas argue that the Salvadoran Government should have dialog with those opposing it but reject the same proposal for themselves.

H.R. 5188, AUTHORIZING FUNDS FOR THE CUSTOMS SERVICE

(Mr. BLILEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, the House will vote today on H.R. 5188, authorizing funds for the customs service and other agencies. I urge Members to vote against this bill on suspension.

Although H.R. 5188 is over the President's request and over the budget we passed only 2 weeks ago, that is not the main problem. In fact, H.R. 5188 is a good bill, it just does not go far enough.

H.R. 5188 makes no effort to encourage or direct the customs service to enforce a law which has been on our books since 1930. The 1930 Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act prohibits the importation of articles produced by slave labor. Yet we have evidence that the Soviets use forced labor to produce goods which are then brought into our country. These imports directly contradict our moral principles, our national laws and the spirit of House Concurrent Resolution 100, which this House passed last year, condemning the Soviet use of slave labor.

A "no" vote on H.R. 5188 is not a vote against the bill, it is a vote against it being on the Suspension Calendar, where we cannot amend it to direct customs to enforce the law and our moral outrage over slave labor. I urge Members to vote this bill off the Suspension Calendar so that we can offer such an amendment under normal House rules.

HARRISBURG, PA., SECTION OF NATIONAL COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, the Greater Harrisburg, Pa., section of the National Council of Jewish Women deserves the recognition that we place in it today by inserting remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The National Council of Jewish Women has long been part of a court-appointed special advocates program, and for its work in that field it has received a special award from the Department of Health and Human Services, a reward recently received by Barbara Mandrell, the current president of that organization.

There are some 270,000 children across the United States who are living in some kind of substitute care. The court-appointed special advocates program, purely of volunteers, makes certain that its volunteers contact every such child and arranges for it whatever temporary residing care it needs or permanent placing in the various forms available.

The court-appointed special advocates program is responsible for from beginning to end following through with court actions and other necessary actions that would insure the best possible situation for these unfortunate children.

The President of the United States himself has directed the Department of Justice to cooperate in the funding of this program and to work directly with the National Council of Jewish Women and other cosponsors for the success of this program.

The Greater Harrisburg chapter, which is, as I said, in my district, was one of the first five sections in the country to participate in this vital element of our volunteer program.

I urge similar organizations in every district in the country to look closely at this court-appointed special advocates program. It is a fine volunteer effort in complete justification of the new emphasis on the American volunteer.

THE REAL DEFICIT STORY

(Mr. LOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, last week we saw a classic example, or two classic examples, here in the House of Representatives, controlled by the Democrats, of why the House cannot or will not reduce Federal spending and therefore the deficit.

On Wednesday we considered the National Science Foundation. We all remember NSF and some of the infamous grants that it has made in the behavioral sciences, but there was an amendment offered to reduce just $51 million in that NSF authorization bill. It had already been increased over 17 percent above last year's level, but we were trying to cut back just $51 million in that amendment. It was defeated.

On Thursday the National Bureau of Standards came before the House, and for 1½ hours we debated cutting just $6 million, and we went through this tremendously convoluted process of having a substitute, amendments to substitutes, haggling over $4 million.

The problem with the Federal deficit is here in the House of Representatives. And if the American people want something done about it, they have got to do something about the votes that are being cast here on amendments just like these.

CONGRESSIONAL INTERFERENCE WITH FOREIGN POLICY

(Mr. GINGRICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, the Atlanta Journal recently editorialized on the "Dear Commandante" letter signed by Mr. WRIGHT of Texas and nine other Members:

> The letter represents a dangerous trend toward self-negotiation by U.S. officials, a trend that undermines the adopted policies of the U.S. Government and further fragments American leadership.
> The nation needs new stringent laws to prevent Congressmen from molding their own foreign policies. It needs to reaffirm the principle that only the Executive Branch has the power to negotiate with foreign governments. And it needs laws that make it a crime to intentionally undercut a policy that has been democratically adopted by the Administration and the Congress.

□ 1220

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I am taking a special order to talk specifically about the debate on the Logan Act, and to talk about precisely the parallel the Founding Fathers drew between the "Dear Commandante" letter to a foreign government with which we are in difficulty, and the problems that the United States was having with France in that period.

I think it will be of some interest to all Members, and I think it is particularly important that we address the question of whether or not Congressmen have the right to write foreign governments opposing the policies of the United States.

HAUNTING DECISIONS?

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the President's just-ended historic trip to the People's Republic of China was a triumph of American diplomacy and a personal triumph for President Reagan. But we must be very careful in these times not to confuse China with our allies such as those in Western Europe or Japan.

China is an ally, if at all, of convenience. There is little sharing of common principles among our countries or commitment by the Chinese to the values or the ideals our society believes in and holds dear. We can, of course, have a cordial relationship with countries different from our own. But amid all the professions of friendship, we must remind ourselves that the Chinese Communists lack a commitment to human rights, to a free press, to religious liberties, and protections of the individual from the powers of the state.

We must remind ourselves too that while China represents a potential market of immense proportions for American goods, the proposed sales of military equipment and nuclear technology to China must be considered only with ironclad safeguards so that decisions made now do not come back to haunt us in the future.

A FAIRER, MORE SIMPLER, FLAT RATE TAX SYSTEM

(Mr. SILJANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SILJANDER. Mr. Speaker, today is tax freedom day, the first day Americans begin paying their own bills rather than the Government's bills. I have introduced a flat rate income tax, House Resolution 5432; I hope the Members will consider it.

Another flat rate tax bill is the Bradley-Gephardt bill. In a way, it is a step forward, since it confirms the supply side belief in lower marginal tax rates. Yet, I am going to talk about something that is very dangerous in that bill: How it affects small businesses.

Bradley-Gephardt is a wolf in sheep's clothing. It talks about simplification of the tax system, but what it really does is five things to small business:

One, it doubles the small business tax rate.

Two, it increases capital taxes on small businesses.

Three, it eliminates small business expensing of the first $10,000 of business property.

Four, it taxes fringe benefits by increasing the tax burden on employees and employers since the employers pay a matching percentage on social security tax.

Last, five, it changes the depreciation schedules to the adversity of small business that were passed in 1981. Now large national companies might appreciate the lowering of the corporate tax rate, but small business does not. Small business is the one that primes the pump of our economy. It is small business that creates over 70 percent of all the new jobs in America. It is small business that does not abandon the rural and urban areas of this country. Bradley-Gephardt is in opposition to small business.

I urge the Members of Congress look at H.R. 5432 for a fairer, more simpler, flat rate income tax system.

"MAY DAY" IN THE OIL INDUSTRY—MAY 1, 1984

(Mr. CONTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute)

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, from Webster's Dictionary we read the following for "May Day":

> May 1st is celebrated as a spring time festival and in some countries as Labor Day.

But this May 1 is no cause for celebration for labor in the oil industry. Last week for example, the Wall Street Journal reported the following about the Texaco-Getty merger approved in January:

> The fact that many workers will be fired as a result of one of the largest corporate consolidations in history isn't surprising. These are tense and confusing days for Getty's 19,400 world-wide employees, many of whom will be out of a job after years of steady employment.

Mr. Speaker, for boardroom executives and stock speculators, this May 1 is not "May Day"—it is "pay day"! They are the ones cashing in on the current wave of big oil mergers—at the expense of labor and the consumer.

That is labor and the consumer yelling "May Day" all right, but it is not in celebration of May 1. Can you hear them, Mr. Speaker? With FTC approval of each oil mega-merger, that is labor and the consumer yelling "May day! May day! May day!," the international distress signal.

I urge my colleagues to support the Conte Moratorium—Let us put an end to big oil's "heyday."

HOUSE SHOULD MOVE ON YOUTH SUMMER JOB FUNDS

(Mr. LEVIN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, last month the other body approved legislation to provide an additional $100 million for summer youth employment under the Job Training Partnership Act. As we rapidly approach the summer months when thousands of young people will be on the streets looking for work, it is vital that this House similarly approve these much needed funds. Nationally, teenage unemployment in March rose to 19.9 percent, while a staggering 46.7 percent of all black teenagers seeking jobs were unable to find them. Despite the current recovery, it is clear that this Nation's young people are being left behind.

The additional funds are necessary if many of our hardest hit cities are to maintain the rather limited youth employment programs of last year. In my own State of Michigan under current law, the city of Detroit, with a December 1983 unemployment rate of 11.8 percent, is facing a 20-percent reduction of $1.87 million. Grand Rapids, with 10-percent unemployment—December 1983—will lose $1.08 million, down 41 percent from last year. The city of Flint, with 12.9-percent unemployment—December 1983—will be cut by $1.03 million, 30 percent below 1983. Oakland County and Ann Arbor will also suffer drastic reductions. These reductions will come at a time when many of these cities and the State of Michigan—March adjusted unemployment: 11.3 percent—are continuing to face double-digit unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, Chairman WHITTEN has recently introduced legislation, H.R. 5419, which will appropriate funds for youth summer jobs and other programs. It is my understanding that the Appropriations Committee will consider the legislation this week. I urge the committee to retain these critical funds for summer jobs and I urge my colleagues to join with me to provide an opportunity for thousands of teenagers to be gainfully employed this summer. We cannot allow our Nation's youth to be left behind by the economic recovery to fend for themselves in the streets.

"YE SHALL KNOW THEM BY THEIR DEEDS"

(Mr. LUNGREN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago Mr. WRIGHT, our distinguished colleague from Texas indicated on the House floor, and I quote, "that while a majority leader in the hierarchy of the House may be the equivalent of a bishop * * * it is difficult for the majority leader of the House to schedule legislation * * *".

In an article in this morning's Washington Post which talked of the lack of meaningful legislative action on the part of this Congress, our colleague from Texas was quoted as saying with astonishment:

> Some of these members don't seem interested, * * * They act like their sole purpose in coming to the Congress was to make sure they remain in Congress.

I must admit that I was rather shocked at his statement. For it appears that Bishop WRIGHT has had possibly a religious Damascus Road experience. Is it possible that Bishop WRIGHT may be headed for an apostleship? Is it possible that in the future the House may be working on meaningful legislation such as the immigration reform bill, the President's comprehensive crime control bill or even possibly a line item veto or balanced budget amendment, rather than limiting ourselves to, in the words of the Washington Post, "such weighty issues of the control of the lamprey eel, an international tuna treaty, or the territorial rights of the Southern Ute Indians"?

Mr. Speaker, I believe the words of James are especially apropos at this point. "Ye shall know them by their deeds."

WHO STANDS IN THE WAY OF VOLUNTARY SCHOOL PRAYER, BALANCED BUDGET, AND LINE-ITEM VETO?

(Mr. HUNTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would hope to offer unanimous consent requests calling for consideration of amendments to permit voluntary school prayer, balanced budget, and line-item veto.

The Chair has ruled that in order to make these requests I must have the clearance of the majority and minority leaderships.

This request has been cleared by the minority leadership.

I would now yield to a spokesman from the majority leadership for appropriate clearance.

Mr. Speaker, I hear no response. That should make it clear to the American people who stands in the way of these three important issues—the Democratic leadership in this House.

TAX FREEDOM DAY

(Mr. CRAIG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, today is Tax Freedom Day. When American workers return home from work tonight they will have finally worked long enough to cover what they owe this year in local, State, and Federal taxes. Starting tomorrow, the money Americans earn on the job will go in their pocket—not the Government's.

Fifty-four years ago, Tax Freedom Day arrived on February 13. In 1930, Americans had to work for only 43 days to cover their tax debt. Today, the number of work days needed to cover their tax debt has increased to over 4 months.

If liberals in Congress have their way, Tax Freedom Day will be pushed even further ahead. Just how many days Congress wants our people to work free for the Government remains to be seen. But I can tell you this, give Congress another dime and they will spend another dollar.

That's why a balanced budget/tax limitation amendment to the U.S. Constitution is so absolutely necessary. If we can control Congress' spending appetite—then we can control its hunger for more taxes.

A balanced budget amendment will stop the ever increasing Tax Freedom Day encroachment on working America's paycheck.

TAX FREEDOM DAY 1984

(Mr. McKERNAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. McKERNAN. Mr. Speaker, today is Tax Freedom Day. If every working hour between January 1 and May 1 is counted toward tax liability, today marks the time when Americans have worked off their total tax burden of over $600 billion.

Yes; as of May 1, Americans stop "working for the Government" and begin "working for themselves."

Mr. Speaker, this milestone day is an important symbol of the challenge America faces. While Tax Freedom Day comes 4 days earlier in the year than in 1981, still it is true that one-third of all income generated in America goes for taxes. For the average working man and woman, 2 hours and 40 minutes of every 8-hour day are spent paying off the tax burden.

As the Federal deficit looms as a threat to the current economic recovery, we should keep in mind the recent words of Secretary of Treasury Regan who said the problem is not that the American people are under-taxed; but that the Federal Government is overspent.

On this Tax Freedom Day 1984, I would ask my colleagues to join with me in committing ourselves to seek real reductions in Government spending, and to set our sights on reforming the Tax Code so that it is both simple and equitable. Only through serious bipartisan efforts can we hope to get the tax burden under control so we can celebrate Tax Freedom Day earlier next year.

DAY OF REMEMBRANCE FOR MRS. MARGARET CORBIN

(Mr. CARNEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to highlight a day of remembrance for one of the lesser known heroes of the American Revolution. On May 1, at West Point, tribute is paid to Mrs. Margaret Corbin, one of America's first servicewomen.

Margaret Corbin (nee Cochran) was born on November 12, 1751, in Pennsylvania. In 1772, she married John Corbin, a member of the Pennsylvania Artillery Regiment. She served at her husband's side throughout the war. On November 16, 1776, John Corbin was killed in the defense of Fort Washington. Margaret Corbin took her husband's place at the cannon. During the battle, she, too, was wounded in the arm.

Margaret Corbin became the only female member of the Invalid Regiment at West Point. In 1783, Congress gave her a pension for her efforts. Mrs. Corbin lived out the rest of her life in Highland Falls, N.Y. She died in 1800. In 1926 her remains were moved from Highland Falls to West Point where she was reinterred. Each year on May 1, the Daughters of the American Revolution pay tribute to her memory by laying a wreath at her grave.

Mr. Speaker, in today's world, it is easy for the younger generation to lose sight of the sacrifices made by both men and women for the cause of American independence. It is, therefore, instructive and inspirational to pay tribute to brave heroes of our Revolution like Mrs. Margaret Corbin.

A STATE OF SIEGE IN COLOMBIA

(Mr. GILMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, last evening the world was shocked to learn that the drug traffickers had gunned down Rodrigo Lara Bonilla, the Minister of Justice of the Nation of Colombia, whose life was frequently threatened by drug traffickers.

Under the leadership of the gentleman from New York, Mr. RANGEL, the distinguished chairman of our Select Committee on Narcotics, our committee went to Colombia and visited with the Minister of Justice just last August and we were impressed by his dedicated and sincere efforts to combat narcotics trafficking in Colombia. He reportedly played a leading role in implementing Colombia's herbicidal spraying of marihuana, and in the recent world record seizure of more than 12 metric tons of cocaine worth an estimated street value of over a billion dollars.

We have been informed today that the President of Colombia, President Betancur, has declared a state of siege in Colombia following this assassination. The assassination of the Justice Minister should serve as a poignant reminder to the entire world that the deadly effects of narcotics trafficking and drug abuse are getting worse, and if the war against drug traffickers is going to be won, then the nations of the entire international community are going to have to pool their resources, their personnel, their funds and technology to combat this deadly menace that is undermining the political, economic, and social institutions of all mankind.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken later, after the legislative business and prior to the suspension votes which were postponed yesterday.

MEDICAL CARE RECOVERY AMENDMENTS

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4666) to provide for the recovery by the United States of the costs of hospital and medical care and treatment furnished by the United States in certain circumstances, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The United States shall be subrogated to any right or claim that the person, his guardian, personal representative, estate, dependents, or survivors have under such policy, contract, agreement, or arrangement to the extent of the reasonable value of the care and treatment so furnished or to be furnished.".

(b) The first section of Public Law 87-693 is further amended in subsection (c), as redesignated by subsection (a)(2) of this section—

SEC. 2. Section 2 of Public Law 87-693 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Notwithstanding section 3302 of title 31, United States Code, or any other provision of law, all sums collected pursuant to this Act, or collected for the types of care and treatment described in the first section of this Act pursuant to any other right the United States may possess, shall be credited to the appropriation from which the costs of such care and treatment were paid, except that such sums shall be available only in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts.".

SEC. 3. (a) The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall apply to all cases in which the United States is authorized or required by law to furnish hospital, medical, surgical, or dental care and treatment, whether such care and treatment is furnished before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) The amendment made by section 2 of this Act shall apply to all sums collected by the United States on or after the date of the enactment of this Act, whether the claim for such moneys arose before, on, or after such date of enactment.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR.) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KINDNESS) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR.).

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 4666 is to allow the recovery by the United States of the costs of hospital, medical, surgical, or dental care, and treatment provided by the United States in those jurisdictions where tort liabilty has been limited or substituted by a no-fault system.

The bill was introduced as recommended in an executive communication from the Department of Justice dated December 5, 1983.

The Federal Medical Care Recovery Act, 42 U.S.C. 2651, et seq., grants the Federal Government an independent right of action, sounding in tort, to recover the reasonable value of hospital, medical, surgical, or dental care and treatment when the Government is required or authorized to provide such care and treatment to a person injured under circumstances giving rise to third party liability.

Twenty-one States, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico have implemented some type of no-fault system and due in part to these changes, the number of successful claims under the Federal Medical Care Recovery Act is declining. In some cased recoveries have not been pursued because legal precedents have been set barring recovery under the act in no-fault States.

In Heusle v. National Mutual Insurance, 628 F. 2d 833 (3rd Cir. 1980), the Court held that the Government could not recover its medical expenses because the right of recovery is based upon tort liability, and Pennsylvania had abolished tort liability in favor of a no-fault system. The Court expressly stated that the resolution of the conflict was up to Congress, not the courts.

While the Heusle precedent is not universal, it has had a negative impact on an important source of revenue. Government recoveries under the Federal Medical Care Recovery Act totaled $25 million in fiscal year 1982. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that enactment of this bill would increase Federal receipts by several million dollars annually.

The bill creates a new subsection (b) to 42 U.S.C. 2651 defining the basis of the Government's right of recovery to circumstances where a State had abolished or limited tort liability in favor of a no-fault system. Under this bill, the Government is deemed to be a third-party beneficiary of any State compensation plan so as to receive any reimbursement benefit provided by that plan; and in those States that require the injured party's actually incurring the medical expense, the injured party is deemed to have incurred that expense for reimbursement purposes.

Additionally, the bill establishes a new deposit and collection procedure for funds recouped under the Federal Medical Care Recovery Act, or any other right the United States has for the recoupment of medical care costs. H.R. 4666 authorizes the deposit of the recouped funds to the appropriation from which the care or treatment was charged. This differs from the current requirement of depositing recouped funds to general Treasury revenues, and is intended to encourage recovery actions under the Federal Medical Care Recovery Act.

The committee has concluded that the recommendations of the Department of Justice will strengthen the United States' ability to recover medical care and treatment costs in those jurisdictions where tort liability has been limited or abolished in favor of a no-fault system. Accordingly, it is recommended that the bill be considered favorably.

□ 1240

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join today with my friend and very able subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR.), in urging the House to pass H.R. 4666.

The Medical Care Recovery Act, passed in 1962, allowed the United States to recover the costs expended for medical care, when a third party was responsible for causing the injury giving rise to the costs. This was a reasonable system to require reimbursement from a negligent party in situations where the Government was obligated to provide medical services to its injured employees.

In recent years, however, with new no-fault compensation systems in many States, the existing law has been found by the courts to be inadequate to obtain reimbursement in those States. This legislation brings the Medical Care Recovery Act up to date, and reaffirms the Government's right to be reimbursed for its costs in no-fault States.

This bill also includes a strong incentive for agencies to pursue medical care recovery cases. Instead of funds recovered being deposited in the general Treasury, the new language would return the funds to the appropriation from which the costs of care were charged. I suspect this will give medical care recovery cases a higher priority in the legal sections of most agencies.

It is especially timely that we deal with this legislation. First, we are all acutely aware of the steadily rising cost of medical care. The Government has shared in paying those higher costs, and will continue to do so. This bill provides a mechanism to recoup those costs from negligent persons or entities.

We are also well aware of the growing disparity between how much money the Government takes in through taxes and other revenues, and how much the Congress appropriates and spends. I am most pleased to report that this bill will reduce that disparity, which is sometimes called the deficit, by adding funds to the revenue side of the Government ledger. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that receipts will increase several million dollars annually, under this bill.

All that, and no increase in taxes.

I only wish we had the opportunity to vote for more bills like H.R. 4666.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KINDNESS), the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, for the very fine and able assistance that he has given in bringing H.R. 4666 to the floor. I commend him very highly.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR.) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4666, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

(c) Notwithstanding any applicable provision of any State law providing a damage remedy for conduct similar to that forbidden by the antitrust laws, any person who is entitled to recovery on a claim under such provision shall not recover in excess of the actual damages sustained by him, interest calculated at the rate specified in section 1961 of title 28 United States Code, on such actual damages as specified in subsection (d), and the cost of suit attributable to such claim, including a reasonable attorney's fee pursuant to section 5 of this Act—

(1) if such claim results from conduct that is within the scope of a joint research and development venture for which notification has been filed under section 6(a) of this Act, and

(2) if such claim is filed after a notice of the research and development venture is published in the Federal Register as provided in section 6(b) of this Act.

(d) Interest shall be awarded on the damages involved for the period beginning on the date of filing of the claim and ending on the date of judgment, unless the court finds that the award of all or part of such interest is unjust in the circumstances. Interest shall be awarded on the damages involved for the period beginning on the date of injury and ending one day prior to the date of filing of the claim if the court finds that the award of all or part of such interest is just in the circumstances.

(e) The protections of this section shall not apply to any conduct that occurs during the effective period of any court order enjoining such conduct as a result of a claim under the antitrust laws or any State law similar to the antitrust laws.

ATTORNEY'S FEES

SEC. 5. Notwithstanding section 4, 4C, or 16 of the Clayton Act, in any claim under the antitrust laws, or any State law similar to the antitrust laws, based on conduct that results from a joint research and development venture, the court shall, at the conclusion of the action, award to the substantially prevailing party the cost of suit attributable to such claim, including a reasonable attorney's fee. In the interest of justice, the award may be reduced or withheld and may be reduced by an award in favor of any other party for any part of the cost of suit attributable to such claim, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

DISCLOSURE OF JOINT RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT VENTURE

SEC. 6. (a) In accordance with rules issued by the Attorney General in consultation with the Commission, any person who is a party to a joint research and development venture may file simultaneously with the Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission a written notification disclosing—

(1) the identities of the parties to such venture, and

(2) the nature, objectives, and duration of such venture.

Any person who is a party to such venture may file such additional disclosure notifications pursuant to this section as are appropriate to extend the protections of section 4.

(b) In accordance with rules issued by the Attorney General in consultation with the Commission, and except as provided in subsection (d), not later than sixty days after receiving a notification filed under subsection (a), the Attorney General or the Commission shall cause to be published in the Federal Register a notice of such joint research and development venture which identifies the parties to such venture and which describes in general terms the area of planned activity and duration of such venture. Prior to its publication, the contents of the notice shall be made available to the parties to such venture.

(c) Except as to the information published in the Federal Register pursuant to subsection (b), all information and documentary material submitted as part of a notification filed pursuant to this section and all other information obtained by the Attorney General or the Commission in the course of any investigation or enforcement action shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, and shall not be made publicly available by any agency of the United States to which section 552 applies.

(d) Any person who has filed a notification pursuant to this section may withdraw such notification prior to the time at which notice of such research and development venture is published in the Federal Register. Any notification so withdrawn shall not be subject to subsection (b) and shall not confer the protections of section 4 on any person with respect to whom such notification was filed.

(e) Any action taken or not taken by the Attorney General or the Commission with respect to notifications filed pursuant to this section, shall not be subject to judicial review.

(f) For the sole purpose of establishing that a person is entitled to the protections of section 4, the fact of disclosure of conduct under section 6(a) and the fact of publication of a notice under section 6(b) shall be admissible into evidence. But no action by the Attorney General or the Commission taken pursuant to this section shall be admissible into evidence in any administrative or judicial proceeding for the purpose of supporting or answering any claim under the antitrust laws, or under any State law similar to the antitrust laws.

(g) The rules promulgated under this section shall be subject to the public notice and comment requirements of section 553 of title 5, United States Code.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. EDWARDS) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York (Mr. FISH) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. EDWARDS).

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, during the 97th Congress, the gentleman from California (Mr. MINETA) and I introduced a bill to clarify the application of our antitrust laws to joint research and development programs. Some 3 years have passed since that time, during which support for this type of legislation has grown without regard to party lines or to economic philosophy. I am pleased that this issue is now ripe for action by the House and that a similar bill has recently been reported out by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

In crafting what is now H.R. 5041, the Committee on the Judiciary had the benefit of the hard work and analysis that had gone before it. Aspects of the disclosure system set out in the bill are very similar to a bill proposed by Mr. MOORHEAD on behalf of the administration. And we have learned a great deal from earlier legislative proposals, not only my own, but also that of Chairman FUQUA of the Science and Technology Committee and that introduced by our distinguished ranking minority Member, Mr. FISH.

The legislation before us will clear the decks of any unnecessary antitrust obstacles to legitimate joint research and development. It comes not a moment too soon. To be sure, our basic science is still, without question, the finest in the world. Yet, we seem to be experiencing a critical gap between the discoveries of basic science and the application of that information and new knowledge to our marketable goods and services. Whether America is, in fact, losing its overall technological leadership to others is a complex question. But if one looks at the decline of the U.S. share of world exports of manufactured goods, including technology-intensive goods, one can be very certain that we are in the midst of changing patterns of production and consumption in what can only be described as a global economy.

America must maintain and strengthen its competitive position in a changing marketplace—a marketplace where all participants may not play by the same rules and where some may take advantage of the relative openness of the U.S. economy and our devotion to free trade. Certainly, in some countries, industry has the benefit of government subsidies that we do not give to American firms. But H.R. 5041 does not grant anyone a subsidy. Nor does it provide anyone carte blanche to violate the antitrust laws. The legislation does, however, clear a path for jointly conducted R&D programs that can make the difference in cases in which research by individual firms is either too expensive or too inefficient to be carried out alone.

Successful innovation, especially in the high-technology fields, depends upon a very subtle blend of cooperation and competition. H.R. 5041 strikes this note by sending a clear signal to American businesses that joint research, properly structured, is favored under our antitrust laws. That we can create this favored status without substantially altering the fabric of our antitrust laws disputes the theory that antitrust and high technology cannot advance together into the 21st century.

The bill has three operative sections. It mandates application of the rule of reason in any antitrust claim directed at a joint research and development program. Thus, under either Federal or State law, no joint R&D venture may be condemned as per se unlawful.

The bill also grants to the substantially prevailing party in a private antitrust suit the costs of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. But unlike earlier proposals, the adverse effect of this provision on an unsuccesful plaintiff is tempered by allowing that plaintiff to collect costs, including a reasonable attorney's fee, if in the interest of justice.

Finally, by disclosing to the Department of Justice, the FTC, and the public the parameters of the joint research and development program, the maximum liability in any civil antitrust suit will be reduced to actual damages plus interest. While such disclosure will eliminate the pervasive threat wielded by treble-damage actions, privacy safeguards in section 6 insure that it will not lead to the release of sensitive proprietary information.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we have a responsible and balanced piece of legislation that we all can enthusiastically support. I hope you will join with us today in the bipartisan effort to maintain and strengthen American technological leadership.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO), the very distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, whose cooperation in this bill is sincerely appreciated.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from California for yielding this time to me. I want to commend him and the gentleman from California (Mr. MINETA) and the ranking member of our committee, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FISH), for their leadership in crafting this bill. It was their idea that motivated this legislation. I think it is a responsible piece of legislation, sorely needed at this time when we are moving in an area of advanced technology.

For this reason, I rise in support of H.R. 5041, the Joint Research and Development Act of 1984. This carefully crafted bill is the product of the efforts of two committees. It addresses an important issue for the economic health of our Nation—the ability of our businesses to stay apace of foreign competitors in research and development.

The record gathered by the Subcommittee on Monopolies and Commercial Law does not document widespread antitrust problems for those who jointly undertake research and development. There have been only two or three reported cases involving antitrust challenges to joint R&D. And many of the competitive problems that U.S. industry has confronted in recent years appear to be due not to failures in research and development, but to the relative weakness of the United States in efficient production of products on which research and development information is readily available.

But the record does suggest that some R&D endeavors, particularly costly long-term efforts, may be more efficiently conducted if two or more firms join forces. Indeed, some research may be so expensive that no single firm acting alone can afford it. The record also suggests a perception problem for many businesses that might choose such joint R&D undertakings—a belief that jointly conducted R&D will substantially increase the risk of antitrust exposure. This perception, whether or not based on fact, may deter firms from combining their R&D endeavors.

To address this problem, the Committee on the Judiciary has reported a bill that clarifies the antitrust standard applicable to joint research and development, provides a notification procedure for limiting the damage exposure of such ventures, and discourages unwise or frivolous antitrust suits by awarding attorneys fees to the successful defendant. These changes will substantially benefit companies that are considering joint R&D undertakings. They send a clear signal that such undertakings are to be looked upon with relative favor under the antitrust laws.

I understand that some would favor more expansive legislation granting more protection, or even outright antitrust immunity, to joint R&D activity. The committee, however, rightly guarded against overreaction. The antitrust laws have provided fundamental protection for the free market system since enactment of the Sherman Act in 1890. The incentives of competition, firm against firm, are essential in fostering research and innovation by individual firms. In many industries, small firms are the most innovative and creative in bringing new products and processes into the market. Thus, no legislation enacted by Congress should create an automatic exemption for all jointly conducted R&D activity. And legitimate joint R&D should not be an excuse to restrain competition in marketing or sales, or for imposing competitive restraints on activity unrelated to joint R&D.

We have before us today a consensus bill—a balanced measure that enjoys enthusiastic support from the members of the Judiciary Committee. I am pleased that Chairman FUQUA of the Science and Technology Committee has joined in approving this legislation. I want to thank him and the other members of his committee for their cooperation in moving this important legislation toward enactment. Finally, I want to thank the floor manager of this bill, Mr. EDWARDS, for his leadership in bringing responsible legislation to a vote.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 5041.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. MOORHEAD).

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Joint Research and Development Act of 1984 (H.R. 5041).

This measure is analogous to, and patterned after title II of the National Productivity and Innovation Act (H.R. 3878)—legislation which I introduced last year on behalf of the administration. Like that bill, H.R. 5041 makes it clear that research and development joint ventures are judged under the rule of reason standard in antitrust law. Further, the measure limits the potential damages against a research and development joint venture to actual damages, plus interest, and attorneys fees.

The elimination of potential treble damage liability, along with the reinforcement of congressional intent on the applicability of the rule of reason test to these joint ventures is significant. It will serve to remove the clouds of deterrence and doubt that currently hover over these types of cooperative activities, discouraging their very formation. The overriding purpose of H.R. 5041 and its legislative predecessors, is to encourage American companies to compete more effectively in the international marketplace. It is a refinement in the antitrust laws, modifying the disproportionate incentives currently available to private litigants who may seek to undermine the viability of particular joint ventures.

American businesses should be able to enter into legitimate cooperative arrangements to pursue scientific and technological investigation, without an undue fear of costly litigation and potential treble damage judgments. At the same time, H.R. 5041 does not alter the current law as to any production and marketing by a joint venture. Once a discovery is jointly arrived at, the participants may seek patent protection and license the results of their investigation. But they receive no additional antitrust protection with respect to marketing or production activities. The line is a clear and fair one to draw.

H.R. 5041 represents compromise and cooperation on the part of the members of two committees of this House—the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Science and Technology. The Reagan administration, particularly through the efforts of the Department of Commerce and the Department of Justice, has been of great assistance in formulating and refining the provisions of this important legislation. I understand that the Judiciary Committee in the other body has processed similar legislation and favorable floor action is likely there in the near future.

At times, this legislation has been characterized by some as a high tech bill. While this is true in part, it also should be emphasized that the benefits of this new statute will be available to all types of American business—steel and automobiles as well as electronics, pharmaceutical companies as well as computer firms.

This is needed legislation, developed in a truly bipartisan manner. It deserves the favorable support of this House.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. LUNGREN).

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. position in international business is—in some ways—analogous to our position in the Olympic games. Many countries develop their best athletic talent through subsidies and other incentives. Their definitions of "professionals" and "amateurs" is very different than ours. U.S. business is in a similar situation. During recent years foreign firms have gained advantages over American firms in high technology industries largely because the former have been openly encouraged by their respective governments to pool their R&D resources in order to improve their position in the international market. On the other hand, our Nation's companies have avoided such action out of fear of the application of U.S. antitrust laws. Our long-held lead in technological innovation has begun to decline as a direct result of U.S. business' inability to emulate foreign joint R&D ventures out of fear of violating vague antitrust laws. If we are to retain our technological lead in the world. this costly difference between U.S. and foreign business practices needs immediate attention.

As D. Bruce Merrifield, Assistant Commerce Secretary for Technology, said:

> When a nation targets an area, no company can meet the challenge alone. We can either exit the business, raise trade barriers, or get our act together.

The most viable response to our shrinking lead in the area of high technology seems to be the promotion of more R&D. R&D is as important to high tech industries as oil is necessary to the efficient running of an automobile.

STATS ON THE IMPORTANCE OF R&D TO HIGH TECH

The benefits of joint R&D are obvious: It prevents duplication of work among competitors, thus reducing unnecessary overhead costs which are ultimately passed on to the consumer. It also creates an environment in which more and better research and development can be carried on. This all adds up to increased cost efficiency.

The American auto industry is well aware of this. Each of the three major auto manufacturers separately spent hundreds of millions of dollars developing basically the same catalytic converter because the Federal Government prevented them from working together.

This case sharply contrasts the reaction of private and public sectors of the Japanese business community with the American development of the semiconductor and integrated circuit. The Japanese formed the very large scale integration (VLSI) group as a vehicle which would bring Japan into the market. The organization was comprised of three joint ventures, including such corporate giants as Hitachi, NEC, Toshiba, and Fujitsu.

The results of the VLSI are painfully obvious. The message is clear: Foreign joint R&D ventures have created a serious challenge to American leadership in the R&D intensive field of technological innovation.

So, what is preventing companies from entering into these partnerships? Answer: Vague and threatening antitrust laws.

I believe our country is now confronted with a clear choice. Either we can adjust our antitrust laws to allow our internationally involved businesses to compete on more equal terms with foreign businesses, thus giving our companies a fair opportunity to develop their products, or we can remain inflexible, and continue our competitive decline.

When antitrust legislation was enacted in the late 1800's, it was thought that anticompetitive practices would be discouraged if a company found guilty had to pay three times the actual damages its illegal practices cause, that is, treble damages. But now the fear of violating antitrust law is so great that U.S. businessmen shy away from joint ventures even when they are legally sound.

A recent example illustrates the problem. As soon as the 12 company consortium known as the Microelectronics Computer Corporation (MCC) announced its formation, it received warnings, including a suit-threatening letter from a respected senior San Francisco antitrust attorney. What makes this example rare is that MCC, one of the few joint R&D projects now in progress, has decided to ride out the storm of antitrust suit threats.

But the threat of possible suit is ever present and the possibility of paying treble damages is enough of a threat that many constructive joint ventures never make it to the planning room.

H.R. 5041 strikes a balance. The strong policy against unfair competitive practices is retained as well as the remedies for violation. However, the size of the remedy is reduced—or detreblized, allowing only for the awarding of actual damages—which lowers the barrier against entering into joint ventures. The law will then be effectively modified to encourage activities in research and development.

It is important to note that the suggested modification in antitrust law, if passed, would represent the first modification in the treble damages remedy since 1890. However, this would not change the basic thrust and purpose of the antitrust laws.

Even if the U.S. Government allows American companies to pool their resources for research and development, they will continue to uphold the spirit and the letter of the antitrust laws. Anticompetitive practices such as price fixing have never been tolerated under antitrust laws and will not be in the future.

Our economy is entering a new economic revolution, shifting its focus from one based predominantly on an industrial sector to one of a high tech orientation. New areas of activity are developing, once again creating producing dubious results. In this case however, business is the victim, not the offender. It now appears that the perception of our antitrust laws in this area is contributing to an uneven international field of competition which is eroding our world technological lead. The passage of H.R. 5041 is absolutely essential if we are to maintain that lead and expand our participation in international markets.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. ZSCHAU).

Mr. ZSCHAU. Mr. Speaker, the challenge that we face today in the United States is creating enough new productive jobs for our growing work force. We hear many proposals to meet that challenge. Some suggest industrial trageting whereby some sort of government body would try to identify growth opportunities and allocate taxpayer dollars to them. Experience suggests that such a central planning approach—although it has laudable objectives—would be doomed to failure.

An alternative approach is to improve the environment for innovation in this country and thereby stimulate technological development, new products, and new processes, which will increase the competitiveness of U.S. businesses in all those areas where opportunities exist. This approach does not involve massive Government expenditures and it works. It stimulates the private sector to do what it does best—make products, serve customers, and create jobs.

H.R. 5041 is an initiative that we can take now to enable our U.S. companies to become more competitive. H.R. 5041 would permit companies to pool their scarce research resources to pursue projects that are either too risky or too expensive for any single company to do alone. The technical breakthroughs that we need today in order to increase competitiveness dramatically require projects that are more expensive and more risky than they have been in the part.

Second, we have a scarcity of trained technical people in this country. Japan trains twice as many engineers per capita as we do. If we are going to make the best use of the engineers that we do have we must permit companies to combine resources and jointly pursue projects where they have mutual interests.

Third, the United States is facing competition from industrial consortiums abroad. In 1970, IBM had more than 60 percent of the Japanese computer market. During the 1970's, at a time when the U.S. Government was prosecuting IBM on antitrust grounds, the Japanese Government was allowing Japanese computer companies to work together on joint research projects. It was subsidizing the research too. As a result, IBM has only 40 percent of the Japanese market today.

H.R. 5041 would permit U.S. companies to compete more effectively against the consortiums that have been encouraged and even subsidized by our foreign trading competitors.

Finally, I would just like to stress one point that has been made here today. H.R. 5041 is not just a high technology bill. It would enable companies in the steel industry, the automobile industry, the durable goods industry, the construction industry to pool their resources to find ways to solve common problems, to improve their products, to improve their production processes. If we have new products, we have new processes, then we will get new jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support of H.R. 5041.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, the Judiciary Committee has been working closely on this legislation with the great Committee on Science and Technology chaired by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FUQUA).

I now yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALGREN) who represents the chairman of that great committee.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the chairman of the Committee on Science and Technology and the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for bringing the bill H.R. 5041 before us today. This legislation should remove the barrier that current antitrust law presents to legitimate attempts by businesses to pool resources to solve research problems.

Last June, I chaired a set of hearings entitled "Japanese Technological Advances and Possible U.S. Responses Using Joint Ventures." We learned from these hearings that the Japanese Government actively encourages its industry to do cooperative research but our antitrust laws stifle similar American cooperation. We followed up in July with legislative hearings on several research and development joint venture bills followed by several days of markup which led to H.R. 4043, which the Science Committee reported unanimously last November. In my opinion, the bill before us captures the spirit of the Science Committee's work and should be helpful in removing unintended roadblocks to legitimate scientific cooperation among corporations.

When my subcommittee began work on our R&D joint venture bill, our committee reflected three major concerns. We sought definitions which would permit companies to do research together but which would preserve the historic, beneficial protections that antitrust laws have provided the American consumer.

Second, if a joint venture does stray into illegal activity, we felt that actual damages, not treble damages, were the appropriate penalty. Third, we felt that the strict "per se" violation rule of our antitrust law should not be applied to research and development. But rather a test of reasonable effect of the actions at issue should be applied. H.R. 5041 answers each of these concerns in an unambiguous manner.

I applaud the Judiciary Committee for adding a clear description of proscribed activities to the Science Committee's definition of a joint venture. When these two provisions are examined side by side, there should be no reasonable doubt in a company's mind both that the Congress wants to encourage joint research and development and that it has no intention to weaken the essential antitrust bans against dominant companies developing and marketing new products together.

The bill sets out a neat, simple mechanism that guarantees that actual damages plus attorney's fees are the outside limit of damages companies will face if their joint venture runs afoul of antitrust rules. Furthermore, it states unambiguously that R&D projects conducted jointly shall not be considered to be illegal per se. These two provisions should end the chilling effect witnesses before our committee described to be a major disadvantage to American companies in international competition.

Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5041. It is a clean, straightforward bill which will go a long way toward removing the artificial impediments that American firms often face when they consider solving common research problems together.

● Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to join the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary in urging passage of H.R. 5041, the Joint Research and Development Act of 1984. This bill represents a carefully crafted compromise between H.R. 5041 as introduced and the more comprehensive H.R. 4043, which was reported last November by the Committee on Science and Technology. I am supporting H.R. 5041, not as the ideal solution to antitrust problems facing joint ventures, but as the best legislative response to the problems we can hope to enact this year. Given the attention comparable legislation is receiving in the Senate and the administration's favorable disposition toward the bill, I am reasonably confident that H.R. 5041 can become law this year if our colleagues approve it today.

Last summer in oversight and legislative hearings, the Committee on Science and Technology examined the negative impact of existing antitrust law on research and development joint ventures. We followed up last fall with markup of H.R. 4043 over a several day period. We consider our major accomplishments in that bill to be a comprehensive definition of R&D joint ventures, elimination of treble damages if a joint venture violates antitrust law, antitrust exemptions for R&D joint ventures qualifying under safe harbor and negative clearance procedures, modification of the per se rule, antitrust exemption for attempts to form joint ventures, and a more reasonable attorney's fee provision. I am pleased to report that the Judiciary Committee has addressed all of these topics except safe harbor and negative clearance.

The definitional section combines the best work of both committees. The main section closely follows the work of the Committee on Science and Technology while section (b), added by the Judiciary Committee, declares that several of the major proscribed areas in antitrust law are out of bounds for R&D joint ventures as well. Also at the suggestion of the Science Committee, the subsection 2(b) 2(c) has been modified to permit patents, which are integrally related to inventions and developments of the joint venture, to be sold, licensed or shared as part of the joint venture activities. This reflects the likelihood that most joint ventures will involve partners holding background patents or patents related to components or processes used in the invention or development. Transferability of those related patents will be essential to the success of the joint venture.

The changes in the disclosure section of H.R. 5041 clearly improve that legislation. They move it close to the Science Committee position that actual damages should be the upper liability limit in an antitrust case relating to jointly performed research and development.

The Justice Department now clearly has only an administrative function related to joint venture filings; after the Justice Department, within 60 days, gives public notice in the Federal Register of the joint venture's existence, the actual damages limit automatically applies to that venture.

Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that we have not included a procedure in this legislation such as safe harbor or negative clearance which would permit companies to establish with certainty that their joint venture does not run afoul of antitrust laws. However, I also realize that inclusion of such a provision, however meritorious, would decrease the chances of any reforms being enacted into law. I am willing at this point to push ahead with the major improvements currently contained in H.R. 5041 with the hope that in a later Congress, we will revisit the safe harbor question and push for its enactment as well. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to give their wholehearted support to this legislation which makes major advances toward the goal of permitting American industry to work together to solve its research problems and to meet the technological competition from overseas.

At this point I include a comparative analysis of the two bills and the compromise, which has been prepared by the staff of the Committee on Science and Technology and approved by the staff of the Committee on the Judiciary:

COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS OF H.R. 4043, H.R. 5041, AND AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE TO H.R. 5041

H.R. 4043	H.R. 5041	Amendment in the Nature of a Substitute to H.R. 5041
Section 1. Title: Research and Development Joint Venture.	Section 1. Title: Joint Research and Development Act of 1984.	Identical to H.R. 5041.
Section 2. Findings and Purposes.	No similar provision.	No similar provision.
Definitional section found at Section 12. No exclusionary language provided.	Section 2. Definitions and Limitations. Inclusionary and exclusionary language provided for definition of joint R&D.	Term "Joint research and development program" changed to "joint research and development venture." Inclusionary and exclusionary language expanded to include work on prototypes and process improvements; prohibition section reworded such that patents integrally related to the work of the joint venture as well as licenses and patents resulting from its work may be the subject of agreements between parties to a R&D joint venture.
Section 3. Application of the antitrust laws (to the making or performing of a contract to carry out R&D projects).	No similar provision.	No similar provision.
Similar provision in section 9.	Section 3. Per se violations shall be judged under the rule of reason standard.	Similar to H.R. 5041. Report language makes clear that worldwide competition and the relevant research market(s) are to be considered in a rule of reason analysis.

COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS OF H.R. 4043, H.R. 5041, AND AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE TO H.R. 5041—Continued

H.R. 4043	H.R. 5041	Amendment in the Nature of a Substitute to H.R. 5041
Section 4. Notification of Attorney General. These two subsections establish "safe harbor" standards under which a R&D joint venture can be formed and carried out without risk of violation of the antitrust laws.	No similar "safe harbor" provision.	No similar "safe harbor" provision.
No similar provision.	Section 4. Limitation on recovery. Voluntary disclosure of the parameters of joint R&D program results in limiting liability in civil suits to actual damages plus prejudgment interest. Attorney fees recoverable by substantially prevailing party in accordance with section 5. Section does not grant immunity from antitrust suits, but merely sets the limits on recovery. Limitation on recovery does not apply after an order granting a permanent injunction issued against protected conduct.	Similar to H.R. 5041, with the exception of language in § 4(e) that damage limitations do not apply during the effective period of a court order enjoining protected conduct.
Section 5. Clearance Procedure. Section establishes a procedure for advance review by the Attorney General of proposals for joint venture R&D, with automatic "clearance" if adverse action taken by Attorney General within a specified period. Following clearance, immunity (with the exception of injunctive relief) from antitrust suits attaches.	No similar certification provision. (A voluntary notification procedure is established in Section 6, with properly disclosed conduct being subject to actual damages, plus interest as provided in section 4.)	No similar certification provision. (Similar voluntary notification procedure as found in H.R. 5041.)
Attorney's fees provision found at section 11. Fees awarded to successful defendant if plaintiff has acted in bad faith.	Section 5. Attorney's fees. Substantially prevailing party in private antitrust suit receives the costs of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fees. Award may be reduced or withheld in the interest of justice. Report language addresses concerns raised by Rep. Frank during full Committee mark-up.	Similar to H.R. 5041. (See note on report language to H.R. 5041.)
Section 6. Investigation by the Attorney General. This section allows the Attorney General to investigate the accuracy of information submitted under sections 4 or 5, and provides safeguards, or exemption, from public disclosure for information submitted. Results of AG's investigation inadmissible as evidence in private antitrust cases.	Section 6. Disclosure of Joint Research and Development Program. Voluntary notification procedure established, with antitrust enforcement agencies assigned ministerial functions. Publication of abbreviated notice of the R&D program in the Federal Register triggers reduced liability exposure for parties to the venture, as set out in section 4. Increased privacy safeguards for proprietary information submitted to the DOJ and FTC. Inadmissibility as evidence of any action taken by the antitrust agencies for purpose of supporting or answering a claim under the antitrust laws. Additional disclosures are to be made by the parties as are appropriate.	Similar to H.R. 5041, with the exception of language making clear that additional disclosures by parties will extend the protections of section 4.
Section 7. Attempts to make contracts. Attempts to form R&D joint ventures exempted from antitrust laws (to eliminate concern on the part of prospective parties that preliminary discussions may be viewed as illegal activity).	Attempts to form joint ventures are covered in the definitions of section 2, and are to be judged under the rule of reason standard, as with other proper joint R&D conduct.	Similar to Section 2 of H.R. 5041. (See note on H.R. 5041.)
Section 8. Claims under the antitrust laws. This section declares that the mere fact that a joint venture does not comply with the provisions of either the safe harbor or negative clearance sections does not render the joint venture's conduct a violation of the antitrust laws.	No similar provision. Report language makes clear that all R&D conduct to be judged under rule of reason standard regardless of whether voluntary disclosure made under section 6.	No similar provision. (See note on report language to H.R. 5041.)
Section 9. Per se violations of the antitrust laws. This section provides that all joint venture R&D projects shall be judged under the rule of reason standard.	Similar to section 3.	Similar to section 3.
Section 10. Modification of Damages. This section establishes actual damages, prejudgment interest and the costs of the suit, as the recovery limits for antitrust violations found to occur as a result of a joint venture R&D project.	Similar to section 4, in which damages for conduct disclosed under section 6 are limited to actual damages plus prejudgment interest and the costs of the suit.	Similar to H.R. 5041. (See note on H.R. 5041.)

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the author of the bill, the gentleman from California (Mr. MINETA).

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to lend my strong support to H.R. 5041, the Joint Research and Development Act. I wish to commend my distinguished colleague from "Silicon Valley," Mr. EDWARDS of California as well as Mr. FUQUA and Mr. WALGREN in their work on this bill.

In many ways, bringing this bill to fruition represents Congress at its best. Without abrogating or undermining the kind of protection offered to the public by antitrust law, we are adding to this body of law to allow visionary and creative endeavors by American industry. In fact, the laws we enact are meant to be flexible and reflective of changing times and new realities. Antitrust laws are no exception. By rethinking and recrafting antitrust statutes today, we are indeed paving the way for new and highly profitable ventures which ultimately will serve business and consumer alike.

Research and development is the backbone of our economy. This is true for high tech as well as for smokestack industries. Without new products and without innovation, our economy will stagnate. We in this country have never taken a static view of industry and technology, and legislation such as the one under consideration today takes into account the need to make research and development serve our overall economic well-being.

The share of American gross national product going into research and development is lower today than it was a generation ago. The rate of increase in American R&D investment averaged 5 percent a year in the 1960 to 1969 decade. But it dropped to a low of 1.4 percent a year in the 1970 to 1979 decade. The lesson from this development is that we are devoting a smaller fraction of our resources to our future economic security than at any time since the mid-1950's.

One deterrent to R&D spending is the sheer enormity of investment required to bring out major new advancements. Creating next-generation computer chips, satellites, aircraft, or even such basic industrial products as machine tools requires billions of dollars of investment. The road from the drawing board to full production is a long and costly one and we have to facilitate industry's ability to carry this off. To a reasonable degree, antitrust laws should promote industry cooperation in this regard—not deter it.

We face ever-increasing competition in the global marketplace. Antitrust laws in other countries are often less strict than our own, and companies can more easily enter into joint research projects and business groups to lower their costs and to spread the risks. How, then, can we ask our own industries to enter the competition hampered by stricter rules and a lesser commitment by the U.S. Government? Clearly, we cannot ask this.

This is why I urge my colleagues to vote for the Joint Research and Development Act today and thank our colleague for California (Mr. EDWARDS) for his leadership and perseverance in bringing this legislation to the floor.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WYDEN), who has been of assistance on this bill.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. FEIGHAN), a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 5041. Because of the leadership of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, we are considering today legislation that will promote the kind of private investment in joint research and development projects that is vital to our national well-being.

In a world economy that is driven by increasingly rapid technological change, American businesses must invest in extensive—and expensive—research and development programs. But only the largest corporations can maintain the sophisticated technical capacity needed to develop new products, and even they often find the cost too high to bear alone. For smaller businesses on the cutting edge of new technologies, the ability to work cooperatively, and share the risk, can determine whether or not R&D work is undertaken.

This legislation encourages joint R&D programs by eliminating uncertainty about the application of our antitrust laws. It clearly spells out the legitimacy of these efforts. And it is equally clear in protecting the consumer from anticompetitive practices involving the production and marketing of new products.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 5041.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Joint Research and Development Act of 1984, of which I am an original cosponsor.

This is a bipartisan work product.

Mr. Speaker, we are here today because of the diligent bipartisan efforts of the gentleman from California (Mr. EDWARDS) the chairman of the full committee (Mr. RODINO) and on our side, because of the initiatives of Messrs. MOORHEAD, LUNGREN, and SENSENBRENNER.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will go far toward encouraging cooperative research ventures between competitors, particularly in high technology, where it is most needed. Cooperative research enterprise is vital to our national interest if our objective is, as it must be, not merely to survive but to prevail in the world marketplace.

Perhaps mindful of my own legislative initiative in this area, H.R. 3641, I would have prefered a bill without a notification procedure. Indeed, the committee report makes such a strong case against notification that one is almost startled to find it still in the bill. I also favor the unqualified award of attorneys fees to prevailing defendants. But there are enough other elements in this legislation to make H.R. 5041 a strong bill, indeed, an essential bill. There is no question that mandating the application of the rule of reason and the provision of single damages for antitrust violations within the scope of R&D joint ventures are critically important incentives for cooperative research by American industry.

I would like to clarify the legislative history on two points. It was clearly the intention of the committee to extend the protection of the bill to development as well as research. The "bright line" is drawn between these activities, on the one hand, and marketing or commercial use of the research product on the other. This is not consistently clear in the committee report. In addition the definition of a joint research and development program is not intended to represent a distinction between permissible and nonpermissible conduct—see page 4 of the committee report. Legality is unrelated to what is in a program. Participants acting within the scope of the venture may happen to engage in conduct which is violative of the antitrust laws, although I hope this will not be the case. The point is that such illegal activities will be punishable by single damages. In sum, conduct which is legal and illegal may fall both within and without the ambit of the R&D program.

Credit for advancing this legislation to this stage properly goes to many individuals on both the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on Science and Technology. Not to be overlooked, however, is the Republican task force on high technology initiatives, under the able chairmanship of my colleague from California, ED ZSCHAU. While a number of R&D bills were working their way through the committee stage, the Republican task force performed an important informational and promotional function which has also materially helped to advance this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5041 is supported by the administration.

Mr. Speaker, passage of H.R. 5041 will allay the fears of the business community regarding their antitrust exposure and will underscore our commitment to regaining America's competitive edge in world markets. Accordingly, I strongly urge its enactment.

□ 1320

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES), a member of the committee.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues on the Committee on the Judiciary in supporting H.R. 5041, the Joint Research and Development Act.

The antitrust laws are a vital protection for the competitive economy that has stood this Nation in good stead from the very beginning. Competition is a major incentive for research and development. Spurred by competitive incentives to gain a larger market share, the small company may hold the key to our technological leadership. I am told, for example, that small companies frequently introduce new and innovative products in the computer and telecommunications industries before their bigger brethren, such as IBM and AT&T.

So, generally speaking, concentrating all R&D in cartel-like ventures among competing corporations will not serve the cause of innovation. But there are situations in which joint R&D can be helpful or even vital to maintaining technological leadership. For example, if R&D projects are long term and costly, it may be extremely inefficient to have each competing firm attempt these projects independently. Indeed, individual firms may choose not to conduct such research at all. Or, if it is done, the burden may fall on the Government, and ultimately on the taxpayer, to finance it.

The legislation before us today represents a measured approach, designed to encourage the right kind of a joint R&D venture. It clarifies the antitrust standard, assuring that no joint research endeavor is deemed per se illegal. It also provides that plaintiffs who unsuccessfully sue such a joint venture pay attorney's fees to the joint venture. And, if a particular joint venture desires additional protection, there is a procedure for reporting the venture to the antitrust agencies—receiving in return an actual damages' limitation in any private antitrust suit challenging the venture's conduct.

I understand that some would prefer legislation that grants broader protection to joint researchers. But I am satisfied that we have struck a proper balance. We have acted to clear unnecessary obstacles to legitimate joint research endeavors while maintaining the protections that the antitrust laws provide for competition. A competitive market structure will, in the long term, provide the best guarantee that our research and development ventures serve the public interest.

I congratulate all of my colleagues on the Judiciary who worked so diligently on H.R. 5041 particularly our chairman, Mr. RODINO, the ranking Republican, Mr. FISH, and Mr. EDWARDS. It is a good bill and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. NELSON).

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is an example of the megatrends in this country—new directions in which America is moving. Shared technology and cooperative ventures are the order of the day. Cooperation among U.S. firms, if it is properly structured, can be a significant way for conducting research and development efficiently and for enhancing American productivity and making us the most competitive in world markets.

Today, we see the need to reduce the potential legal liability of joint American R&D ventures.

H.R. 5041 would clarify the existing treatment under antitrust laws of joint research and development programs undertaken by businesses or groups of individuals.

The bill codifies a stand found in existing law that no conduct which meets the definition of a "joint R&D program" is to be deemed "illegal per se." This provision requires courts before condemning R&D joint ventures, to first consider their potential benefits.

The bill creates a voluntary notification system whereby parties to a R&D joint venture would disclose the identities of the parties, and the nature of the venture to the antitrust enforcement agencies, the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), and thereby receive reduce damage exposure from civil suits based on such activities. Companies complying with these notification provisions would be subject to actual damages in antitrust suits brought against them rather than treble damages.

I congratulate the gentleman from California (Mr. EDWARDS), the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FUQUA), and others who have crafted this legislation. I have been privileged to cosponsor similar legislation, H.R. 4043, authored by Mr. FUQUA.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

● Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5041, the Joint Research and Development Act. I believe this legislation is necessary to increase the incentive for competitive-minded joint ventures. H.R. 5041 does this by lessening fears of large antitrust penalties stemming from cooperative efforts.

The Federal Government should foster industry cooperation aimed at making a better product and increasing competitiveness. However, our antitrust laws governing cooperative efforts (section 1 of the Sherman Act and section 7 of the Clayton Act) say that cooperation is in violation if it lessens competition. The line between joint ventures that foster competition and those that increase monopoly power is not drawn clearly. Consequently, the uncertainty of when antitrust penalties would be violated has stifled joint venture activity. This view has been supported by the National Academy of Sciences.

In 1980, the U.S. Department of Justice issued an "Antitrust Guide Concerning Research Joint Ventures" to clarify the law. These guidelines have decreased some of the present law's uncertainty. But treble damages for violations probably still discourage truly competitive ventures.

The U.S. sorely needs industry cooperation in this age of greatly heightened international competition. Our best industrial policy may be to encourage industries to be more efficient, including research through joint enterprises. H.R. 5041 will provide a better environment for cooperation, while keeping appropriate penalties in place.

I also believe H.R. 5041 will help strengthen local industry in Cincinnati. Several local industries could likely benefit through more joint efforts. In addition, the new Institute for Advanced Manufacturing Science in Cincinnati could benefit through increased participation by local firms that have been encouraged to cooperate because of this bill.

I commend the Judiciary Committee for their hard and diligent work and I hope this body will move to strengthen the U.S. economy by passing H.R. 5041.●

● Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, as one of the original authors of legislation on this subject, H.R. 3393, I endorse the efforts embodied in this legislation to remove the disincentive inherent in our antitrust laws that inhibit the formation of research and development joint ventures. This action is imperative if we are to insure the future economic viability of our country, and begin to perceive and confront world competition.

As I indicated in my additional views accompanying this legislation, our antitrust laws implicitly inhibit the ability of U.S. corporations to conduct joint research and development by providing an incentive for costly litigation. Although some of my colleagues believe that this view is more a matter of perception rather than reality, I respectfully suggest that in this instance, perception is reality. If the antitrust threat is perceived to be so great that a particular R&D project is not undertaken, it is immaterial what the Supreme Court might have decided about it years later if it had been undertaken and litigated. In fact, the paucity of decided cases, and thus precedents, is itself one of the reasons for this uncertainty.

Private litigation is an even greater threat to joint ventures than Government action. In order to encourage private attorneys general to supplement the Federal Government's enforcement of the antitrust laws, triple damages are provided as a reward for litigation. Thus, antitrust attorneys are encouraged to file lawsuits. The threat of litigation has seriously affected the private sector's perception of joint research and development cooperation. Unless this perception is removed, businesses will be reluctant to conduct joint research and development under our current interpretation of our antitrust laws.

While this legislation does address the issue of treble damages it does so in a manner that imposes a precondition to the obtaining of relief. Under section 4(a), treble damages are reduced to actual damages only if the notification is deemed sufficient, and in conformance with the requirements of section 6. This determination, I am afraid, can only be made by a court, after extensive litigation, encouraged by the prospect of treble damages. Only after the litigation is concluded will the joint ventures know whether they are liable and whether their damages are times 1 or times 3.

Further, the issue of good faith compliance is not directly addressed in the legislation. Good faith compliance must be taken into consideration, if potential litigants are not to be encouraged to find unintentional errors in the notice so as to obtain treble damages.

While I support the passage of H.R. 5041, I am hopeful that these deficiencies will be remedied prior to its enactment.●

● Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5041. This bill does what I consider to be the minimum to promote cooperative research and development efforts in the private sector. The antitrust laws today have too much of a chilling effect on cooperative R&D ventures. This is counterproductive to our national interests and has become especially critical in the last few years when we have been trying to shift more of the Government's research and development efforts into the private sector while continuing to compete internationally against government-industry trade partnerships.

Although there are some similarities to the bill that the gentleman from Wisconsin and I introduced in June last year, I fear that it provides minimal protection for industrial R&D joint ventures in the face of Federal and State antitrust laws.

As I have previously stated, this country does not have a Government organization to underwrite and coordinate industrial activities overseas such as Japan has, and yet we continue to hang this antitrust sword of Damocles over our industry should they attempt to respond in kind with cooperative research and development programs.

Mr. Speaker, I would have preferred to see this legislation include immunity and exemption from Federal and similar State antitrust laws for any venture by meeting statutory standards that the Congress could set in the law. This would have completely removed the threat of antitrust lawsuits for cooperative research and development efforts.

Additionally, I would have preferred to see this legislation include a provision which would limit the liability of any joint research and development venture should it fail to meet the requirements of the act and be held in violation of the Federal antitrust laws. Although this bill, H.R. 5041, purports to limit liability to actual damages, there is substantial uncertainty as to whether actual damages, rather than treble damages, will be applied in a particular case. This uncertainty diminishes the attractiveness of establishing a joint venture by failing to completely remove this legal disincentive to joint research and development. I am afraid that the present vehicle has too much of the "Mr. Sherman said to Mr. Clayton" flavor.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my thanks to the chairman of the Subcommittee on Science Research and Technology of the Science Committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WALGREN, for taking action on my bill and H.R. 4043, the compromise bill later introduced and reported from the full Committee on Science and Technology.

I would also thank the chairman of the full Committee on Science and Technology, the gentleman from Florida, Mr. FUQUA, for his foresight in leading the first Committee of the House to report this type of legislation.

I thank the ranking Republican members of the SRT Subcommittee and full Science Committee, the gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. GREGG, and the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. WINN, for their strong support for this legislation in our committee.

I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, for his leadership on this issue.

Finally Mr. Speaker, although I have not spoken in superlative about H.R. 5041, I believe it is a starting point in the legislative process and for that reason I would like to thank the chairman of that committee, the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. RODINO, for his in bringing this bill to the floor. However, I would like to say to the gentleman that I would have preferred that this legislation come before the House in a manner that would allow the House to consider improving and perfecting amendments. I would also say to the gentleman that the bill probably should have been sequentially referred to the Committee on Science and Technology so that it could share its expertise on the unique requirements of research and development with the Committee on the Judiciary. However, I know these issues were discussed with the gentleman and considering the differences between us, I believe this bill is much better than no bill at all. I, therefore, join in supporting it and urge its adoption in the House.●

THE CUTTING EDGE

● Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. RODINO, for his efforts to give our electronics and high-technology companies the tools they need to compete in today's international marketplace.

The need for legislation of this sort is clear. Research and development is the foundation upon which economic growth, productivity, and modern and efficient manufacturing techniques are built. Today, however, that foundation appears to be crumbling.

Research and development expenditures in this country as a percentage of the GNP have declined by one-fifth over the past 20 years. By way of contrast, in Japan such expenditures went up by one-third over that same period.

At any point in time, these kinds of statistics would be embarrassing. But at a time when we are rapidly becoming part of a global economy—when the economic inefficiencies of any one industry mean that our country as a whole loses ground to our overseas competitors—they are potentially devastating.

There are a number of reasons for our national lag in R&D. Research and development is incredibly expensive, and many firms are plagued by a severe shortage of qualified scientific and engineering personnel and must engage in an expensive competition for a limited number of technically qualified workers.

For many firms, particularly the smaller ones, the only realistic way to conduct an active research and development program is to pool resources with other firms. Unfortunately, however, confusion over current antitrust restrictions has choked off such endeavors—leaving many of these companies high and dry.

And that is why Congress needs to step in and clarify these laws—to provide these companies with clear, precise, and certain guidelines—such as Mr. SYNAR, Mr. GEPHARDT, Mr. ZSCHAU, and I attempted to do in legislation we introduced on this subject last year (H.R. 1952). H.R. 1952, which was widely supported by the electronics industry, would have achieved this goal by establishing a set of objective statutory standards that, if met, would have insulated a joint venture from antitrust liability.

Mr. RODINO's bill also clearly intends to provide our companies with the kind of certainty they need to proceed with legitimate joint research and development endeavors. For example, with regard to the issue of defining the impacts on competition, the committee report on H.R. 5041 clearly states on page 21: "As in current merger analysis, the possible worldwide reach of the relevant market should be carefully examined for each R&D joint venture."

Unfortunately, the bill itself is silent on the issue of worldwide market: a potentially serious problem in my opinion. After all, if we are attempting to provide our companies with the certainty they need to move ahead with joint R&D—and place themselves on the cutting edge of new innovation—we must set down rules that are applicable to the game that is being played. And with ever-increasing frequency that game is international—not domestic—in scope. No one would dream of trying to govern Olympic competition with rules set up for an intramural soccer match. Neither should we try to govern R&D activities in worldwide industries within domestic market parameters.

It is my understanding that the Senate Judiciary Committee has recognized this fact in its own legislation, which it reported out recently. Specifically, as I understand it, that bill stipulates that the permissability of joint R&D ventures should be judged on the basis of reasonableness, taking into account all relevant factors affecting competition, including the "effects on competition in properly defined relevant research and development markets." It also is my understanding that the draft report on that bill goes on to discuss in some detail what factors should be taken into consideration in defining those markets, including overseas competition/markets.

Although I intend to vote in favor of Mr. RODINO's bill and believe it is a good first step toward providing our high technology, electronic, and other companies with the kind of certainty they need to engage in needed joint research and development endeavors, I am hopeful that the bill that is eventually passed by the full Congress and signed into law by the President will include even clearer guidelines, such as those laid out in the version under consideration in the other body.

Again, I commend the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. RODINO, for his leadership in this area, and look forward to eventual enactment of a law that will give our companies the tools they need today to fuel innovation for a healthier economy tomorrow.

Thank you.●

● Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my Judiciary Committee chairman, Mr. RODINO, for his prompt leadership on this important issue.

The need for clarification of our antitrust laws in relation to joint ventures for research and development is unquestionable. Today's bill modestly solves the problem of uncertainty as to antitrust enforcement and provides a framework within which aggressive American firms can confidently join forces to accomplish basic R&D.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Judiciary Committee and the Monopolies Subcommittee, I would like to stress one point. The bill mandates that courts analyze the competitive status of joint ventures under the rule of reason. This longstanding test offers a fair and thorough measure. But rule of reason analysis of joint ventures for R&D may require that factors other than those traditionally used be taken into account.

For example, traditional rule of reason analysis looks at the competitive effects on both geographic and end-product markets as measured by sales. These can be nonsensical in an R&D context: There are no sales, there may be no end-product market or clearly defined geographic marketplace. Consequently, courts should be mindful of this when reviewing joint ventures under this legislation.

The rule of reason is a good tool and the courts generally have used it creatively and successfully in analyzing business behavior. I am hopeful that the courts will recognize the essential differences in the nature of R&D and apply the rule of reason accordingly.

I support this effort to clarify our antitrust laws and hope we can have a final product enacted into law before the 98th Congress adjourns. I am proud of the speed with which we have moved on this matter and hope that we are helping improve our Nation's ability to compete.●

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. EDWARDS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5041, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

CONGRATULATING THE GOVERNMENT OF COLOMBIA ON ITS EFFORTS TOWARD HERBICIDAL ERADICATION

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 275) congratulating the Government of Colombia for its decision to test herbicidal eradication and expressing the hope that the Government of Colombia will carry out a sustained eradication program, as amended.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 275

Whereas the importation of cocaine and marihuana into the United States is of major, continuing concern to the Congress;

Whereas during the week of March 11, 1984, the Government of Colombia undertook a series of raids during which a record total of over twelve metric tons of cocaine was seized;

Whereas while the Colombian interdiction efforts are increasingly effective, control of illicit cultivation and production requires the use of technologically advanced, systematic eradication programs; and

Whereas Colombia, as well as the United States, suffers the effects of drug abuse, thus sharing a common need to bring this illicit production under control: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress—

(1) commends the Government of Colombia for its recent seizure of record amounts of cocaine; and

(2) congratulates the Government of Colombia and the Colombian National Council on Dangerous Drugs on the recent decision to conduct experimental testing of herbicidal eradication methods which can be used to eliminate the cultivation of both cannabis and coca; and

(3) expresses its hope and encouragement that the comprehensive pilot program which has now begun becomes the start of a sustained program to eliminate all illicit cultivation.

SEC. 2. The Congress hereby deplores the brutal assassination on April 30, 1984, of the Minister of Justice of Colombia, Rodrigo Lara Bonilla, a leader in the fight against illicit narcotics in Colombia, and extends its condolences to the Government of Colombia, his family, and his friends.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROOMFIELD) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL).

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 275, as amended, commending the Government of Colombia for its recent seizure of record amounts of cocaine, congratulating the Government of Colombia for its decision to test herbicidal eradication, and expressing the hope that the Government of Colombia will carry out a sustained eradication program. This resolution was approved, as amended, by the Committee on Foreign Affairs on April 5, 1984.

In March of this year, an extraordinary event took place in Colombia: The largest drug bust in history. The Colombian National Police seized 13.8 tons of cocaine with a street value of $1.2 billion. This amount is approximately one-fourth the annual cocaine consumption in the United States. House Concurrent Resolution 275 commends the Government of Colombia for its record seizure.

Earlier this year, there was another significant development in Colombia: For the first time, the Colombian National Council on Dangerous Drugs has recommended experimental testing of herbicidal eradication methods which can be used to eliminate marihuana and coca cultivation. This decision is a crucial step toward controlling the flow of cocaine and marihuana into the United States, and the resolution therefore congratulates the Government of Colombia for making this decision.

House Concurrent Resolution 275 also expresses the hope and encouragement of the U.S. Congress that the comprehensive pilot program which has been authorized by the Colombians becomes the start of a sustained program to eliminate all illicit cultivation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I regret to inform my colleagues that last night the Colombian Minister of Justice, Rodrigo Lara Bonillo, was brutally assassinated by machinegun in Bogota. Minister Lara, since his appointment last August, had waged a vigorous fight against narcotics trafficking in Colombia. Therefore, House Concurrent Resolution 275 has been amended to deplore Mr. Lara's assassination, and express the condolences of the Congress to the Government of Colombia, his family, and his friends.

I would like to commend my colleague from Florida (Mr. SHAW) for his leadership on this resolution, and I urge the adoption of House Concurrent Resolution 275, as amended.

I am including as part of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, one of the wire service stories on the brutal assassination of the Colombian Minister of Justice, because it points out more clearly than most of us realize how desperate this situation is with respect to eradication and the control of the drug traffic in all countries, our own included.

The article follows:

[From the United States Press International]

ASSASSINATION OF COLOMBIAN MINISTER OF JUSTICE

(By Ray Perez)

BOGOTA, COLOMBIA, May 1, 1984—President Belisario Betancur declared a state of siege in Colombia today following the machinegun assassination of the justice minister in an attack believed connected with his crackdown on drug trafficking.

Betancur went on national television early today—hours after the killing—to announce that the state of siege already in effect in four of the nation's provinces would be extended to the whole country. He also called an emergency meeting of his Cabinet.

Under the state of siege, all guarantees under the constitution are suspended, meaning among other things that police and troops can detain suspects indefinitely.

The assassination Monday of Justice Minister Rodrigo Lara Bonilla, 40, followed death threats against the minister for his sweeping crackdown on Colombia's lucrative drug trade.

Bodyguards escorting Lara in another car returned fire, killing the driver of the motorcycle and wounding the submachine-gun wielding assailant in the back, police said.

Police said the wounded gunman, identified as Byron Velasquez Arena, 23, confessed he and his partner were offered $20,000 by an unknown person in Medellin, Colombia, to kill a high government official but said he did not know the victim was Lara.

Medellin, 150 miles northwest of Bogota, is believed to be the center of the Colombian drug trade.

The assassins struck at about 7:30 p.m. Monday as Lara was being driven home through a northern Bogota neighborhood, shadowed by a police car and a second station wagon that held his four bodyguards.

The gunman riding on the back of the motorcycle opened fire with a submachine gun at an intersection, blasting the minister's car with more than 20 bullets, and hurled a grenade that stopped the police car, police said.

Lara was hit at least 10 times in the head, chest and arms in a hail of fire that smashed through the windows, doors and seats of the cream colored Mercedes. He died shortly after being taken by police to a Bogota clinic, officials said.

His bodyguards leaped out of their stationwagon and opened fire with submachine guns, killing the driver and wounding the rider, both of whom were armed with submachine guns and wearing bullet-proof vests. The dead driver was not immediately identified.

President Belisario Betancur, who had met earlier in the day with his justice minister, went to the hospital where Lara died and offered condolences to the family. The president made no public comment.

Lara, a senator for the New Liberalism party, had announced he planned to retire as minister soon and take a post as ambassador after leading a government campaign against Colombia's lucrative drug trade.

Seven months ago, Lara told the Colombian Congress that drug traffickers were plotting to kill him.

Within weeks of his appointment as justice minister last August, Lara launched a tough campaign against the drug trade and charged that crime families were influencing political elections with "dirty money."

About 100 airplanes were grounded by Lara and scores of others were placed under surveillance because his investigation revealed they were being used to transport drugs.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to commend the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL), and also the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW), for their bipartisan support of this concurrent resolution.

I strongly support House Concurrent Resolution 275 which praises the Government of Colombia for its decision to test herbicidal eradication. I encourage Colombia to continue this fine effort and work to eliminate all illicit cultivation.

More than ever before, almost every country in the world is faced with some type of drug problem. Our country and Colombia are certainly no exception to the rule. Both of our Nations face the drug challenge.

Drug addiction is a national problem here in the United States of crisis proportions. Lives have been lost and families have been ruined. Drug dealers make billions of dollars annually in their illegal and immoral efforts to corrupt our Nation's youth and lead them down the road to drug dependence. Just last week, we all heard of the tragic death of David Kennedy and the details of his life-long battle with drugs. My heart goes out to his family and loved ones. His tragic death is one of the many which will occur this year unless our country does something now to stop this shameful, illicit drug trade.

The Government of Colombia recently undertook a series of successful raids and large quantities of cocaine were seized. Much of that cocaine was destined for the United States. The Colombian Government is to be commended for its successful drug interdiction program.

Let us hope that the current Colombian program to control illicit cultivation and production will continue. I am certain that our Government is standing by to provide any necessary assistance to the Colombian Government in their noteworthy efforts.

I am delighted to know that we are united in this battle, and I am confident that the battle will, in the end, be won.

With these sobering thoughts in mind, I call on my colleagues to support this resolution congratulating the Government of Colombia for its excellent efforts in drug eradication.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. FEIGHAN), chairman of the Task Force on International Narcotics Control.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee for bringing the resolution to the floor. It is important for this Congress to note genuine progress in the field of international narcotics control—an area that is all too often marked by frustration and failure.

For years, Colombia has been one of the major source countries for narcotics entering the United States. Over half of the cocaine, and nearly 85 percent of the marihuana, consumed here comes from Colombia. Moreover, substantial evidence links the illegal drug trade and the Cuban-directed flow of arms to terrorist groups throughout Central and South America.

The effects of this traffic are staggering and well-known. Just this morning, we were all saddened to learn that the Colombian Minister of Justice, Rodrigo Lara Bonilla, fell to an assassin's bullet. His untimely death is a direct result of the Government of Colombia's determination to attack drug smuggling head on, and a vivid reminder of the dangers facing any individual—or any country—which seeks to stop the ruthless smugglers.

We should encourage, support and protect the Colombian Government as best we can. In the last year, they have intensified the antidrug fight, and the results have been remarkable. In March, Colombian police working with the U.S. Embassy in Bogota made the biggest cocaine bust in history. And for the first time, the Colombian Government has authorized the use of herbicides to eradicate large coca and marihuana plantations.

Our experience has shown that crop eradication is one of the best ways to control drug trafficking. We should encourage it whenever we can. This resolution rightly applauds the Colombians for their energetic efforts; it is a tribute to Rodrigo Bonilla who led these vital efforts, and it will tell the American people that we care about the health of our children and the strength of our families.

I commend the gentleman from Florida for offering this resolution, and I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 275, which commends the Government of Colombia for its recent action in a major cocaine seizure and drug bust.

I also want to commend the original sponsors, Mr. FASCELL and Mr. SHAW.

The United States has made a concerted effort to stem the flow of illegal narcotics into this country. That effort relies in major part on the cooperation of our allies around the world. To those who are not well informed on the subject, it often appears that other countries in the world are not taking as active an interest in the drug problems that affect all of us, not only in this country, but in virtually every society in the world.

Those problems are compounded when inaccurate and misleading media reports ignore or incorrectly relate the efforts made by friendly governments overseas to halt drug trafficking in their country. The case of Columbia is an excellent example. As this resolution points out, the largest seizure of illegal drugs ever made was carried out by the Government of Colombia. It was a massive undertaking, and in the process revealed the active involvement of leftist guerrillas, backed by Castro, in the drug trafficking. A number of us in the Congress have urged an investigation into the Cuban connection in drug trafficking. In light of the Colombian actions, the evidence is all the more compelling of Cuban direction and support of drug trafficking in this hemisphere. Once again, I take this opportunity to urge the Foreign Affairs Committee to investigate Castro's and Cuba's role in drug dealing.

Unfortunately, a recent report by Bill Moyers on CBS overlooked the Cuban connection and specifically criticized governments "like Colombia" for not working actively to control drug trafficking. Reports like that, which are patently false, only serve to make our work more difficult in trying to gain the cooperation of our allies in trying to stop drug trafficking. For that reason it is especially important to take this opportunity to commend the Government of Colombia for its efforts. It is also a fitting memorial to the Minister of Justice of Colombia Rodrigo Lara Bonilla, who led the fight against the subversive elements in his country in trying to stop the flow of drugs through Colombia. The reports of his assassination this morning add a sober reminder that the war against drugs will not be easy and will not be without great cost. The Government of Colombia deserves the admiration and gratitude of this Nation for its tireless efforts to stop the flow of drugs through its country.

I commend the gentlemen for their timely and appropriate resolution and I especially commend the Government of Colombia for its remarkable achievements in fighting the menance of drugs.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. CORRADA).

Mr. CORRADA. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this resolution which commends the Government of Colombia for its recent actions to control the production of cocaine.

Illegal drugs, with their tragic effect on our society, must be eradicated. In this battle, all efforts must be coordinated and no reasonable and vigorous method spared to insure that, to the maximum extent possible, we free ourselves from the slavery of drugs.

The tragic murder yesterday of Rodrigo Lara Bonilla, the Justice Minister of Colombia, and a vigorous fighter in the war against drugs, only reaffirms the need for firm and thorough actions against those that seek to enslave us. I am hopeful that the Government of Colombia will redouble its efforts to insure that the comprehensive pilot program which is scheduled to begin will give yield to a sustained program to eliminate all illicit cultivation.

I urge my colleagues to approve this resolution.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN).

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) for sponsoring this measure, and our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) and our ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROOMFIELD) for bringing this measure to the floor at this time.

Both our Foreign Affairs Committee's Narcotics Task Force, on which I serve, and our Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control on which I serve, as the ranking member have been reviewing extensively the terrible problem of illicit narcotics trafficking to which this resolution refers. We have been actively seeking the assistance of other nations to help us eradicate the production of narcotics and I am pleased to note the efforts undertaken by one such nation, the Government of Colombia.

As I stated during our committee's deliberations of House Concurrent Resolution 275, during our Government's consideration about the narcotics problem, we often point to the shortcomings of the narcotics control programs of other nations. I believe that any good work and diligent efforts in the war against narcotics, should be recognized and for that reason, I am pleased that the House has this opportunity to note the commendable measures undertaken by the Colombian Government.

As this resolution observes, Colombia, as well as our own Nation, suffer the effects of drug abuse and thus our two nations share a common need: To bring illicit drug production under control. I know my colleagues share the hope that our two nations will expand our current efforts to combat jointly the illicit narcotic cultivation and trafficking which continues to threaten the peoples of both of our nations.

Mr. Speaker, this measure also points to the heinous assassination on April 30, 1984, of the Minister of Justice of Colombia, Rodriguez Lara Bonilla. The resolution deplores that brutal crime against the Government of Colombia, and indeed against all nations and groups seeking to eradicate the criminal forces which stop at nothing to ply their despicable trade.

Mr. Lara set a fine example during his tenure as Colombia's Justice Minister, applying the full weight and authority of his office in his nation's fight against the illicit drug trade. Our Select Committee on Narcotics had the opportunity of meeting with Mr. Lara just a few months ago, and from what we learned, we certainly respected the effort that he had undertaken.

We mourn the loss of this dedicated public servant, Minister Rodriguez Lara Bonilla, a courageous combatant in the fight against illicit narcotics and we extend our Nation's condolences to the Government of Colombia, to his family and to his friends.

It is our hope that the Government of Colombia will continue in its valiant efforts to stamp out the production and distribution of illegal narcotics. We were pleased to read the April 1 statement of President Betancur of Colombia, and the need for his nation to intensify its campaign against narcotics.

Mr. Speaker, I am requesting that a full copy of President Betancur's statement be included at this point in the RECORD.

The following is an unofficial translation of comments on drug trafficking made by President Belisario Betancur in a nationally broadcast speech on Sunday April 1, 1984:

We must continue to seek the solid peace that we now have sight of. Do you know why? To dedicate all our energy and many resources to the safety of the citizenry; to the defense of the life, honor and the possessions of the average Colombian, not only in the sense of protection against crime, but in providing the necessary basic services that are not available because the money is obligated to other needs.

And do you know for what else? To recover the national dignity that the narcotics traffic has snatched away from us, displaying us with that black image to the world and making our youth ill, perverting it with drugs. This is the great task we have ahead of us; to denounce them daily; to tell them they cannot continue unhinging our society to which they themselves belong. To tell them in one great chorus: Enough!

We should stop speaking with amusement, as if it were a subject to be taken lightly, about the things that are happening with the power of that money. The greatest problem Colombia has faced in its history is drugs and their tenebrous effect on our people, their health and their morality. There, all our poverty, our unemployment, our estrangement from the basic values, was dramatically synthesized. Putting it another way, what is at issue is to rescue a society made to feel alien, estranged, almost nonexistent by many factors. From there comes the major surgery which should become the untiring, sleepless and bold new battle for moral peace.

Just a few days ago I was saying without an apocalyptic tone that every city councilman that appears in a town on account of drugs can easily equal three, four, or five guerrilla fronts in the remote mountains; each family with an honest background that enters the drug business is not akin to someone taking up arms for some vague or concrete political ideal, instead, they contribute to the expansion of the army of the new anarchy created by the demolishing chimera of that easy money which permits opulent and extravagant life-styles.

Because of all that and because the multinationals of crime that assume various forms in the world are a fact. We are urgently requesting a world pact against these new types of crime, a pact proposed to us with our concurrence by the United States, Venezuela and Bolivia, among other countries. This obviously signifies a recognition of the interdependence, of the common interest to survive, among the peoples and the states, with direct reference to certain aspects of national sovereignty. Through this formula the difficulties with the bilateral agreements that lend themselves to troublesome confusion because of certain details and characteristics can be overcome.

I insist that we are faced with a new, more lethal menace, because it does not manifest itself solely in a classic revolt against legitimate authority, but rather with its startling strategy and plan of action attempts to overpower the state practically as a secondary objective because it first accomplishes the stage of demoralization by means of money; with a society's core destroyed in this manner, the state falls almost on its own.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to suspend the rules and pass this resolution.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I just want to congratulate my distinguished colleague for an excellent statement. I would like permission to associate myself with the gentleman's remarks. I think the gentleman has spoken eloquently. I congratulate him on his work, not just on this particular measure, but in the area of drug enforcement and demand reduction generally.

I also congratulate my colleague from Florida (Mr. SHAW), who also serves with me on the Subcommittee on Crime for his leadership, and the chairman, for so expeditiously moving this resolution to the floor.

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman for his remarks. The gentleman from New Jersey has been one of the outstanding, long-term fighters against narcotics in the Congress, and joined us last summer in our mission to Colombia where we had the opportunity of meeting personally with the Colombian Attorney General, the gentleman who was recently assassinated.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW).

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to review for just a moment what got us to this point where we are today. About 10, or 15 years ago Mexico was the largest foreign producer of marihuana supplying the United States. The Government of Mexico adopted an eradication program which was most ambitious and most effective. They decreased the production of marihuana in Mexico down to a negligible amount.

Colombia then came to the front and became the chief producer of marihuana to the United States. It has been estimated that 85 percent of the marihuana imported illegally into the United States comes from Colombia. They have also grown considerably in both the production of cocaine and the growing of the coca plant.

This has become a matter of great concern to the American people, recognizing the devastating effect that drugs have had on this country. The gentleman from Florida, the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, my friend Mr. FASCELL, is more aware perhaps than anyone in this Chamber today of the devastating effect that drugs can have on a community. As representing the southernmost district in the United States, comprised of Key West up to the southern part of Miami, he is keenly aware of the effect that lawlessness can have on his own community, even though this lawlessness may be centered a thousand miles away in the area of Colombia.

About 1½ years ago, Mr. FASCELL and I had a similar resolution, but this resolution was one more of a critical nature that made its way through the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives. The then chairman, Mr. ZABLOCKI, with my encouragement, held back bringing that resolution to the floor of this House because it did appear at that time that there was improvement underway. That Colombia had indicated a willingness, and in fact, a desire to become involved in an active way in the eradication of illegal drugs that were produced and manufactured in that country.

Then past March, you heard about the drug raid that took place in that country, and at last we did see that the country of Colombia was going to embark upon what could develop, and which we hope and pray, will develop into a most ambitious program of eradication.

All of the interdiction efforts that we can put forth in this country cannot put anywhere near the dent in the drug trade as an eradication program in the source country, and the source country in this instance is Colombia. So Colombia, under President Betancur, and the former Minister of Justice Bonilla, had gone forward with what we thought and what we still believe and hope will be a most effective eradication program.

Unfortunately, just this morning we learned of the most untimely and unfortunate death of the Minister of Justice. I would hope this resolution of this House of Representatives would stand as a memorial to his life and what he was able to accomplish, and his purpose, not only for his own country but for the good of the world, in the eradication of drugs. He foresaw the problems that his country has undergone.

We have seen now the Communist guerrillas becoming more and more involved in the growing of domestic drugs in Colombia, "domestic," of course, referring to Colombia itself. Colombia has also felt the problems of having their young people and their adult population becoming involved with the use of drugs. They have seen a necessity, for their own purposes, of joining in a partnership with the United States for a meaningful eradication of drugs and what we believe will be an effective program.

I would hope that what we have seen happen in Colombia is a meaningful first step, small as it may be, but one that should not go unrecognized by this country and by this House of Representatives. They have a long way to go. There is a lot of work yet to be done. We have only dented the surface, but the promise of success is so great and so meaningful to this country and to the population of the world that I urge this Congress to overwhelmingly approve this resolution and congratulate Colombia for the small first step that they have made, and encourage them to go on and join the rest of the world in doing away with this threat to the population of the entire world.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAW. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman for a very eloquent statement and commend him again for his leadership, and that of the chairman of the committee, in bringing this issue before us.

I think what the gentleman has said about this resolution being a memorial to the Justice Minister is certainly apt and appropriate, and I hope that the House unanimously adopts this resolution.

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. RUDD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to commend the gentleman for his statement and the hard work that has been done here. This is a recognition of the truly enormous fight that we have on our hands with regard to narcotics. I commend the gentleman from New York for the fine work that he has done on this, and I hope that this resolution will pass without any opposition.

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is most important to note here that so many of the committees of this Congress have been deeply involved in trying to do away with the growing drug menace throughout the entire world, and this has got to be a worldwide effort.

We have seen our own youth attacked by the use of these illegal drugs, and I think that the rest of the world now has to gather together and say, "Enough is enough, and we are serious about eradicating this menace to the future of the world and mankind."

● Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 275, congratulating the Government of Colombia on its use of herbicides as a means of eliminating the cultivation of marihuana and coca, and expressing the hope that this program of eradication can be sustained.

Last August, I traveled with the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control to Mexico, Peru, Bolivia, Jamaica, and Colombia. At that time, Mexico was the only country of the five we visited that showed us positive proof that they were addressing the drug-cultivation problem using herbicide eradication.

However, I am pleased that Colombia now recognizes its obligations to detect and eradicate the illicit cultivation of narcotic crops in its territory and demonstrate a national will and commitment to eliminate that cultivation.

Earlier this year, Colombia was the site of the world's largest drug bust. Airborne Colombian Police raided a cocaine-processing plant operating under Communist protection in southeastern Colombia and seized 12,500 kilos of cocaine. State Department narcotics experts placed the street value of the captured cocaine at $1.2 billion.

Much of the credit was due to the efforts of Colombian Justice Minister Rodrigo Lara Bonilla. I was deeply saddened to hear of his assassination yesterday. His assassination is a tragedy for both the Colombian Government and the United States, for he was a friend and ally against the baneful evil of the illicit drug trade.●

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolutions 275. I would also like to commend the gentlemen from Florida (Mr. SHAW and Mr. FASCELL) for introducing this resolution congratulating the Government of Colombia for its decision to test herbicidal eradication and expressing the hope that the Colombian Government will carry out a sustained eradication program.

The bulk of the cocaine consumed by users in the United States originates in Colombia where it is clandestinely manufactured from raw coca materials produced mostly in Peru and Bolivia. During the first 6 months of last year, the retail price of cocaine in the United States plummeted by 50 percent and its purity has increased.

Simultaneously, the abuse of cocaine has shown a dramatic increase. In the United States there are an estimated 8 million users of cocaine and one out of every four users of cocaine are reported to commit crime to support their habit. Emergency room mentions for cocaine reported through the Drug Abuse Warning Network (DAWN) system increased from 4,731 in 1982 to 5,394 in 1983. My own city of New York showed the most dramatic increases in cocaine abuse in recent years with emergency room mentions rising from 751 in 1978 to 2,670 in 1982.

Colombia is also the source of almost 70 percent of the marihuana smuggled into the United States. Marihuana is still the most commonly abused drug in the United States and poses a particularly serious abuse problem among young people. The DAWN system reported a 13-percent increase in marihuana-related hospital emergencies in 1982. Marihuana-related hospital emergency reports over a 4-year period rose from 982 to 1,782 in New York; 238 to 393 in Los Angeles; and from 4,055 to 5,293 nationally.

Last year, during a study mission that included Peru, Bolivia, and Colombia, members of the Select Committee met with Colombia's President Belesario Betancur and several of his cabinet members. At that time, the delegation urged President Betancur to wage a more effective battle in the effort to eradicate coca and marihuana and the trafficking of the drugs to the United States.

The Colombian National Police raids, which were undertaken in March and which netted 12½ metric tons of cocaine—the largest seizure ever made—is evidence that our study mission has had some impact. We commend the Colombian Government for this initiative and we urge the Colombian Government to intensify its efforts against narcotics production and drug trafficking.

House Concurrent Resolution 275 is especially important because it represents continuing congressional concern about the drug problem in this Nation and in nations all over the world. It also emphasizes that the United States will support and work alongside those nations which strive to eradicate illicit narcotics production and halt drug trafficking.●

● Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 275, which congratulates the Government of Colombia for its recent efforts to control the production of cocaine and marihuana.

I believe that drug addiction is the most terrible disease affecting the young people in America. And although Colombia is one of the main sources of the narcotics entering the United States, its present Government is taking the lead among Latin American countries in cooperating with the international community in putting an end to drug trafficking.

During the week of March 11, 1984, Colombian authorities in cooperation with U.S. authorities seized more than 12 metric tons of cocaine with a street value of over $1 billion. This initiative dealt a serious blow to drug traffickers in Colombia and elsewhere and established a world record. This is the beginning of a long fight against those who profit from the destruction of the minds of our children. But unfortunately, this is going to be a long and bloody battle. The first casualty occurred just a few days ago when Rodrigo Lara Bonilla, the Colombian Minister of Justice, was murdered. Minister Lara had taken the lead in the drug battle and thus had been targeted for assassination. His murder is a great loss to Colombia and to all of us who support these efforts.

The Government of Colombia deserves to be commended for this effort and other initiatives underway to experiment with herbicidal erradications. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting House Concurrent Resolution 275, which sends a message to Colombia that the United States is behind them 100 percent in their meritorious efforts to fight the production of narcotics.●

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution. House Concurrent Resolution 275, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the concurrent resolution just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

EXPRESSING SUPPORT FOR INITIATIVES OF CONTADORA GROUP AND RESULTING AGREEMENTS AMONG CENTRAL AMERICAN NATIONS

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 261) expressing support for the initiatives of the Contadora Group and the resulting agreements among the Central American nations.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 261

Whereas at the initiative of the four Contadora Nations of Colombia, Mexico, Panama, and Venezuela, the Governments of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua agreed on January 8, 1984, to Principles for the Implementation of the Commitments Undertaken in the Document of Objectives;

Whereas those agreed Principles include specific and significant measures for immediate implementation as well as establishment of a mechanism for development of recommendations for verifications, supervision of compliance, and further steps toward a regional peace agreement;

Whereas those measures include human and political rights as well as immediate elimination of illegal arms traffic and all forms of support for insurgents;

Whereas the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America concluded that "a key objective for the United States should be to promote the development of an independent system of regional relations, backed up by commitments of United States economic resources, diplomatic support, and military assistance" and that the Contadora process deserves "the gratitude and encouragement of all the nations in the hemisphere";

Whereas President Reagan has expressed the United States Government's support for the Contadora process; and

Whereas this effort by the countries of the region to resolve their differences peacefully in accordance with internationally recognized principles deserves the concrete support of the United States and other countries: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress—

(1) strongly supports the initiatives taken by the Contadora Nations and the resulting Document of Objectives and Principles for

Implementation which have been agreed to by Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua;

(2) believes that the United States should support the effort to translate the agreed Principles into practical and concrete regional peace agreement based on the principles of noninterference in the affairs of other countries, national reconciliation, and democracy; and

(3) believes that in fashioning our policies toward the countries of the region, the Government of the United States should take into consideration the degree of cooperation of Central American governments with the Contadora process in seeking a peaceful and secure solution to Central American conflicts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BARNES) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California (Mr. LAGOMARSINO) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BARNES).

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker. I yield myself such time as I may consume for the purpose of briefly describing the resolution and its legislative history. So far as I know the resolution is noncontroversial, and I do not believe that we will need all our time on this side.

House Concurrent Resolution 261 expresses support for the initiatives of the Contadora Group and the resulting agreements among the Central American nations. It was introduced on February 22 of this year by the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. SOLARZ), a member of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, which I have the honor to chair. I was pleased to join the gentleman in cosponsoring the resolution. On April 5 the resolution was reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs by voice vote.

The resolution notes the progress made by the Contadora nations—Colombia, Mexico, Panama, and Venezuela—and the five Republics of Central America toward devising formulas for peace in the region. It also notes the support for the Contadora process that has been expressed by President Reagan and the Kissinger Commission. The resolution then resolves that the Congress strongly supports this process, and believes that our Government should support it and should encourage our Central American allies to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I am in frequent contact with representatives of the Contadora governments, and I can tell my colleagues that those governments rely a great deal on us in the Congress for support for their efforts. The Contadora process is at a crucial stage. The leaders of those four countries are meeting in Panama even as we meet here this afternoon, and I believe that this further expression of congressional support at this key moment could be very useful. I would urge my colleagues to vote for this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SOLARZ), the principal author of the resolution.

Mr. SOLARZ. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. I also want to thank him not only for his support of this resolution, but for his leadership in helping to bring it to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when both El Salvador and Nicaragua are wracked by internal conflicts that could very easily spill over and engulf the neighboring countries of the region, it seems to me that the adoption of this resolution by the House would be an extraordinarily timely gesture. The truth of the matter is that the Contadora process probably represents the last best hope for peace in Central America. If this commendable diplomatic initiative which was undertaken by Mexico, Panama, Venezuela, and Colombia should ultimately fail, the chances are that the conflicts within the countries of the region will escalate, with the very real possibility of a full-scale war involving all of Central America thereby ensuing.

The Contadora process is by no means guaranteed to succeed. It is going to be extraordinarily difficult. There are very deeply rooted differences among and within the countries of the region, but over the course of the last year or so, the Contadora countries have achieved more progress than many skeptics believed they originally would, and they have, in fact, managed to achieve agreement on a broad statement of principles which would provide for the nonintervention in the internal affairs of other countries in the region by any of the nations in Central America. It provides for the withdrawal of all foreign military advisers. It provides for the disestablishment and the nonestablishment of foreign military bases in the hemisphere, and it would also provide for periodic elections and the democratization, accompanied by national reconciliation within each of the countries of the region.

The ability of the Contadora countries to succeed in their diplomatic endeavors will depend on many factors.

To some extent it will depend on the willingness of the United States to actively support it. The administration says that it supports the Contadora process. This is a way in which the Congress of the United States can go on record supporting it as well.

I think that if this resolution were to pass the House, it would greatly encourage the Contadora countries to continue with their efforts confident that the United States is truly supportive of their efforts. Given the consequences of a failure of the Contadora process, not only for the people of Central America but for our own country, I call upon my colleagues today to support this resolution and to make it absolutely and manifestly clear that the United States, both the President and the Congress, are deeply committed to the success of the Contadora process and are prepared to do whatever we can to make it a success.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 261, expressing support for the Contadora initiative and acknowledging President Reagan's support of it.

Last year, my Republican colleagues on the western hemisphere subcommittee and I introduced a resolution commending the President and expressing the support of the Congress for the President's efforts in support of the Contadora process. At that time, it appeared that too many critics overlooked or ignored the President's efforts at encouraging a negotiated settlement of the Central American crisis. I have believed all along that the President's intention and policies have been directed at achieving a peaceful, political settlement in the region and his support for the Contadora initiative is one element of that process. Where there has been disagreement over the President's policies, I believe, it has been over the most effective way to achieve the result of a political settlement. I do not believe there is any disagreement over the ultimate objective: peace with secure democratic governments and economic progress for the nations of Central America.

I am pleased this resolution recognizes the contribution the Contadora nations have made to the search for a settlement of the crisis affecting the nations of the region and for the degree of cooperation and dialog they have been able to achieve. It is everyone's hope that their efforts will lead to further gains and eventual settlement of the problems in the region. However, the recent refusal by the Sandinista government of Nicaragua to negotiate with its armed opposition and to agree to the suggestions of El Salvador, Honduras, and Costa Rica on implementation of Contadora points, does not provide a great deal of optimism. And, as I mentioned before, I am pleased the sponsors of this resolution have cited President Reagan's effort in support of the Contadora process, and with that I support this resolution. I urge my colleagues to support it as well.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL).

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 261, expressing support for the initiatives of the Contadora group and the resulting agreements among the Central American nations, which was approved by the Committee on Foreign Affairs on April 5, 1984.

The resolution underscores support for the principles forged by the Contadora nations, and agreed to as well by the Central American nations of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua in January. Implementation of their document of principles presents the most realistic chance for peace in the region.

The administration has voiced its support for the Contadora process. We in Congress, through this resolution, again affirm our support for the objectives put forward by that group. Contadora presents a path toward improved relations among the Central American nations, and is an important factor in enhancing our own relations with neighbors in the hemisphere. A peaceful resolution of the conflicts of the region in vitally important for the Central American nations and is, unquestionably, in our own security interest as well.

I would like to commend the sponsors of the resolution, the Honorable STEPHEN J. SOLARZ, and the Honorable MICHAEL D. BARNES, chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere affairs for introducing the resolution, and for their continued diligence and oversight in monitoring the issues relating to Central America.

Throughout consideration of foreign aid proposals to the region the committee, cognizant of the Contadora group's efforts, tried to be supportive of that process and its potential benefits to regional relations and security. House Concurrent Resolution 261 is a further measure of congressional support for attainment of the Contadora objectives. I urge adoption of House Concurrent Resolution 261.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN).

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I, too, commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. SOLARZ) and the distinguished chairman of our Subcommittee on the Western Hemisphere, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BARNES), for bringing this measure to the floor and for bringing the whole problem to our attention.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 261, legislation expressing the support of the Congress for the initiatives of the Contadora Group and the resulting agreements among the Central American nations, seeking a comprehensive regional peace agreement.

I welcome this opportunity for the House to reaffirm its support for the Contadora process. As my colleagues will recall, this body last November passed similar legislation which I was pleased to support.

The Contadora process is an endeavor to bring to the troubled Central American region a comprehensive approach to resolving many of the long lingering economic, political, and social problems. The Contadora Group (Mexico, Panama, Venezuela, and Colombia) has been moving from the conceptual stage of approaches to actual drafting of specific language designed to explore workable policy options. It is my hope that our Nation can continue to assess how it can best work with the Contadora nations. The Contadora process is a meaningful and important undertaking which all nations in the region could accept as a sincere and comprehensive means for bringing a peaceful and secure solution to Central American conflicts.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to suspend the rules and pass House Concurrent Resolution 261.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. WEISS).

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, let me express my appreciation to my distinguished colleague (Mr. BARNES), the chairman of the subcommittee, for yielding this time to me. I wish to commend him, as well as the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SOLARZ), who is the sponsor of this resolution, for their efforts in bringing this resolution before the House at this time.

I had the privilege of heading a small delegation to Central America in January of this year. It was about a 10-day visit, and the first part of it occurred just as that second round of Contadora meetings was taking place. Subsequently we had occasion to meet with the top level governmental people such as foreign ministers and presidents of the various countries in Central America, and I must say, Mr. Speaker, that all of those people with whom we spoke, were so pleased that in spite of all the cynicism and all the concern about whether they could or could not get to agree with one another, in fact they were able to agree sufficiently to move on to the next step.

This resolution, it seems to me, is extremely important because it allows us to demonstrate that the Congress of the United States, if fully supportive of their very difficult and fragile efforts embodied in the Contadora process.

Would that the Reagan administration's protestations of support for the Contadora process be able to be taken at face value. Unfortunately, with the military buildup that this administration is engaging in in Central America, the idea that that has been accepted around the region and throughout the world is that the last thing in the world the administration wants is to negotiate our way out of the situation there.

Congress can play a very significant role. This House can play a very important role in demonstrating that at least as far as the people's representatives are concerned, we do not want to shoot our way into that problem. We want the countries involved to negotiate their way out of it.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RUDD).

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, it is all well and good to speak about a peaceful resolution of the troubles in Central America. I am for a peaceful settlement, and I am sure all Members of this House are for it as well.

However, we are not talking about rational persons or groups in Central America. We are talking about terrorists in El Salvador who know they have no popular support and could never gain power through free elections. They destroy bridges, burn crops and homes, and terrorize the Salvadoran people, hoping to gain power through threats and intimidation.

We are talking about the Sandanistas in Nicaragua who have committed acts of genocide against their own people—the Miskito Indians—and who are seeking to undermine the stability of the entire Central American region, and for that matter, all of Latin America. We are also talking about Cuba, where Western Hemisphere terrorism began.

I recently had the opportunity to speak with appointed and elected officials of Colombia. They are deeply concerned, because in their opinion, Bolivia, Peru, and Colombia are all in grave danger of becoming bloody battlegrounds like those of El Salvador and Nicaragua. These Colombian officials indicated that terrorists, who were trained in Soviet Russia, Cuba, and Nicaragua, are building air strips and headquarter bases in the jungles of their countries.

The Communists would like nothing better to negotiate. They have no popular support. They would never gain power through the ballot box. But once they are accommodated through negotiations, and receive a share of power and positions in government, they will take control. They will have achieved their objectives toward taking power without ever having allowed the people of Central America some way of choosing for themselves who their leaders would be.

I do favor a peaceful resolution of the problems in Central America, but how can the free world ever accommodate the Soviets and their allies in Cuba and Nicaragua by allowing them to obtain power which they could never earn at the ballot box. How can the freedom loving peoples of this hemisphere stand quietly aside for the murderous terrorist armed assault of Soviet Communists in imposing slavery on us all.

This resolution represents what we all wish but cannot obtain without defeating Soviet Cuban encroachment. That means we must devise a way to enforce this resolution.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUDD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman made some very good statements about terrorist activities and the Sandinista's perpetration of terror and denial of human rights to the very people that they supposedly are representing.

Just 15 minutes ago I came over here from my office where we had a meeting with Mr. Prudencio DeJesus Baltodano Silva, who is a farmer and who was a lay minister of an Evangelical Church in Nicaragua.

This gentleman was tortured by the Sandinistas. His ears were cut off. His throat was cut and he was left to bleed to death, but he is alive to tell his story today, and it is a horror story, indeed.

I think sometimes we have to stop and take note of some of the travesties that are going on which we do not see on television, we do not hear on the radio or see in the newspapers.

Mr. Baltodano is here to tell his story. He told it to seven Members of the House in my office and he is telling it to other people; but I think we have to pause and take note that not just one side or the other side has all the good guys or all the bad guys, that there are travesties going on and the Sandinistas are perpetrating many of these on their own people.

Here was an innocent individual, who with his wife and family, was tortured and left to die and yet through some will was able to survive to tell his story.

Mr. Speaker, pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. RUDD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

He says the people of Nicaragua do not support the Sandinistas and that all the people want to do is farm their land and take care of their families, and yet they are not able to do so.

So let us talk about human rights, let us talk about a balanced approach to this issue. That is why we all want to support the Contadora effort. We have come together to do so, but let us not forget that there are people, as the gentleman from Arizona mentioned, who are on the other side of the issue, who are coming forward, the Cubans, the Soviets, and the Sandinistas, who continually deny people their human rights, create terrorist activity and torture individuals, probably right now as we talk, down in Nicaragua and El Salvador and throughout Central America.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has again expired.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

So the point is really that everybody wants peace and this resolution addresses itself very well to that, as does the Contadora process; but the question really comes down to the fact, how do we enforce it and does anyone ever believe that the Communists, once they take power or achieve power or arm themselves in a country enough to the point that they become a power, that they will ever leave peacefully or peaceably or through negotiation.

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to offer my support of House Concurrent Resolution 261 commending the Contadora Group for its initiatives. I believe that the agreements which this Contadora process has produced will hopefully move the nations in that region along the road to peace. This is a goal which all of us can support.

As all of my colleagues know, the Contadora nations of Colombia, Mexico, Panama, and Venezuela worked closely with the governments of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua on a number of basic principles to implement their commitments to a regional peace agreement process. One of the measures agreed to included the elimination of illegal arms traffic and all forms of support for insurgents.

It is encouraging to note that the recent National Bipartisan Commission on Central America supported the efforts of our Government to develop an independent system of regional relations. The Commission also noted that the Contadora process deserved the encouragement of all the nations in this hemisphere. Our President has also expressed his personal support for the Contadora efforts.

I strongly encourage the governments of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua to continue their participation in the Contadora process and I support our Government's fine efforts to encourage this regional peace program. I believe that all Americans are hopeful that a peaceful and secure solution to the conflict in Central America can be brought about.

With these thoughts in mind, let me call upon my colleagues to join me in supporting this resolution.●

● Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of House Concurrent Resolution 261, I urge its adoption by this House.

There are two fundamental errors in this Nation's current foreign policy. We try and impose our will, our ideas and solutions, upon other people and nations who have just as much capacity to solve their own problems as we have to solve those problems for them.

Sometimes, being a leader means supporting others as they take their own lead.

Our other major mistake is to impose—or at least to try and impose—military solutions upon decades old social and political problems.

We are committing both errors right now in Central America, and the shame of this is that there is an alternative: The attempt by the Contadora group of nations to find a regional, peaceful solution.

Let us be smart, not provocative. Let us not just pay lip service to regional efforts, but let us start today with this resolution, to put this Nation firmly on record in enthusiastic support for the Contadora nations and their peace efforts.

I urge the adoption of this resolution.●

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, events in Central America continue to dominate the news as we continue to focus our attention and concern on the turmoil in the region.

Although the United States is perceived as the major influence and catalyst in the region, we cannot put aside and ignore the countries that border the region. Their views and suggestions, in light of their own interests and history, are particularly helpful and relevant.

Since its formation, the Contadora Group has assiduously and thoroughly worked toward the goal of achieving a just and lasting peace among the countries in Central America. Their efforts and dedication have earned them a reputation for fair and equitable suggestions as reflected in the Documents of Objectives and Principles for Implementation. These principles have been agreed to by Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua.

The United States should do everything within its power to assist the Contadora nations in their efforts to turn these principles into concrete arrangements that will yield a lasting peace. Throughout this process, we must always keep in mind the goals of democracy and national reconciliation together with noninterference in the affairs of other nations.

I urge my colleagues to enact this resolution which will place us on record as supporting these efforts that we all hope will bring peace and prosperity to the inhabitants of all countries in the area.●

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 261, a resolution "expressing support for the initiative of the Contadora Group and the resulting agreements among Central American nations."

As a region, Central America is a major focus of U.S. foreign policy. Millions of dollars in development, economic and security assistance are sent to these countries annually. The Kissinger Commission report recommended even more American financial assistance, a massive aid package "aimed at promoting democratization, economic growth, human development and security." This unprecedented aid request, however, cannot alone buy a stable and lasting peace—the ultimate goal of the Kissinger Commission recommendations for Central America. A strong and vigorous diplomatic effort, on a regional basis, must accompany any U.S. foreign assistance program. The Contadora Group has provided the impetus and leadership for such an effort, and the United States should strongly support this initiative.

In November, the House of Representatives passed a resolution supporting the 21-point "Document of Objectives" adopted by the Contadora nations during a September 1983 meeting. The document outlined broad objectives aimed at resolving the tensions in the region. I strongly supported this effort when the resolution was considered.

In January of this year, the Contadora Group took another step toward regional peace in Central America. The Governments of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras—joined by the Contadora nations of Columbia, Mexico, Panama, and Venezuela—agreed to "Principles for the Implementation of the Commitments Undertaken in the Document of Objectives." The principles include specific and significant measures for immediate implementation as well as the establishment of a mechanism for development of recommendations for verification and compliance.

The principles include three specific areas of concern of Central American peace and security. First, activities are recommended to eliminate foreign involvement in the conflicts in the region and to end illegal arms traffic and other forms of support for insurgents. This handsoff policy must apply universally for all nations inside and outside the region.

Second, the newly agreed to document recommends a national reconciliation effort and a guarantee for full respect for human rights and the democratic electoral process. Finally, the document recommends intensified aid for refugees and other actions to promote social and economic progress through trade and investment. The agreement also provides an important mechanism to develop verification and compliance procedures.

No one expects this agreement to be a final solution; it is not even close. It is, however, a step in the right direction. As a powerful influence in the region, the United States must support the constructive efforts of the Contadora Group. The Kissinger Commission clearly recommended that "the United States should actively encourage the Contadora progress".

House Concurrent Resolution 261 expresses the sense of the Congress that the United States should support the recently agreed to principles and the Contadora process in general. I strongly support this diplomatic effort designed to achieve "a peaceful and secure solution to Central American conflicts".

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to unanimously express their support for the Contadora Group initiative.●

● Mrs. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express my strong support for House Concurrent Resolution 261, which recognizes the continued and overwhelming support of the Congress for the Contadora peace process in Central America.

Today, Members of this body are given a chance to endorse the substantial negotiating efforts of four key Latin American nations—Colombia, Mexico, Panama, and Venezuela—who are referred to as the Contadora Group after the island on which their representatives first met to seek peaceful solutions for Central America.

Last September, representatives of the Contadora nations met with officials from the five Central American countries of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua and adopted a 21-point "Document of Objectives" for resolving problems and reducing tensions in the region.

In January 1984, the nine Latin American nations further agreed on a set of principles for implementation of their mutual objectives. These more specific provisions included, first, preparation of a detailed inventory of military installations, weapons and troops; second, activities to end foreign involvement, illegal arms traffic, and support for insurgents; third, creating mechanisms to permit dialog and guarantee respect for human rights; fourth, intensified aid for refugees; and fifth, cooperation with regional groups to promote economic development.

The Contadora and Central American nations are expected to meet again this month to consider the detailed findings and recommendations of three Contadora working groups which have been studying verification, supervision of compliance, and further steps toward a regional peace agreement. This next stage in the Contadora peace process offers an important opportunity to test Nicaragua's expressed support for change by mandating an end to armed aggression and government-supported insurgencies in the region.

Recently, the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America concluded that —

> A key objective for the United States should be to promote the development of an independent system of regional relations, backed by commitments of U.S. economic resources, diplomatic support, and military assistance—

And that the Contadora process deserves—> the gratitude and encouragement of all the nations in the hemisphere.

While the President himself has expressed the U.S. Government's support for the Contadora process, I believe that a clear signal of strong congressional support at this time would give the Contadora nations confidence that the United States is committed to back regional efforts toward a peaceful settlement and encourage them to continue pressing in their difficult endeavor.

I urge Members of Congress to support this legislation and continue working hard for a durable negotiated solution in Central America.●

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, we have no further requests for time on this side.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, we have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BARNES) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 261.

The question was taken.

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the concurrent resolution just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

HIGHER EDUCATION ACT OF 1965 AMENDMENTS

Mr. KOGOVSEK. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5287) to amend title III of the Higher Education Act of 1965 to permit additional funds to be used to continue awards under certain multiyear grants.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5287

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. Section 347(f) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 is amended to read as follows:

"(f)(1) For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve from the amount appropriated for part B such sums as may be necessary to fund continuation awards for multiple year grants awarded to institutions under section 331 prior to October 1, 1983.

"(2) For each fiscal year, the Secretary may reserve from the amount appropriated for part B, not more than an amount equal to the difference between the amount awarded under paragraph (1) and the amount equal to the aggregate amount institutions receiving grants under part B would contribute under section 324 to the cost of their grants in that fiscal year assuming their grant amounts are the same as those received in the prior fiscal year. The Secretary may use this amount to award grants to eligible institutions under section 333.

"(3) In reserving and awarding funds under this subsection, the Secretary shall assure in each fiscal year that the funds that would have been reserved under part B for institutions described in subsection (c) or (e) shall be reserved under section 331 or 333 for those institutions.".

SEC. 2. The amendment made in section 1 shall take effect on October 1, 1984.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Colorado (Mr. KOGOVSEK) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. KOGOVSEK).

Mr. KOGOVSEK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has been carefully worked out by Chairman SIMON and my colleagues on the other side and with the administration. My friend and colleague, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN) is a cosponsor of this legislation along with Mr. SIMON.

This bill is necessitated by the Department of Education's concern that certain institutions of higher education, previously eligible for program grants under title III, part C (challenge grants) of the Higher Education Act will be precluded from completing the activities that they began in 1982 or 1983 before the enactment of the Challenge Grant Act Amendments of 1983 (Public Law 98-95).

The new law requires that 100 percent of challenge grant funds be allocated to endowment building in fiscal year 1985. At least 21 colleges received multiyear challenge grants and made financial commitments with the expectation that the Federal multiyear commitment would be honored. These institutions' financial matching support from non-Federal resources would be in jeopardy if the Federal share is not forthcoming.

The bill authorizes the Secretary to reserve from the amount appropriated for part B of title III an amount equal to the aggregate that eligible part B institutions would match under section 324 of part B as the institutional share, assuming that their grants were the same as the previous year. This will permit the Secretary to reserve about $6.2 million in order to continue funding the 21 institutions which are currently receiving challenge grant fundings or program purposes.

The bill involves no new appropriations for title III and has the full support of the Secretary and the administration. We expect the other body to act on the bill promptly following action by this House.

Mr. Speaker, I include in the RECORD at this point Chairman SIMON's statement; a series of letters between the Secretary and the chairman; and a letter of support from the American Council on Education:

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION,
DIVISION OF GOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS,

Washington, D.C., March 20, 1984.

Hon. PAUL SIMON,

Chairman, Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education, Committee on Education and Labor, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We understand that you and Representative Thomas Coleman (MO) plan to introduce a technical amendment to the Endowment Grant Program of Title III of the Higher Education Act. We understand further that the amendment is designed to assure that a number of institutions now receiving Challenge Grants under Title III will continue to receive funding as projected through FY 85, when the Endowment Grant Program is scheduled for full implementation.

We have previously written you to express concern with the problem posed for these institutions, and to urge remedial action. This is to thank you for sponsoring the amendment, and to express the support of the higher education community.

Sincerely,

CHARLES B. SAUNDERS, Jr.,
Vice President for Governmental Relations.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR, SUBCOMMITTEE ON POSTSECONDARY EDUCATION,

Washington, D.C., January 27, 1984.

Hon. TERREL H. BELL,
Secretary, Department of Education, Washington, D.C.

DEAR TED: Thank you very much for your letter of January 23 in response to my inquiry regarding implementation of the new endowment program under Title III of the Higher Education Act.

I am pleased to note that you and your staff have consulted extensively with Title III eligible institutions regarding the forthcoming regulations implementing the Challenge Grant Act Amendments of 1983 (P.L. 98-95). However, after reviewing the Department's proposed technical amendment, my position remains unchanged regarding the continuation of program grantees under Part C. As you know, the entire purpose for enactment of the Challenge Grant Amendments was to alter the basic purpose and objective of the Challenge Grant program. Endowment grants fulfill not only the basic needs of a larger variety of postsecondary institutions, but fulfill the original purpose of the Challenge Grant program as envisioned by Dr. Patterson and the United Negro College Fund.

The fact that only 21 institutions are currently participating in the program further underscores my concern that the Federal government make every effort to assist a broader number and variety of institutions of higher education in inaugurating or strengthening existing endowments.

As I indicated in my previous letter, I am interested in doing whatever is necessary to resolve the problem as it relates to the Morehouse Medical College. I believe we have three basic alternatives:

Seek $3 million in additional funding in the fiscal year 1984 Supplemental, or in the fiscal year 1985 Appropriation bill;

Request the necessary funding ($6.3 million) in order to fund all of the 21 institutions in fiscal year 1985; or

Enact a technical change in the Title III statute which would permit you to use some of the "pour-over" funds from Part B to Part C to fund the 21 institutions, including Morehouse Medical College, in fiscal year 1985.

I met with Dean Sullivan, Dr. Patterson and Representatives of the United Negro College Fund yesterday and discussed the latter option with them. They are in agreement that this is a workable solution to the problems of Morehouse and the other affected institutions. From my perspective this preserves the basic intent and integrity of the new Challenge Grant program from the possibility that all or part of the funds would be used for other purposes. In the event that no funds are "poured-over" from Part B to Part C, no funds would be available to make program awards to the 21 institutions.

I do want to underscore my willingness to work this out, however, I am opposed to any fundamental changes in the amendments that the Congress passed and the President signed into law on September 25, 1983. I believe it is extremely important that you make clear that all of the affected 21 institutions that any commitments made beyond the current life of the Title III authorization (fiscal year 1985) are inoperative.

Cordially,

PAUL SIMON,
Chairman.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION,
THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D.C., January 23, 1984.

Hon. PAUL SIMON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education, Committee on Education and Labor, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR PAUL: Thank you very much for your letter regarding the regulations we are developing to implement our new Endowment Grant Program.

We have been working for the past few months to prepare a draft Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (NPRM) and we are committed to making awards in a timely manner. We have spent a considerable amount of time consulting not only with representatives of affected Title III institutions and key organizations such as the United Negro College Fund, but also representatives of the investment community. We want to be sure to have adequate input in the NPRM development process to ensure that our proposed regulations are reasonable and responsible.

I am troubled to learn that you are opposed to our efforts to honor the multi-year award commitments made under the Challenge Grant Program. Based on the information contained in your letter, it seems you have been misinformed as to the scope of the problem and the plight that faces the 21 affected institutions.

None of the 21 institutions affected can receive part A or B funds at this time to carry out the activities that are supported under these Challenge Grants. These institutions are receiving non-competitive preference for multi-year continuation grants on the basis of the activities that they proposed to carry out in their original application. To avoid the possibility of institutions "double-dipping," no activity approved for a grantee under part A or B could be performed by that grantee under part C. There is no mechanism to "transfer" the activities funded under part C by augmenting the existing part A or part B grants many of these institutions receive.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, we do not believe the purpose of the Endowment Grant Program would be threatened in any way by continuing to honor our multi-year grant commitments made under the Challenge Grant Program. As my staff indicated to Mr. Blakey of your committee staff, the cost of honoring our multi-year commitment in fiscal year 1985 would be approximately $6.3 million. This cost is reduced to $4.8 million in fiscal year 1986. Even after deducting these costs, we estimate that more than $15 million will be available for Endowment Grants in fiscal year 1985 and nearly $23 million will be available in fiscal year 1986. These amounts are approximately ten times greater than the amounts that would have been available under legislation you introduced which reserved only 20 percent of available part C funds for Endowment Grant purposes.

Approximately one-third of the institutions adversely affected are historically black colleges and universities. Five institutions receive no other Title III assistance. In addition, I understand that one school—the Morehouse School of Medicine—could be so seriously affected as to risk losing accreditation.

I hope you will join me in supporting a technical amendment to remedy a problem which was inadvertently created by the passage of the new Challenge Grant legislation. I have attached a staff report which explains our proposed technical amendment and its impact in more detail.

Please contact me if I might be of assistance in resolving this issue.

Sincerely,

T. H. BELL.

CHALLENGE GRANT PROGRAM

I. RATIONALE FOR THE TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

The Education Amendments of 1980 established a Challenge Grant Program among the new Institutional Aid Programs. Its purpose is to encourage support for institutional development by matching Federal funds with new monies raised by colleges and universities from new public and private sector sources. These funds permit institutions to develop significant new educational resources that have the potential to increase institutional self-sufficiency.

Because the new program requires a fundraising capability, many institutions have been slow to respond to the Challenge Grant concept. Nevertheless, in the first year of the program (FY 1982), forty seven (47) institutions requested assistance, and all but one institution received an award. Twenty-nine (29) new institutions requested assistance in FY 1983, and fourteen (14) awards were made. Thus, fifty-six (56) institutions currently participate in the program. A majority of these grants are multi-year, and provide up to five years of support. All current grants expire in FY 1985 or FY 1986. No new awards will be made in FY 1984.

Grants support significant activities, including: the ambitious development of the first new Black Medical School to be established this century in which Federal funds are matched by a special State appropriation of $3 million annually for five years; a significant group of new media communications majors closely tied to the establishment of a new minority-oriented public television station for a major southern city which also permits the grantee institution to develop programs designed specifically for a large minority population of Blacks, Hispanics and Asians; and significant new mathematics and science programs developed at the undergraduate and graduate levels designed to alleviate current personnel shortages. A sample of funded projects is attached as Appendix A to show the range of funded activities.

Although it can be argued that the successful completion of any approved Federal grant award cycle depends upon the availability of funds, there are other important considerations:

The ethical issue involved in the decision to terminate six (6) institutions which have received approval for Challenge Grant activities through FY 1985, and fifteen (15) additional institutions scheduled to complete activities in FY 1986;

The impact of the decision on the private sector and State government both of which have been encouraged to support special institutional development with the expectation that the Federal commitment of assistance was firm. All private sector or State funds have been earmarked for specific developmental undertakings.

The likelihood that many of the currently funded activities will not be continued because these institutions will face unanticipated new costs to complete activities and the possibility the matching funds will be withdrawn if their grants are terminated. Termination will negatively affect the institutions ability to achieve self-sufficiency.

Preliminary estimates suggest that we have a probable maximum continuation request in fiscal year 1985 of $6,457,870 to complete approved activities. An accurate figure cannot be arrived at because all costs must be reviewed to determine that they are allowable and reasonable. For fiscal year 1986, a probable maximum of $4,792,411 will be needed to complete commitments for that terminal year of support.

II. EFFECT OF THE PASSAGE OF THE TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

If the technical amendment is approved, twenty one (21) institutions will be able to continue developmental activities during fiscal year 1985 and fifteen (15) will complete all approved activities in fiscal year 1986. Continuation is critical because of the complexity of many activities. None of the Challenge Grant activities duplicate programs funded under the strengthening or the special needs grants. Significantly, many of the activities are closely geared to support activities approved in development grants at institutions that also participate in the Challenge Grant. An examination of the kinds of activities supported by current Challenge Grant awards found in Appendix A demonstrates the complexity of some activities and why a need exists to allow current grantees to complete their agreed-upon awards cycle.

If the technical amendment is not approved, it is obvious that the Federal investment to date will likely produce small results because of the amount of dollars needed by many small institutions to complete projects without Federal assistance.

It has been suggested that some of the activities can be "picked up" under the Strengthening or the Special Needs Programs. This is not the case. Applications may not be modified to significantly change the scope of the work by proposing new activities not included in the original submission. Moreover, even if possible, Federal support could double. There is no provision for private sector support in the Strengthening Program while under the Special Needs Program the grantees are required to contribute a maximum of 30 percent of the grant cost by the fifth year. Many institutions will be unable to replace Federal assistance with increased private sector support. It is unlikely, for instance, that the Morehouse School of Medicine can raise $3 million new dollars for both FY 1985 and FY 1986 to match the funds appropriated by the State of Georgia to permit this institution to achieve accreditation.

Funds are available to match FY 1984 commitments after Endowment funds are transferred from the $9.6 million currently authorized for Challenge Grants. Current projections suggest that the $7,680,000 remaining will be sufficient for all non-competing continuation grants. A modest ratable reduction may be necessary, but of minor consequences.

Appendix B contains the following projected figures for FY 1985 and FY 1986:

Challenge Grants and Endowment Funds distribution according to the current Endowment legislation;

Challenge Grant estimated commitments for FY 1985 and FY 1986;

What funds would be available for Endowment purposes in FY 1985 and FY 1986, if Challenge Grants are fully funded, based on estimates.

Appendix C lists the institutions affected by the termination of the Challenge Grant Program after FY 1984.

III. SUMMARY

The Department feels strongly that institutions were encouraged to raise private sector and State support for new Challenge Grant activities. That support was given with the reasonable expectation that the Federal commitment would permit the development of the kinds of activities that assist institutions in attracting new students and in providing quality education that assures a more competitive graduate for the market place. Virtually all activities ultimately benefit students. Many of them strengthen the management of institutions. Few institutions have the capability of raising new matching funds to replace the Federal funds if they are terminated.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON POSTSECONDARY EDUCATION,
Washington, D.C., January 6, 1984.

Hon. TERREL H. BELL,
Secretary, Department of Education,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR TED: I wanted to write and share several concerns regarding promulgation of regulations and implementation of the Challenge Grant Act Amendments of 1983 (Public Law 98-95). As you know, Congress passed and the President signed this law almost four months ago. I am becoming very concerned that the drafting of regulations, in order to conduct a grant competition early in 1984, is not receiving a high priority within the Office of Postsecondary Education.

Shortly after the bill became law, the Subcommittee staff met with Department officials responsible for the Title III program and for drafting the regulations. At the meeting, the type of grant program, the legislative intent surrounding certain provisions in the law, and the timetable for publishing the regulations and implementing this important program were discussed. Bud Blakey emphasized that it was my desire that awards be made to eligible, successful grantees no later than June 30, 1984. Since a point-system would be used (as in the College Housing Program) and no readers would be required, this appears feasible. However, very little consultation has been held with representatives of affected Title III institutions. That is critical to assure adequate input from the higher education community and to reduce the public comment period following publication of the Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (NPRM).

The sooner the endowment amendments are implemented, the sooner eligible institutions can receive awards and begin to build or repair their endowment. Early publication will permit schools to determine their eligibility, begin fund-raising or solicitation of matching funds and assist them in preparing their applications by gathering the desired data in advance. If awards are not made until near the end of the fiscal year, significant time and interest earning potential will be lost.

I understand that two issues regarding the legislation have been raised: Continuing eligibility of current Challenge Grant recipients beyond FY 1984; and the law's provision that a school be eligible for a Challenge Grant for two years in any one five year period.

While I am sympathetic to the plight of Morehouse Medical School—since their eligibility for program funds is restricted to Part C of the Act—I am strongly opposed to the use of Part C funds for any purpose other than endowment building after the current fiscal year. Only 21 institutions are affected and I believe most of them could receive Part B funding on a matching basis, if necessary. The whole purpose of enacting P.L. 98-95 would be threatened, since very little Part C funding would be available for endowment purposes.

Finally, I believe Dr. Patterson has written you regarding the two-year limitation in the law. That provision was supported in testimony by the Department and serves as a rationing device for limited Part C funds. I am willing, however, to review Dr. Patterson's concerns in the upcoming reauthorization of the Higher Education Act. The provision will have no impact before FY 1986.

If you have any questions or wish to discuss my concerns, please let me know.

Cordially,

PAUL SIMON,
Chairman.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity to thank the gentleman from Illinois for introducing this amendment, H.R. 5287, to the endowment grant program of title III in the Higher Education Act which allows unused funds from part B for the continuation of programmatic multiyear grants.

I believe that this technical amendment is important for two reasons. First, it is designed to insure that a number of institutions now receiving challenge grants under title III will continue to receive funding as projected through fiscal year 1985 when the endowment grant program is slated for implementation. Without the enactment of this amendment, 21 of our Nation's institutions of higher education would be adversely affected. Second, it allows the Secretary of Education the important flexibility needed in administering this program.

I feel that H.R. 5287 is truly productive in helping the cause of higher education. We must continually face the challenge of looking toward a better use of existing resources and not just more funding. This amendment is clearly an example of attempting to meet that challenge.

This amendment has secured the strong support of both the administration and the higher education community. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. KOGOVSEK. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. PERKINS).

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5287, a bill which will authorize the Education Department to carry out a commitment made by the Department to 21 institutions of higher education for their program development prior to enactment of the Challenge Grant Amendments of 1983.

The Challenge Grant Amendments of 1983 changed the purpose for which funds provided under part C of title III of the Higher Education Act could be used. Prior to 1983, part C funds could be used for program development at colleges serving large numbers of low-income and minority students.

The Challenge Grant Amendments of 1983 in essence siphoned off funds for challenge grant programs to endowment programs. As a result of this legislative change, some of the institutions receiving multiyear commitments by these challenge grants will not be able to complete existing projects.

In brief, these new endowment grants will take over the funding from the challenge grants resulting in the institutions affected facing unanticipated new costs for the completion of activities and seriously jeopardizing the ability of some of these institutions in achieving self-sufficiency as well as meeting their accreditation requirements.

Twenty-one higher education institutions in our Nation that had previously received funding commitments from the education Department's challenge grants for program development will be adversely affected.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment is much needed because it will provide for these institutions to continue their developmental activities and complete approved programs. Continuation of these programs is critical because of the complexity of many of these activities. If this amendment is not approved, many of the smaller educational institutions and the ones which serve large numbers of low-income and minority students will not be able to complete existing projects.

Further, it is clear to me that if this technical amendment is not approved, it is obvious that the Federal investment to date will likely produce negligible results because of the inability of small institutions to complete existing projects without some Federal assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this technical amendment. This Federal commitment will positively affect the institution's ability to achieve self-sufficency, and will make it possible to complete existing projects which are so vital to the growth and development of the institution.

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, the Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education has spent considerable time in the last session and in this one developing legislation to assist institutions of higher education strengthen their endowments. Last year the Congress enacted the Challenge Grant Act Amendments of 1983 (Public Law 98-95), which authorized, for the first time, the use of Federal funds for endowment building purposes.

This legislation mandated that all part C funds be used for endowment purposes and terminated the use of part C funds for program development purposes. This arrangement was agreed to by the Department and both Houses of Congress in order to facilitate this important aspect of institutional growth.

Twenty-one institutions of higher education which were receiving challenge grants under part C were given multiyear commitments by the Department and they have taken steps to raise private funds and in some cases have received public funds to implement their challenge grant programs. They have been placed in the position of having their programs interrupted and the agreements they made broken unless the Congress acts to continue their funding through fiscal year 1985.

H.R. 5287 authorizes the Secretary to pour over part B funds to part C in order to fund these 21 institutions. The Secretary has advised me that this would necessitate transferring about $6.2 million. We expect that the Secretary will provide that amount of funding to the 21 schools and no more. Part B funds, in excess of the amount needed to satisfy the fiscal year 1984 and fiscal year 1985 commitments to the 21 institutions, should not be transferred to part C. It is important that the basic integrity of the title III program be preserved and that the funds provided by the Congress be expended for the purposes for which they are appropriated.

It is extremely important that the fundamental purpose of the challenge grant program, as an endowment building mechanism, be preserved and expanded. At the same time, I do not want to cause any harm to the 21 schools who received a commitment from the Federal Government through the expiration of the current law in fiscal year 1985—that commitment should be honored.●

Mr. KOGOVSEK. Mr. Speaker, we have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KOGOVSEK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. KOGOVSEK) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5287.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MODIFICATION OF PROCEDURES UNDER THE UNIFORMED SERVICES FORMER SPOUSES' PROTECTION ACT

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5027) to amend title 10, United States Code, to modify procedures for payment of military retired pay to spouses and former spouses of members of the uniformed services in compliance with court orders.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5027

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) subsection (a)(2)(C) of section 1408 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting "in the case of a division of property," before "specifically provides for".

(2) The first sentence of paragraph (5) of such subsection is amended by striking out "disposable retired or retainer pay" the first place it appears and all that follows through "any part" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "child support or alimony or the payment of an amount of disposable retired or retainer pay as the result of the court's treatment of such pay under subsection (c) as property of the member and his spouse, the Secretary concerned shall pay (subject to the limitations of this section) from the disposable retired or retainer pay of the member to the spouse or former spouse of the member, any part".

(c)(1) Paragraph (2) of subsection (e) of such section is amended by striking out "from the disposable retired or retainer pay of a member, such pay" and inserting in lieu thereof ", the disposable retired or retainer pay of the member".

(2) Paragraph (3)(A) of such subsection is amended—

(A) by striking out "from the disposable retired or retainer pay";

SEC. 2. The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall apply with respect to court orders for which effective service (as described in section 1408(b)(1) of title 10, United States Code) is made on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WHITEHURST) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY).

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration H.R. 5027, a technical corrections bill to insure that the original intent of the Former Spouses' Protection Act is carried out.

H.R. 5027 was introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN), the gentlelady from Colorado (Mrs. SCHROEDER) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WHITEHURST). Because of other commitments, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Military Personnel and Compensation, has asked that I manage this legislation in his stead.

As my colleagues will recall, the Former Spouses' Protection Act does not make a Federal presumption of the division of military retired pay between the retiree and the former spouse but, instead, returns to the individual States the authority to treat military retired pay in accordance with State law in divorce settlements.

The act also provides a direct payment mechanism to permit the military finance centers to honor valid State court orders in all types of settlements: child support, alimony, and division of property.

Due to a problem in the wording of the Former Spouses' Protection Act, the direct payment mechanism is not working as Congress intended in many child support and alimony cases.

Currently, in order to be honored by the military finance centers for the purpose of direct payment, the court order in all types of settlements must specify that the payment be made from military retired pay. Many existing child support and alimony decrees, however, simply order the periodic payment of a certain amount of money without specifying that those payments must be made from military retired pay.

To facilitate the enforcement of valid child support and alimony awards, H.R. 5027 would eliminate the requirement that the court order specify that the payment be made from retired pay in the case of child support or alimony. However, the bill would retain that requirement in the case of divisions of property.

Without the correction included in the bill, the former spouse must continue to resort to the more cumbersome garnishment mechanism which varies from State to State. Garnishment is also costly. In many cases, the former spouse is unable to afford the lawyers' fees required to obtain payment of legally due child support and alimony obligations.

The Former Spouses' Protecton Act was designed to provide a direct payment mechanism to solve this problem. The purpose of H.R. 5027 is to insure that this original intent of the act is carried out. A provision similar to H.R. 5027 was included in last year's Department of Defense authorization bill as passed by the House but was dropped in conference due to technical disagreements with respect to the language. These minor differences have subsequently been resolved and, hopefuly, we can now close the circle with the passage of H.R. 5027.

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY) in urging my colleagues' favorable consideration of H.R. 5027, to make technical corrections to the Former Spouses' Protection Act. The amendments envisioned by this legislation are exactly that: technical. But they are also extremely important to thousands of women and children who are encountering difficulty in receiving legally due support payments from their military retiree exhusbands.

In recognition of this problem, Congress in 1975 provided authority for the attachment of Federal wages—for both current workers and retirees—in order to satisfy a court order on behalf of a former spouse for child support or alimony. In theory, the garnishment process is simple and straightforward: the defaulting spouse's employer withholds from the individual's salary the amount specified in the court order until the judgment has been satisfied. In practice, the garnishment path is often strewn with obstacles.

Garnishment procedures are as varied as the 50 States, and in several States the ability to use garnishment is extremely limited. Considerable delay is frequently involved. It may be necessary to return to court on a number of occasions in order to obtain compliance with a court order for child support or alimony. For example, once the original arrearage has been paid through garnishment procedures, if the defaulting spouse has again fallen behind in payments, the former spouse must go back into court and start the process all over.

The most serious problem with utilizing garnishment, however, is a very basic one: the cost. Many former spouses simply cannot afford the expense of good legal counsel, particularly if repeated access to the courts is required to force compliance with legally due support obligations.

In view of these problems, the Former Spouses' Protection Act established a direct payment mechanism to streamline the process and to insure timely payment. Because of a technical problem with the definition of "court order" included in the Former Spouses' Protection Act, however, direct payment is not possible in the case of many existing child support and alimony decrees.

H.R. 5027 will make the technical corrections to the act necessary to insure that the original intent of Congress is carried out, and I urge my colleagues' wholehearted support.

□ 1430

Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITEHURST. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HILLIS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the legislation. Furthermore, I want to commend the gentleman, for I know the great work and effort he has gone to both in this matter and legislation that was passed last year. It would have not come to the floor except for the hearings that were held, I believe in the gentleman's district at his insistence and initiation; looking into the problem, finding out the need and getting legislation drafted, prepared to meet it.

Now this legislation is necessary, I believe, to perfect the action previously taken. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. WHITEHURST. That is correct. I thank my colleague for his comments.

Mr. HILLIS. I want to commend the gentleman for what he has done in this legislation. We would not be here discussing it today if it were not for his efforts.

Mr. WHITEHURST. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to yield time to the gentlewoman from Colorado (Mrs. SCHROEDER) who certainly pushed this legislation, along with the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WHITEHURST).

Because of their efforts we were able to have this legislation, a technical amendment in effect.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Colorado (Mrs. SCHROEDER).

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the committee and everybody for working so hard on this; especially the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WHITEHURST) who has been wonderful in trying to help with this and so many other problems we found in the military regarding the treatment of family.

These technical amendments are terribly important because people forget in family law we are dealing with the laws of all the different States and territories and they are very, very, very different.

So by passing this bill we will expedite the problems that have come about from the prior progress we made in this area requiring pension sharing when the court orders it.

For example, just to give you some of the problems we were faced with, in Maryland when a spouse was owed money, they had to go to court every month to renew the garnishment order. That is real "Mickey Mouse". It ties up the courts. It is a real problem. It is not what we intended. When this passes there will be direct payment, period.

In New York you have the garnishment orders being executed by the local sheriffs who collects the money, then he only makes an accounting of the money and turns over the proceeds within the next 6 months. That is real "Mickey Mouse," also. It delays getting much needed money to the family.

I could go on and on and on in State after State with some of the problems that we had. The law is better than it was before because at least a claim can be made on the pension but this will make the law much better because we will have a uniform law. Payments will be automatic if the courts and lawyers do the order properly.

I want to thank everybody for helping clear this up. Passage will certainly bring dignity to the women who worked so hard to bring dignity to this country through the role they served in by helping support their family and support our military. This law is long overdue.

● Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WHITEHURST) for his outstanding work on this legislation. Without his tireless efforts, both the original Former Spouses' Protection Act and the technical corrections incorporated in H.R. 5027 would not come to pass. The gentleman has been a strong advocate of protecting the rights of former spouses of military retirees.

H.R. 5027 makes technical corrections to insure that the original intent of the Former Spouses' Protection Act is carried out. In 1982, Congress passed the Former Spouses' Protection Act following the June 26, 1981, U.S. Supreme Court McCarty against McCarty decision. In the McCarty decision, the Supreme Court invalidated the right of the State courts to treat military retired pay as property in divorce settlements. In overturning the McCarty decision, the Former Spouses' Protection Act makes no Federal presumption of any automatic divisibility of military retired pay between the retiree and a former spouse but instead returns to the individual States the right to treat military retired pay in accordance with State law in divorce settlements. The act also established a direct payment mechanism to insure that valid State court orders for child support, alimony, and division of property are honored by the military finance centers.

These technical corrections will make certain that the direct payment mechanism is available for existing child support and alimony decrees. Without these technical corrections, the former spouses would have to go back into court to have the original support order modified or would have to use the more costly and cumbersome garnishment process. ●

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5027.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

SCHOOL LUNCH AND CHILD NUTRITION AMENDMENTS OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 478 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 7.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 7) to make permanent certain of the authorizations of appropriations under the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1963, with Mr. LEVITAS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Wednesday, April 11, 1984, the bill was open to amendment at any point.

Pending at that time was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTLETT) and a substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING).

For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTLETT) rise?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the Chair.

The Chairman, as I understand, if I were to request unanimous consent to withdraw my pending amendment, then there would be another amendment offered in short order that would move back the deadline for the study that would permit a formula funding study by the Department of Agriculture, to give the Congress the opportunity to react legislatively, including the possibility of a markup if desired, after a colloquy.

Is that the intention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, that is my intention.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, that is the agreement.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania then does have an amendment that would accomplish that?

Mr. GOODLING. I have an amendment to accomplish that.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise to have a colloquy with the chairman of the full committee.

Mr. Chairman, I merely want to make sure that it is on the record that we have a gentleman's agreement, among all interested parties, to reopen next spring the State Administrative Expense Authority issues, including the question of a State matching requirement and, at that time, to react legislatively, that is, move a bill out of full committee and to the floor as may be necessary based on the findings and recommendations including the merits of a State matching requirement that will be forthcoming from a more comprehensive State Administrative Expense Authority study.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PERKINS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to assure the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING) that the committee will act expeditiously in the event the study offers suggestions and recommendations that necessitate quick action.

We will not be dilatory or anything along that line, we will go along.

Mr. GOODLING. I thank the chairman for his assurances.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GOODLING

Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOODLING: Page 25, after line 19, strike out the section relating to State Administrative Expenses (inserted by the Bartlett amendment) and insert in lieu thereof the following:
